Congressional Record.

PROCEEDINGS AND DEBATES OF THE SIXTY-FOURTH CONGRESS, SECOND SESSION.

SENATE.

MONDAY, December 4, 1916.

The first Monday of December being the day prescribed by the Constitution of the United States for the annual meeting of Congress, the second session of the Sixty-fourth Congress commenced this day.

The Senate assembled in its Chamber at the Capitol.

The Vice President (THOMAS R. MARSHALL, of Indiana) called the Senate to order at 12 o'clock noon.

PRAYER.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, the representatives of the people have gathered together to give direction to the course of the civil affairs of this great Nation. We recognize Thy good hand that has led us on from the beginning until this day. We acknowledge before Thee first of all our infinite debt of gratitude and would make mention of Thy name, the name of the God of our fathers, which is above every name to us and to the Nation.

We desire to renew our covenant with Thee to enter into heartiest accord with Thy will and Thy purpose. We praise Thee that Thou dost continue us in brotherly spirit and unity of purpose; that nothing has occurred in this Nation since we last met which has separated brother from brother or our recognition of our common interests or the pursuit of our high ideals. We pray that Thou wilt continue to us the blessings of the past; that Thou wilt give to us a common purpose, the strength of conviction and loyalty to the great ideals of our national life.

We name before Thee in loving memory and in high appreciation one who has departed from us since we last met. We praise Thy name for the high example that he has set, for the service that he has rendered to the country, for the memory that abides to be cherished on through the days of our national life.

We pray Thee to equip these men whom Thou dost this day call into Thy service of leadership, that they may have wisdom and grace to follow the example of those who have lived high lives and have served Thee humbly and faithfully, so that they may have a part in the future glory of our great Nation.

Forgive our national sins. Accept our praises for Thy loving-kindness, and bless all the people. For Christ's sake. Amen.

SENATORS PRESENT.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Senators, the hour having arrived at which, in accordance with the mandate of the Constitution of the United States and the custom heretofore observed, it becomes the duty of the Congress of the United States to assemble, the Secretary will call the roll to determine whether a constitutional number of Senators is present.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I wish to announce that the Senator from California [Mr. PHELAN] has been unavoidably detained and will be here Wednesday.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BROUSSARD], who is detained from the Senate on account of illness.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-two Senators have answered to the roll call.

NOTIFICATION TO THE HOUSE.

Mr. KERN submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 278), which was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary inform the House of Representatives that a quorum of the Senate is assembled and that the Senate is ready to proceed to business.

NOTIFICATION TO THE PRESIDENT.

Mr. KERN submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 279), which was read and considered by unanimous consent:

Resolved, That a committee consisting of two Senators be appointed to join such committee as may be appointed by the House of Representatives to wait upon the President of the United States and inform him that a quorum of each House is assembled and that Congress is ready to receive any communication he may be pleased to make.

The VICE PRESIDENT appointed as the committee Mr. KERN and Mr. GALLINGER.

HOUR OF DAILY MEETING.

Mr. KERN submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 280), which was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the hour of daily meeting of the Senate be 12 o'clock meridian until otherwise ordered.

RECESS.

Mr. KERN. I move that the Senate take a recess until 3 o'clock this afternoon.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 12 o'clock and 11 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until 3 o'clock p. m., when it reassembled.

THE JOURNAL.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is informed that the Journal of the proceedings of the Senate of September 7 last has never been approved. Is there any objection to the formal approval of the Journal of that day? The Chair hears none, and it stands approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

Mr. South, the Chief Clerk of the House of Representatives, appeared and delivered the following message:

Mr. President, I am directed by the House of Representatives to inform the Senate that a quorum of the House of Representatives has assembled and that the House is ready for business.

Also, that a committee of three were appointed by the Speaker on the part of the House of Representatives to join with the committee on the part of the Senate to wait on the President of the United States and to notify him that a quorum of the two Houses has assembled and that Congress is ready to receive any communication that he may be pleased to make, and that Mr. KITCHIN, Mr. FITZGERALD, and Mr. MANN were appointed as a committee on the part of the House.

Further, that the House has agreed to a concurrent resolution authorizing the two Houses of Congress to assemble in the Hall of the House of Representatives on Tuesday, the 5th day of December, 1916, at 1 o'clock in the afternoon, for the purpose of receiving such communications as the President of the United States shall be pleased to make them, in which it requests the concurrence of the Senate.

Also, that the House has agreed to a concurrent resolution authorizing such bills and joint resolutions as passed both Houses at the last session of the Congress, and which for want of time were either not presented to the two Houses for the signature of their presiding officers, or, having been thus presented and signed, were not presented to the President for approval, to be now enrolled as of this session of the Congress, etc., in which it requests the concurrence of the Senate.

Further, that the House communicates to the Senate the intelligence of the death of the Hon. LUIS MUÑOZ RIVERA, late Resident Commissioner of Porto Rico, and transmits resolutions of the House thereon.

Also, that the House has passed resolutions relative to the life and public services of Hon. JAMES P. CLARKE, late a Senator from the State of Arkansas.

NOTIFICATION TO THE PRESIDENT.

Mr. KERN and Mr. GALLINGER appeared; and

Mr. KERN said: Mr. President, your committee appointed to act with a like committee upon the part of the House of Representatives to notify the President of the United States that both Houses of Congress were organized and ready to do business, and to ascertain his desires with reference to communicating with Congress, beg leave to report that we have performed that duty. We have been informed by the President that he will be pleased to address both Houses of Congress in joint convention on to-morrow, the 5th instant, at 1 o'clock postmeridian.

JOINT MEETING OF THE TWO HOUSES.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution (No. 62) of the House of Representatives, which was read:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the two Houses of Congress assemble in the Hall of the House of Representatives on Tuesday, the 5th day of December, 1916, at 1 o'clock in the afternoon, for the purpose of receiving such communications as the President of the United States shall be pleased to make them.

Mr. KERN. Mr. President, I ask for the adoption of the concurrent resolution.

The concurrent resolution was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS SIGNED.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution (No. 61) of the House of Representatives, which was read and referred to the Committee on Rules:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That such bills and joint resolutions as passed both Houses at the last session of the Congress, and which for want of time were either not presented to the two Houses for the signatures of their presiding officers, or, having been thus presented and signed, were not presented to the President for approval, be now enrolled as of this session of the Congress, reported for the signatures of the presiding officers of the two Houses, and presented to the President for his approval.

DEATH OF SENATOR JAMES P. CLARKE.

Mr. ROBINSON submitted the following resolutions (S. Res. 281), which were read:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow of the death of the Hon. JAMES P. CLARKE, late a Senator from the State of Arkansas and President pro tempore of the Senate.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolutions submitted by the Senator from Arkansas.

The resolutions were unanimously agreed to.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, as a further mark of respect to the memory of my late colleague, I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was unanimously agreed to; and (at 3 o'clock and 8 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, December 5, 1916, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, December 4, 1916.

This being the day designated by the Constitution for the annual meeting of Congress, the Members of the House of Representatives assembled in their Hall for the second session of the Sixty-fourth Congress, and at 12 o'clock m. were called to order by the Speaker.

PRAYER.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

We invoke Thy blessing, Almighty God our Heavenly Father, upon the closing session of the Sixty-fourth Congress, now convened to conclude its work; that each Representative may be profoundly impressed with the responsibility resting upon him, and may put his whole soul with patriotic fervor into his task.

Be graciously near to the Speaker of this House, that he may preside over its deliberations with skill, justice, and equity to all, and lead on to the desired legislative enactments, that they may be clean-cut, far-reaching, and redound to the good of the people here represented.

May the light of Heaven guide our President and his advisers, that he may meet and solve with firmness, justice, and equal rights to all concerned the intricate problems which now confront us and which may arise under the new conditions brought about by the nations engaged in strife, that peace and prosperity may continue throughout our borders.

Let wisdom guide our judiciary, that their judgments may be true and righteous altogether, that the coordinate branches of our Government may work together in harmony, in accordance with the laws which Thou hast ordained, to the glory and honor of Thy Holy Name, under the spiritual leadership of the world's great Exemplar, for Thine is the kingdom and the power and the glory forever. Amen.

SWEARING IN OF MEMBERS.

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Speaker, Hon. T. W. HARRISON, Member elect from the seventh congressional district of Virginia, is present, and would like to be sworn in.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to the House that the credentials of Mr. HARRISON, the Member elect to succeed Judge Hay, are on the Speaker's desk, and that they are regular in form. If anybody wants to see them, he can come up here and see them.

Mr. HARRISON appeared at the bar of the House and took the oath of office prescribed by law.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, there are two newly elected Members of the House who are here without their credentials, one being Mr. HARRY C. WOODYARD, of West Virginia, elected to succeed Mr. Moss, who died, and the other Mr. STANLEY BENEDICT, of the tenth California district, elected to succeed Mr. Stephens, who resigned. I understand there is no contest or question in either case, and I ask unanimous consent that the two gentlemen be sworn in as Members, notwithstanding their credentials have not arrived.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] asks unanimous consent that Mr. WOODYARD, of West Virginia, who succeeds Mr. Moss, and Mr. BENEDICT, of California, who succeeds Mr. Stephens, and whose credentials have not arrived, but as to whom the gentleman states that there is no contest, be sworn in without their credentials. Is there objection?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, is there any question about the election of these gentlemen?

Mr. MANN. There is no question.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection, and the gentlemen will come forward and be sworn in.

Messrs. WOODYARD and BENEDICT presented themselves at the bar of the House and took the oath of office prescribed by law.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed the following resolutions:

Resolved, That the Secretary inform the House of Representatives that a quorum of the Senate is assembled and that the Senate is ready to proceed to business.

Also:

Resolved, That a committee consisting of two Senators be appointed to join such committee as may be appointed by the House of Representatives to wait upon the President of the United States and inform him that a quorum of each House is assembled and that Congress is ready to receive any communication he may be pleased to make.

And that in compliance with the foregoing resolution the Vice President had appointed as said committee Mr. KERN and Mr. GALLINGER.

Also:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow of the death of the Hon JAMES P. CLARKE, late a Senator from the State of Arkansas and President pro tempore of the Senate.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate a copy of these resolutions to the House of Representatives.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased the Senate do now adjourn.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bill of the following title:

H. R. 9856. An act granting to the St. Louis, Iron Mountain & Southern Railway Co., and to the Anheuser-Busch Brewing Association, and to the Manufacturers' Railway Co. permission to transfer certain rights of easement for railway purposes heretofore granted by the United States to the St. Louis & Iron Mountain Railroad Co. and to the Anheuser-Busch Brewing Association, respectively.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 4667. An act for the relief of James Duffy;

S. 6670. An act authorizing the State of Montana to select other lands in lieu of lands in section 16, township 2 north, range 30 east, within the limits of the Huntley irrigation project and the ceded portion of Crow Indian Reservation in said State;

S. 6850. An act authorizing the transfer of certain retired Army officers to the active list; and

S. 5716. An act to establish the Mount McKinley National Park, in the Territory of Alaska.

COMMITTEE TO NOTIFY THE PRESIDENT.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina offers a resolution, which the Clerk will report.

House resolution 372.

Resolved, That a committee of three members be appointed on the part of the House to join the committee appointed by the Senate to wait upon the President and inform him that a quorum of the two Houses has assembled and that Congress is ready to receive any communication that he may be pleased to make.

The resolution was agreed to, and the Speaker appointed as the committee on the part of the House Messrs. KITCHIN, FITZGERALD, and MANN.

NOTIFICATION OF THE SENATE.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York offers the following resolution, which the Clerk will report.

House resolution 373.

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House inform the Senate that a quorum of the House of Representatives has appeared and that the House is ready to proceed to business.

The resolution was agreed to.

HOUR OF DAILY MEETING.

Mr. HENRY. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas offers a resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 374.

Resolved, That until otherwise ordered the hour of daily meeting of the House of Representatives shall be 12 o'clock meridian.

The resolution was agreed to.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leaves of absence were granted as follows:

To Mr. LEE, for 3 days, on account of illness.

To Mr. HENSLEY, indefinitely, on account of sickness in his family.

To Mr. TAYLOR of Arkansas, for 10 days, on account of important business.

To Mr. BEAKES, indefinitely, on account of illness.

To Mr. GRIFFIN, for 10 days, on account of illness.

To Mr. LAFEAN, for 10 days, on account of illness.

SIGNING AND APPROVAL OF BILLS PASSED AT THE LAST CONGRESS.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I move the adoption of the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

House concurrent resolution 61.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That such bills and joint resolutions as passed both Houses at the last session of the Congress and which for want of time were either not presented to the two Houses for the signatures of their presiding officers, or, having been thus presented and signed, were not presented to the President for approval, be now enrolled as of this session of the Congress, reported for the signatures of the presiding officers of the two Houses, and presented to the President for his approval.

The resolution was agreed to.

RECESS.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the House stand in recess until 3 o'clock this afternoon.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that the House stand in recess until 3 o'clock this afternoon. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Accordingly (at 12 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.) the House took a recess until 3 o'clock p. m.

AFTER RECESS.

The recess having expired, the House was called to order by the Speaker.

COMMITTEE TO NOTIFY THE PRESIDENT.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, the committee appointed by the Senate and House of Representatives to wait upon the President of the United States and inform him that the two Houses had assembled and were ready to receive any communication he should be pleased to make to them beg leave to report that they have discharged that duty, and that the President says he will be pleased to deliver his message in person to-morrow afternoon at 1 o'clock in a joint session of the two Houses. I ask for the adoption of the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

House concurrent resolution 62.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the two Houses of Congress assemble in the Hall of the House of Representatives on Tuesday, the 5th day of December, 1916, at 1 o'clock in the afternoon, for the purpose of receiving such communication as the President of the United States shall be pleased to make to them.

The resolution was agreed to.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, the following leaves of absence were granted:

To Mr. BURKE, for 7 legislative days, commencing December 4, on account of important business.

To Mr. ROGERS, for 3 days, on account of illness.

STOCK-RAISING HOMESTEADS.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 407) to provide for stock-raising homesteads, and for other purposes, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference. The bill passed both the House and the Senate at the last session.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 407, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I think I know what the bills is; but will the gentleman state what it is and what the Senate amendments relate to?

Mr. FERRIS. It is the 640-acre grazing homestead bill. There are eight Senate amendments in all, some of no consequence, but one of them is far-reaching in its scope having to do with the preceding prior entry.

Mr. MANN. I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. FERRIS, Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado, and Mr. LENROOT.

DEATH OF RESIDENT COMMISSIONER RIVERA.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, it is my painful duty to announce the death of the Hon. LUIS MUÑOZ RIVERA, who died in Porto Rico on the evening of Wednesday, November 15 last. Mr.

RIVERA's career was a very distinguished one. For the last six years he represented with marked ability the Island of Porto Rico as Resident Commissioner to the United States, and for the past 30 years he has been the undisputed leader of the Porto Rican people. I shall ask, Mr. Speaker, at some future time that a day be set apart when Members of this House may be afforded an opportunity to pay suitable tributes to the worth and character of this distinguished Porto Rican. In the meantime I send to the Clerk's desk a resolution, for which I ask present consideration.

House resolution 375.

Resolved, That the House has heard with profound sorrow of the death of Hon. LUIS MUÑOZ RIVERA, late Resident Commissioner from Porto Rico.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

The resolutions were agreed to.

THE LATE SENATOR JAMES P. CLARKE.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, it is my painful duty to announce the death of the late senior Senator from the State of Arkansas, Mr. JAMES P. CLARKE, which occurred at his home in the city of Little Rock, Ark., since the Congress last met. I shall at some future time ask the House to set aside a day upon which we may pay tribute to his memory. At this time I offer the following resolution, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 376.

Resolved, That the House has heard with profound sorrow of the death of Hon. JAMES P. CLARKE, late a Senator of the United States from the State of Arkansas.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the remaining resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect to the deceased the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

Accordingly, in accordance with the resolution (at 3 o'clock and 7 minutes p. m.), the House adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, December 5, 1916, at 12 o'clock noon.

SENATE.

TUESDAY, December 5, 1916.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, day by day in blessed fellowship of service we come together in Thy name and for Thy glory. Forbid that our view of our daily task should end with consideration of the need of our earthly life. Justice and judgment have no measure of authority if they spring alone from earthly consideration. They are the habitation of Thy throne. We pray that in the conference held this day between coordinate branches of the Government there may be the spirit of wisdom and understanding, of counsel and might, that all things pertaining to our national welfare may have Thy sanction and reflect the purpose of the Divine mind. For Christ's sake. Amen.

LEBARON B. COLT, a Senator from the State of Rhode Island; MILES POINDEXTER, a Senator from the State of Washington; and JAMES W. WADSWORTH, Jr., a Senator from the State of New York, appeared in their seats to-day.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

REPORTS OF SECRETARY OF THE SENATE.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Senate, transmitting, pursuant to law, a statement of receipts and expenditures of the Senate for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1916 (S. Doc. No. 556), which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Senate, transmitting, pursuant to law, an account of all property, including stationery, belonging to the United States in his possession on the 4th day of December, 1916 (S. Doc. No. 557), which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

REPORT OF COMMISSIONERS OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the annual report of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1916, which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House disagrees to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 407) to provide for stock-raising homesteads, and for other purposes, asks a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. FERRIS, Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado, and Mr. LENROOT managers at the conference on the part of the House.

SENATORS FROM ARKANSAS, INDIANA, AND MAINE.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I present the credentials of WILLIAM F. KIRBY, elected a Senator of the United States from the State of Arkansas to succeed the late JAMES P. CLARKE, deceased. I ask that the credentials may be read.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I move that the credentials just received, together with all other credentials which may be presented, be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, the credentials have not been read as yet. I do not think that a motion can be entertained to refer them.

Mr. REED. I had the floor.

Mr. GALLINGER. I make the point of order that the credentials have not been presented. The Senator from Missouri will then be recognized to make his motion.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The credentials will be read, and the Senator from Missouri will then be recognized.

Mr. REED. All right; I have no objection to that course.

The credentials were read, as follows:

EXECUTIVE CHAMBER,
STATE OF ARKANSAS,
LITTLE ROCK.

To the PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES:

This is to certify that at a special election regularly called for the purpose and held on the 7th day of November, 1916, WILLIAM F. KIRBY was duly chosen by the qualified electors of the State of Arkansas a Senator from said State to represent said State in the Senate of the United States for the unexpired term of six years ending on the 3d day of March, 1921.

Witness: His excellency our governor, George W. Hays, and our seal hereto affixed at Little Rock, Ark., this 18th day of November, in the year of our Lord 1916.

By the governor:

GEO. W. HAYS,
Governor.

[SEAL.]

EARLE W. HODGES,
Secretary of State.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I move that the credentials just presented, together with the credentials of all others elected to fill vacancies, be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. GALLINGER. I make the point of order that that motion is not in order until the other credentials have been read, if there are other credentials.

Mr. REED. Why not in order?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will be compelled to sustain the point of order as to all that portion of the motion save as to these credentials. The Chair has no knowledge that there will be any others.

Mr. REED. I am not going to cavil with the Chair, but I know of no parliamentary rule which will cut the Senate off from its right to determine now what course shall be taken in any particular paper which may be presented. It is not worth discussing. I modify my motion and move that the credentials just read be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, and I shall make a similar motion in reference to all credentials presented.

Mr. GALLINGER. The motion is undoubtedly in order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Missouri to refer the credentials which have been read to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President I have been looking up the precedents on the presentation of credentials showing the election of Senators from sovereign States and the action of the Senate on their presentation and I wish to call the attention of the Senate to what took place on March 5, 1903.

There was an extra session of Congress called by President Roosevelt. When the Senate met, after the reading of the proclamation of President Roosevelt convening Congress in extraordinary session, the President pro tempore at that time made this statement:

The Secretary will call the names of the newly elected Senators.

That was the first business that was in order. Then Mr. Hoar said:

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent before the names of the newly elected Senators are called, to make a statement in behalf of the chairman of Committee on Privileges and Elections, which it is important to the public to understand. It will take but a moment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that he may make a statement in behalf of the chairman of the Committee on Privileges and Elections. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. CULLOM. I ask the chairman to allow me to present the credentials of Mr. HOPKINS, the Senator elect from the State of Illinois.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to make a statement before that is done.

Mr. CULLOM. The credentials of all the other Senators elect have been presented, and I should like to present the credentials at this time. It will take but a moment.

Mr. HOAR. I prefer to proceed with my statement.

Mr. CULLOM. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts will proceed.

Mr. HOAR. The chairman of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, the Senator from Michigan [Mr. Burrows], is obliged to be absent. He desired me to state in his behalf that he understands the orderly and constitutional method of procedure in regard to administering the oath to newly elected Senators to be that when any gentleman brings with him or presents a credential consisting of the certificate of his due election from the executive of his State he is entitled to be sworn in, and that all questions relating to his qualifications should be postponed and acted upon by the Senate afterwards.

If there were any other procedure the result would be that a third of the Senate might be kept out of their seats for an indefinite time on the presenting of objection without responsibility, and never established before the Senate by any judicial inquiry. The result of that might be that a change in the political power of this Government which the people desired to accomplish would be indefinitely postponed.

I make this statement at the request of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. Burrows].

Mr. President, at that time Mr. Hoar took the position that upon the presentation of the credentials of any Senator from a sovereign State it was the duty of the Senate to swear him in and any question as to his right to the seat should be settled afterwards by the Senate. There was no objection to that statement. That was the procedure followed at that time.

I ask the Chair at this time to consider that statement in connection with the motion made by the Senator from Missouri, and upon the ground stated by Senator Hoar I make the point of order, Mr. President, against the motion made by the Senator from Missouri.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Rule VI of the Senate provides that—

> The presentation of the credentials of Senators elect and other questions of privilege shall always be in order, except during the reading and correction of the Journal, while a question of order or a motion to adjourn is pending, or while the Senate is dividing; and all questions and motions arising or made upon the presentation of such credentials shall be proceeded with until disposed of.

That manifestly gives a perfect right to make a motion to refer the credentials to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, and the Chair overrules the point of order. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let us have the yeas and nays on the motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. REED (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] to the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BROUSSARD] and vote "yea."

Mr. WALSH (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. LIPPITT] and have been unable to get a transfer. Were I at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BROUSSARD] on account of illness.

Mr. BECKHAM (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT]. As he has not voted, I withdraw my vote.

Mr. CHILTON. Has the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL] voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. CHILTON. I have a pair with that Senator which I transfer to the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL], and I vote "yea."

Mr. McLEAN (after having voted in the negative). Has the senior Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS] voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. McLEAN. I have a general pair with that Senator. I transfer my pair to the senior Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] and will let my vote stand.

Mr. OWEN (after having voted in the affirmative). I transfer my pair with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CATRON] to the Senator from California [Mr. PHELAN] and allow my vote to stand.

The result was announced—yeas 32, nays 44, as follows:

YEAS—32.

Ashurst	Hollis	Lewis	Sheppard
Bryan	Hughes	Martine, N. J.	Shields

So Mr. REED's motion was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The credentials will be placed on file.

Mr. KERN. I present the credentials of Hon. JAMES E. WATSON, elected by the State of Indiana to fill the vacancy occasioned by the death of the late Senator SHIVELY, in the term ending March 3, 1921.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The credentials will be read by the Secretary.

The credentials were read and ordered to be filed.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. I present the credentials of Hon. BERT M. FERNALD, as a Senator from the State of Maine for the unexpired term of the late Senator EDWIN C. BURLEIGH, ending March 3, 1919. I ask that the credentials may be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the credentials.

The credentials were read and ordered to be filed.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. Mr. President, Senator elect Hon. BERT M. FERNALD is present in the Chamber and ready to take the oath of office.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The newly elected Senators will be presented at the Secretary's desk and take the oath prescribed by law.

Mr. KIRBY, Mr. WATSON, and Mr. FERNALD, escorted respectively by Mr. ROBINSON, Mr. KERN, and Mr. JOHNSON of Maine, advanced to the Vice President's desk, and the oath prescribed by law having been administered to them, they took their seats in the Senate.

EMBARGO ON FOOD PRODUCTS.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, I introduce a joint resolution, and, with the permission of the Senate, I desire to read it. The joint resolution is as follows:

Whereas the continued rise in the cost of staple food products in this country has reached a figure now almost prohibitive to the masses of the American people; and

Whereas it is the judgment of the Congress of the United States that it would be in the interest and well-being of the people of America that an embargo be placed on the shipment out of the United States of staple food products until such time as normal prices shall prevail in this country; and

Whereas that unless relief of this character is secured at once, intense suffering and privation will prevail through our land: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, requested to urge upon Congress through a message to act, without delay, for the above-named purposes.

I will say that on principle I am opposed to an embargo, but I feel that a crisis has been reached, and that it is necessary to the well-being of this country that some steps for the relief of our people should be taken. I ask that the joint resolution be given proper reference.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 179) placing an embargo on food products was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

AMENDMENT TO SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WILLIAMS submitted an amendment extending the appropriation of $5,000 made in the sundry civil act approved August 1, 1914, for unveiling and dedicating the memorial to Gen. Ulysses S. Grant so as to be available for that purpose for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

CORRUPT PRACTICES.

Mr. PENROSE. I submit two amendments to the so-called Owen corrupt-practices bill (H. R. 15842), which I ask to have printed and lie on the table.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be so ordered.

Mr. OWEN. What was the request?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Pennsylvania has offered two amendments to the corrupt-practices bill, which he asked to have printed and lie on the table.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS—THOMAS J. LESTER.

On motion of Mr. GORE it was Ordered, That the papers accompanying the bill (S. 10840) granting a pension to Thomas J. Lester, Sixty-first Congress, be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, no adverse report having been made thereon.

SARAH FRANCES MEAKIN.

Mr. SMOOT submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 282), which was read and referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay from the miscellaneous items of the contingent fund of the Senate to Sarah Frances Meakin, widow of John P. Meakin, late an employee of the United States Senate, a sum equal to six months' salary at the rate he was receiving by law at the time of his death, said sum to be considered as including funeral expenses and all other allowances.

ADDITIONAL SENATE PAGE.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 283), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That a page boy be appointed for service in the office of the Sergeant at Arms, at the rate of $2.50 per day, to be selected by the Sergeant at Arms and paid from the miscellaneous items of the contingent fund of the Senate during the present session of Congress.

FEDERAL FARM-LOAN ACT.

Mr. FLETCHER. I submit a resolution and ask for its present consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read.

The resolution (S. Res. 284) was read, as follows:

Resolved, That there be printed 13,500 additional copies of Senate Document No. 500, Sixty-fourth Congress, first session, entitled "The Federal Farm Loan Act," for the use of the Senate document room.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, it is rather an important matter, asking for a reprint of 13,500 copies of the farm-loan act, being Senate Document No. 500. The Farm Loan Board have urged that they need these copies, and need them at once. An estimate of cost is attached to the resolution. It is $500, which is the limit of the Senate allowance for that purpose.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator if the Farm Loan Board have not already printed some copies through the appropriation made to them for the printing of documents?

Mr. FLETCHER. I think they are printing their own circulars, and possibly copies of the act just as it passed; but this is Senate Document 500, which is indexed and annotated, and is in great demand, and they prefer to use that print when they can. There is great demand for that particular document, because it is indexed and annotated.

Mr. SMOOT. I will ask the Senator what will be the cost?

Mr. FLETCHER. The cost will be $500. That gives 13,500 copies.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

STOCK-RAISING HOMESTEADS.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 407) to provide for stock-raising homesteads, and for other purposes, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments and agree to the conference asked for by the House, the conferees on the part of the Senate to be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. MYERS, Mr. THOMAS, and Mr. SMOOT conferees on the part of the Senate.

COMMITTEE SERVICE.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President, I ask to be excused from further service upon the Committee on Commerce.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. FLETCHER. I ask to be excused from further service as chairman of the Committee on Printing.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the request of the Senator from Florida is granted.

On motion of Mr. KERN, it was Ordered, That the Hon. DUNCAN U. FLETCHER, senior Senator from Florida, be, and is hereby, appointed chairman of the Committee on Commerce to fill the vacancy occasioned by the death of the late Senator CLARKE of Arkansas.

CORRUPT PRACTICES.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I move that the corrupt-practices bill be laid before the Senate as the unfinished business.

Mr. SMOOT. It is the unfinished business now.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is the unfinished business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The motion to lay it before the Senate is all right.

Mr. OWEN. I think it occupies the status of unfinished business because it was the unfinished business at the close of the last session.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is the unfinished business.

Mr. OWEN. Then I only move to lay it before the Senate.

Mr. GALLINGER. It will automatically come up at 2 o'clock.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It automatically would come up at 2 o'clock.

Mr. OWEN. Very well. I shall not make any further point about it at this time. I withdraw the motion.

THE PRESIDENT'S ADDRESS (H. DOC. 1384).

The VICE PRESIDENT. Senators, the hour has arrived at which, in accordance with the concurrent resolution of the two Houses of Congress, the Senate is to proceed to the Hall of the House of Representatives to listen to the address of the President of the United States. The Sergeant at Arms will carry out the orders of the Senate.

Thereupon (at 12 o'clock and 50 minutes p. m.) the Senate, headed by the Sergeant at Arms and preceded by the Vice President and the Secretary, proceeded to the Hall of the House of Representatives.

The Senate returned to its Chamber at 1 o'clock and 25 minutes p. m.

The address of the President of the United States, this day delivered to both Houses of Congress, is as follows:

GENTLEMEN OF THE CONGRESS: In fulfilling at this time the duty laid upon me by the Constitution of communicating to you from time to time information of the state of the Union and recommending to your consideration such legislative measures as may be judged necessary and expedient, I shall continue the practice, which I hope has been acceptable to you, of leaving to the reports of the several heads of the executive departments the elaboration of the detailed needs of the public service and confine myself to those matters of more general public policy with which it seems necessary and feasible to deal at the present session of the Congress.

I realize the limitations of time under which you will necessarily act at this session and shall make my suggestions as few as possible; but there were some things left undone at the last session which there will now be time to complete, and which it seems necessary in the interest of the public to do at once.

In the first place, it seems to me imperatively necessary that the earliest possible consideration and action should be accorded the remaining measures of the programme of settlement and regulation which I had occasion to recommend to you at the close of your last session in view of the public dangers disclosed by the unaccommodated difficulties which then existed, and which still unhappily continue to exist, between the railroads of the country and their locomotive engineers, conductors, and trainmen.

I then recommended:

First, immediate provision for the enlargement and administrative reorganization of the Interstate Commerce Commission along the lines embodied in the bill recently passed by the House of Representatives and now awaiting action by the Senate; in order that the Commission may be enabled to deal with the many great and various duties now devolving upon it with a promptness and thoroughness which are, with its present constitution and means of action, practically impossible.

Second, the establishment of an eight-hour day as the legal basis alike of work and of wages in the employment of all railway employees who are actually engaged in the work of operating trains in interstate transportation.

Third, the authorization of the appointment by the President of a small body of men to observe the actual results in experience of the adoption of the eight-hour day in railway transportation alike for the men and for the railroads.

Fourth, explicit approval by the Congress of the consideration by the Interstate Commerce Commission of an increase of freight rates to meet such additional expenditures by the railroads as may have been rendered necessary by the adoption of the eight-hour day and which have not been offset by administrative readjustments and economies, should the facts disclosed justify the increase.

Fifth, an amendment of the existing Federal statute which provides for the mediation, conciliation, and arbitration of such controversies as the present by adding to it a provision that, in case the methods of accommodation now provided for should fail, a full public investigation of the merits of every such dispute shall be instituted and completed before a strike or lockout may lawfully be attempted.

And, sixth, the lodgement in the hands of the Executive of the power, in case of military necessity, to take control of such portions and such rolling stock of the railways of the country as may be required for military use and to operate them for military purposes, with authority to draft into the military service of the United States such train crews and administrative officials as the circumstances require for their safe and efficient use.

The second and third of these recommendations the Congress immediately acted on: it established the eight-hour day as the legal basis of work and wages in train service and it authorized the appointment of a commission to observe and report upon the practical results, deeming these the measures most immediately needed; but it postponed action upon the other suggestions until an opportunity should be offered for a more deliberate consideration of them. The fourth recommendation I do not deem it necessary to renew. The power of the Interstate Commerce Commission to grant an increase of rates on the ground referred to is indisputably clear, and a recommendation by the Congress with regard to such a matter might seem to draw in question the scope of the Commission's authority or its inclination to do justice when there is no reason to doubt either.

The other suggestions,—the increase in the Interstate Commerce Commission's membership and in its facilities for performing its manifold duties, the provision for full public investigation and assessment of industrial disputes, and the grant to the Executive of the power to control and operate the railways when necessary in time of war or other like public necessity,—I now very earnestly renew.

The necessity for such legislation is manifest and pressing. Those who have entrusted us with the responsibility and duty of serving and safeguarding them in such matters would find it hard, I believe, to excuse a failure to act upon these grave matters or any unnecessary postponement of action upon them.

Not only does the Interstate Commerce Commission now find it practically impossible, with its present membership and organization, to perform its great functions promptly and thoroughly but it is not unlikely that it may presently be found advisable to add to its duties still others equally heavy and exacting. It must first be perfected as an administrative instrument.

The country can not and should not consent to remain any longer exposed to profound industrial disturbances for lack of additional means of arbitration and conciliation which the Congress can easily and promptly supply. And all will agree that there must be no doubt as to the power of the Executive to make immediate and uninterrupted use of the railroads for the concentration of the military forces of the nation wherever they are needed and whenever they are needed.

This is a programme of regulation, prevention, and administrative efficiency which argues its own case in the mere statement of it. With regard to one of its items, the increase in the efficiency of the Interstate Commerce Commission, the House of Representatives has already acted; its action needs only the concurrence of the Senate.

I would hesitate to recommend, and I dare say the Congress would hesitate to act upon the suggestion should I make it, that any man in any occupation should be obliged by law to continue in an employment which he desired to leave. To pass a law which forbade or prevented the individual workman to leave his work before receiving the approval of society in doing so would be to adopt a new principle into our jurisprudence which I take it for granted we are not prepared to introduce. But the proposal that the operation of the railways of the country shall not be stopped or interrupted by the concerted action of organized bodies of men until a public investigation shall have been instituted which shall make the whole question at issue plain for the judgment of the opinion of the nation is not to propose any such principle. It is based upon the very different principle that the concerted action of powerful bodies of men shall not be permitted to stop the industrial processes of the nation, at any rate before the nation shall have had an opportunity to acquaint itself with the merits of the case as between employee and employer, time to form its opinion upon an impartial statement of the merits, and opportunity to consider all practicable means of conciliation or arbitration. I can see nothing in that proposition but the justifiable safeguarding by society of the necessary processes of its very life. There is nothing arbitrary or unjust in it unless it be arbitrarily and unjustly done. It can and should be done with a full and scrupulous regard for the interests and liberties of all concerned as well as for the permanent interests of society itself.

Three matters of capital importance await the action of the Senate which have already been acted upon by the House of Representatives; the bill which seeks to extend greater freedom of combination to those engaged in promoting the foreign commerce of the country than is now thought by some to be legal under the terms of the laws against monopoly; the bill amending the present organic law of Porto Rico; and the bill proposing a more thorough and systematic regulation of the expenditure of money in elections, commonly called the Corrupt Practices Act. I need not labor my advice that these measures be enacted into law. Their urgency lies in the manifest circumstances which render their adoption at this time not only opportune but necessary. Even delay would seriously jeopard the interests of the country and of the government.

Immediate passage of the bill to regulate the expenditure of money in elections may seem to be less necessary than the immediate enactment of the other measures to which I refer; because at least two years will elapse before another election in which federal offices are to be filled; but it would greatly relieve the public mind if this important matter were dealt with while the circumstances and the dangers to the public morals of the present method of obtaining and spending campaign funds stand clear under recent observation and the methods of expenditure can be frankly studied in the light of present experience; and a delay would have the further very serious disadvantage of postponing action until another election was at hand and some special object connected with it might be thought to be in the mind of those who urged it. Action can be taken now with facts for guidance and without suspicion of partisan purpose.

I shall not argue at length the desirability of giving a freer hand in the matter of combined and concerted effort to those who shall undertake the essential enterprise of building up our export trade. That enterprise will presently, will immediately assume, has indeed already assumed, a magnitude unprecedented in our experience. We have not the necessary instrumentalities for its prosecution; it is deemed to be doubtful whether they could be created upon an adequate scale under our present laws. We should clear away all legal obstacles and create a basis of undoubted law for it which will give freedom without permitting unregulated license. The thing must be done now, because the opportunity is here and may escape us if we hesitate or delay.

The argument for the proposed amendments of the organic law of Porto Rico is brief and conclusive. The present laws governing the Island and regulating the rights and privileges of its people are not just. We have created expectations of extended privilege which we have not satisfied. There is uneasiness among the people of the Island and even a suspicious doubt with regard to our intentions concerning them which the adoption of the pending measure would happily remove. We do not doubt what we wish to do in any essential particular. We ought to do it at once.

At the last session of the Congress a bill was passed by the Senate which provides for the promotion of vocational and industrial education which is of vital importance to the whole country because it concerns a matter, too long neglected, upon which the thorough industrial preparation of the country for the critical years of economic development immediately ahead of us in very large measure depends. May I not urge its early and favourable consideration by the House of Representatives and its early enactment into law? It contains plans which affect all interests and all parts of the country, and I am sure that there is no legislation now pending before the Congress whose passage the country awaits with more thoughtful approval or greater impatience to see a great and admirable thing set in the way of being done.

There are other matters already advanced to the stage of conference between the two Houses of which it is not necessary that I should speak. Some practicable basis of agreement concerning them will no doubt be found and action taken upon them.

Inasmuch as this is, Gentlemen, probably the last occasion I shall have to address the Sixty-fourth Congress, I hope that you will permit me to say with what genuine pleasure and satisfaction I have cooperated with you in the many measures of constructive policy with which you have enriched the legislative annals of the country. It has been a privilege to labour in such company. I take the liberty of congratulating you upon the completion of a record of rare serviceableness and distinction.

REGULATION OF IMMIGRATION.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, I desire to take this occasion to give notice that, immediately upon the conclusion of the present unfinished business, I shall ask consideration of the immigration bill. I do this of my own accord and in view of the agreement entered into before the adjournment of the last session.

SARAH FRANCES MEAKIN.

Mr. SMOOT. From the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate I report back favorably with an amendment Senate resolution 282, authorizing the Secretary of the Senate to pay from the contingent fund of the Senate to Sarah Frances Meakin, widow of John P. Meakin, late an employee of the United States Senate, a sum equal to six months' salary at the rate he was receiving by law at the time of his death, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded by unanimous consent to consider the resolution.

The amendment was, in line 4, after the word "employee," to strike out "of the United States Senate" and to insert "on the maintenance roll of the Senate Office Building."

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay from the miscellaneous items of the contingent fund of the Senate to Sarah Frances Meakin, widow of John P. Meakin, late an employee on the maintenance roll of the Senate Office Building, a sum equal to six months' salary at the rate he was receiving by law at the time of his death, said sum to be considered as including funeral expenses and all other allowances.

PROPOSED LIMITATION OF DEBATE.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, upon our calendar is Senate resolution 195, which has been unanimously reported to the Senate from the Committee on Rules. It proposes a very conservative rule looking toward pressing the business of the Senate. It is a rule which would prevent a handful of Senators from delaying the consideration of legislation. I desire to bring it to the attention of the Senate now, and to ask its consideration. I believe that there is practically no objection to it.

There are some Senators who would be glad to strike out the provision which requires a two-thirds vote to bring debate to an end; there are others who object to it altogether and who do not wish any curtailment of debate. I believe that there was but one dissenting vote in the Committee on Rules with reference to this resolution, and that was of a Senator who desired a majority cloture.

The chief value of this rule would be to prevent a few Senators in the consideration of appropriation bills from checking such consideration and forcing the views of the minority into an appropriation bill. The proposed rule would be very valuable from that standpoint.

The substance of the resolution is that 16 Senators may at any time by written motion request that debate be closed. The Presiding Officer will then at once state the motion to the Senate; at the close of the morning hour on the following calendar day he will order a call of the roll for a quorum and then put the vote, which would be, "Is it the sense of the Senate that the debate shall be brought to a close?" If that question shall be decided in the affirmative by a two-thirds vote of those voting, then said measure shall be in order to the exclusion of all other business, except a motion to recess or to adjourn. Thereafter no Senator shall be entitled to speak more than an hour on the bill, the amendments thereto, and motions affecting the same. It shall be the duty of the Chair to keep the time of each Senator who speaks and no dilatory motion shall be permitted. Points of order and appeals from the decision of the Chair shall, upon the measure, be decided without debate.

Mr. President, I hope the Senate is ready to allow a vote upon this proposed amendment to our rules. Of course, I understand if a determined resistance existed on the part of the Senate we might waste a great deal of time in discussing it. The proposed rule embodies the practically unanimous agreement of the Rules Committee. I move that we proceed to the consideration of Senate resolution 195.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. OVERMAN in the chair). The question is on the motion of the Senator from Georgia that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of the Senate resolution named by him.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I know there are Senators other than those now present who are interested in this matter, and we have not now a quorum present. I therefore suggest the absence of a quorum before we vote on this question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Hardwick	Martin, Va.	Smith, Ga.
Beckham	Hollis	Nelson	Smith, Md.
Brady	Hughes	Norris	Smith, S. C.
Brandegee	Husting	O'Gorman	Smoot
Bryan	James	Oliver	Sterling
Chamberlain	Johnson, Me.	Overman	Swanson
Chilton	Johnson, S. Dak.	Owen	Thomas
Clapp	Kenyon	Page	Thompson
Colt	Kern	Penrose	Tillman
Culberson	Kirby	Pittman	Townsend
Cummins	La Follette	Poindexter	Vardaman
Curtis	Lane	Pomerene	Wadsworth
Fernald	Lea, Tenn.	Saulsbury	Walsh
Fletcher	Lee, Md.	Shafroth	Warren
Gallinger	Lewis	Sheppard	Watson
Goff	Lippitt	Sherman	Weeks
Gronna	McCumber	Shields	Williams
Harding	McLean	Simmons	Works

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Seventy-two Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Georgia that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate resolution 195.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I wish to say to the Senate, before we vote upon that motion, that I have no idea of undertaking to press it to an immediate vote by the Senate. I wished to bring it to the consideration of the Senate and to put it sufficiently before Senators to let them get ready to vote upon it at an early day.

I believe we ought to pass this rule. I think it will be helpful without unduly curtailing the privilege of debate, and I hope that we may be able during the morning hour within the next two or three days to vote on it. I should be glad to vote on it now, but I understand that there are Senators who do not wish to vote on it to-day.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator from Georgia that there are one or two Senators who are not present here who desire to speak upon it and who, more than likely, will be here to-morrow. Of course, under those conditions I could not allow the motion to be voted upon before 2 o'clock, because I could easily talk it out.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I understand it could not reach a vote by 2 o'clock, and I will not press the motion at this time if no one wishes to be heard upon it now; but I shall endeavor to call it up immediately at the close of the routine business to-morrow morning, during the morning hour.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the calendar under Rule VIII is in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands the Senator from Georgia withdraws his motion?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I withdraw my motion.

CIRCUIT AND DISTRICT JUDGES.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The calendar under Rule VIII is in order, and the Secretary will announce the first bill on the calendar.

The bill (S. 706) to amend section 260 of an act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911, was announced as first in order on the calendar.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, the bill that has just been called is the first one on the calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It has gone over upon objection.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Of course we could proceed with it on motion. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 706.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is upon the motion of the Senator from Georgia to proceed to the consideration of the first bill on the calendar.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I will inquire, What is the necessity for a motion? Is not the consideration of the calendar in order?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes; but this bill was objected to. We are proceeding under Rule VIII, and after an objection it requires a motion to proceed.

Mr. WALSH. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is upon the motion of the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Upon that I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. TOWNSEND. What is the motion?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion is to proceed with the consideration of the first bill on the calendar, Senate bill 706. The Secretary will read the title of the bill so that Senators may understand the motion.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 706) to amend section 260 of an act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is upon the motion of the Senator from Georgia to proceed to the consideration of this bill. Upon that motion the Senator from Washington demands the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CHILTON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL] which I transfer to the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. OWEN (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CATRON] to the junior Senator from California [Mr. PHELAN] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. SAULSBURY (when his name was called). Has the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT] voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He has not.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I have a pair with that Senator and therefore withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BECKHAM. I have a pair with the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT]. I therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. McLEAN (after having voted in the negative). I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS] to the senior Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES], and will allow my vote to stand.

The result was announced—yeas 37, nays 33, as follows:

YEAS—37.

Ashurst	Johnson, Me.	Overman	Stone
Bankhead	Johnson, S. Dak.	Owen	Swanson
Chamberlain	Kern	Pomerene	Thomas
Chilton	Kirby	Shafroth	Thompson
Fletcher	Lea, Tenn.	Sheppard	Underwood
Gore	Lee, Md.	Simmons	Walsh
Hardwick	Lewis	Smith, Ariz.	Williams
Hollis	Martin, Va.	Smith, Ga.
Husting	Martine, N. J.	Smith, Md.
James	O'Gorman	Smith, S. C.

NAYS—33.

Borah	Gallinger	McCumber	Smoot
Brady	Goff	McLean	Sterling
Brandegee	Gronna	Nelson	Sutherland
Clapp	Harding	Norris	Townsend
Clark	Kenyon	Oliver	Watson
Cummins	La Follette	Page	Weeks
Curtis	Lane	Penrose
Dillingham	Lippitt	Poindexter
Fernald	Lodge	Sherman

NOT VOTING—26.

Beckham	Fall	Pittman	Tillman
Broussard	Hitchcock	Ransdell	Vardaman
Bryan	Hughes	Reed	Wadsworth
Catron	Jones	Robinson	Warren
Colt	Myers	Saulsbury	Works
Culberson	Newlands	Shields
du Pont	Phelan	Smith, Mich.

So the motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 706) to amend section 260 of an act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I desire to offer two amendments to the bill. On line 10, page 2, after the word "President," I move to strike out "if in his opinion the public good so requires, may" and substitute "when in his opinion the proper conduct of the business of the court so requires, shall."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is upon the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the amendments be read at the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, line 10, it is proposed to strike out "if in his opinion the public good so requires, may" and to insert "when in his opinion the proper conduct of the business of the court so requires, shall."

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the language to be stricken out first be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the language proposed to be stricken out and the amendment.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out the words "if in his opinion the public good so requires, may" and to insert "when in his opinion the proper conduct of the business of the court so requires, shall."

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I will suggest that the bill ought first to be read in full, so that we may know what is in the bill. Then it can well be amended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Hampshire asks for the reading of the bill. The Secretary will read the bill.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 260 of an act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911, be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 260. When any judge of any court of the United States, appointed to hold his office during good behavior, resigns his office, after having held a commission or commissions as judge of any such court or courts at least 10 years continuously, and having attained the age of 70 years, he shall, during the residue of his natural life, receive the salary which is payable at the time of his retirement for the office that he held at the time of his resignation."

"In the event any circuit judge, having so held a commission or commissions at least 10 years continuously, and having attained the age of 70 years as aforesaid, shall nevertheless remain in office, the President, if in his opinion the public good so requires, may appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, an additional circuit judge of said circuit, who, notwithstanding the incumbency of the judge so entitled to resign, shall sit customarily as one of the judges of the circuit court of appeals of his circuit. And the judge so entitled to resign shall thenceforth be relieved, save as hereinafter provided, from the duty imposed by section 118 of this title to sit as one of the judges of said circuit court of appeals, and shall be held and treated as if junior in commission to the remaining judges of said court, who shall, in the order of the seniority of their respective commissions, exercise such powers and perform such duties as by law may be incident to seniority: Provided, That the presiding judge of the said circuit court of appeals, whether in his judgment the public good shall so require, may thereafter, from time to time, designate the judge so entitled to resign to sit upon the hearing of any cause or causes in the said circuit court of appeals. And the Chief Justice of the United States may, upon like occasions, thereafter designate and appoint any such circuit judge so entitled to resign to service upon the circuit court of appeals of any other circuit; and he may likewise be designated and appointed, as provided by section 18 of this title, to hold a district court in any district, either within or without his said circuit.

"In the event any such judge of a district court of the United States, having so held a commission or commissions, at least 10 years continuously, and having attained the age of 70 years as aforesaid, shall nevertheless remain in office, the President, if in his opinion the public good so requires, may appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, an additional judge of such court, who, notwithstanding the incumbency of the judge so entitled to resign, shall preside customarily over the said district court, and shall exercise such powers as are vested by law in the judge thereof. And the district judge so entitled to resign shall thenceforth be relieved, save as hereinafter provided, from service therein: Provided, That the said district judge so entitled to resign as aforesaid may be designated and appointed from time to time to hold any district court, either in his district or within or without his circuit, as provided by sections 13, 14, 15, 16, and 17 of this title, or to sit in the circuit court of appeals of his circuit, as provided by section 120 of this title.

"Upon the death or resignation of any circuit or district judge, so entitled to resign, following the appointment of any additional judge as herein provided, the vacancy caused by such death or resignation of the said judge so entitled to resign shall not be filled, but the number of judges then in office shall be reduced accordingly."

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I observe that the Senator from Georgia has made a report, which is brief and contains some matters that ought to be understood by the Senate. I ask that the report may be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be read.

The Secretary proceeded to read Report of Committee 21, submitted by Mr. SMITH of Georgia from the Committee on the Judiciary, January 5, 1916.

CORRUPT PRACTICES.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which is House bill 15842.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 15842) to revise, amend, and codify the laws relating to publicity of contributions and expenditures made for the purpose of influencing the nomination and election of candidates for the offices of Senator and Representative in the Congress of the United States, extending the same to candidates for nomination and election to the offices of President and Vice President of the United States, limiting the amount which may be expended, providing for the publicity of campaign expenses, and for other purposes.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, when Congress adjourned in September this bill was made the unfinished business of the Senate automatically. At that time the Members of the Senate were greatly wearied with the prolonged session, and assurances were given by various Senators on both sides of the Chamber that they would willingly cooperate to perfect the measure and enact it into law. I ask now that the Senators who gave those assurances cooperate in perfecting it in good faith and put upon the statute books a means by which the improper use of money shall be stopped in the future elections of Representatives, Senators, and presidential electors. No republic can permanently endure which permits the high legislative officers and the great executive power of the people to be controlled merely by the sordid use of money on a large scale.

This bill deals with all parties. It deals with all men. It is not to be regarded, and ought not to be regarded, merely as a partisan bill, but a bill having in view a sincere purpose to establish substantial integrity in our national elections.

There is nothing in the bill to which I feel so wedded that I should oppose any reasonable amendment which would effect the purposes of the bill, but I appeal to the Senate to act upon this measure now, to consider it section by section and phrase by phrase, so that it shall be made a perfect bill and shall not be subjected to any unnecessarily prolonged discussion.

Mr. PENROSE. Will the Senator permit an inquiry?

Mr. OWEN. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. PENROSE. I think it would be well for the Senator to state to the Senate, for at least I do not understand it myself, just what is the parliamentary status of the measure. Has it been read yet to the Senate?

Mr. OWEN. It has been read and one amendment agreed to on page 38, after line 24, proposed by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BRADY]. It is subject now to further amendment.

Mr. PENROSE. Is the bill open to amendment?

Mr. OWEN. It is still open to amendment.

Mr. PENROSE. I offered to-day some amendments to the bill, and if it does not interfere with the Senator's plan I should like to have them read. Otherwise I will not press the consideration of them until a later date.

Mr. OWEN. I have not, of course, seen the amendments proposed.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I had no idea that we would take up this bill to-day. I will say frankly to the Senator from Oklahoma that I have not followed it since the adjournment of Congress; but I believe the bill ought to be taken up and considered, and wherever amendments are needed or thought to be needed by Senators they ought to offer them.

I was going to suggest to the Senator whether it would not be proper now for him to give notice to the Senate, because there are very few of us here, that either to-morrow or the next day at 2 o'clock the Senator intends to call up the bill and press it for action. In the meantime those who want to offer amendments can prepare them, and we will be ready to go on with the consideration of the bill at that time. I believe such a course would hasten the consideration of the measure, and it would be very much better, at least in the interest of the time of the Senate.

Mr. OWEN. I had assumed, of course——

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I supposed that I had the floor for the purpose of making an inquiry of the Senator from Oklahoma which has not been answered.

Mr. OWEN. I shall be glad to answer the Senator.

Mr. PENROSE. I inquired of the Senator from Oklahoma whether the bill is open to amendment by individual Senators. I understood him to say yes. Then I desired to address the inquiry to him whether it would work in harmony with his program if I should ask to have the amendments I offered to-day read to the Senate.

Mr. OWEN. It would be entirely agreeable to me. I would be glad to have them read.

Mr. PENROSE. Then, if it is entirely agreeable to the Senator, I will ask to have the first amendment read.

Mr. OWEN. I shall be pleased to hear it.

Mr. PENROSE. I will say, after this amendment is read, I will ask to have the second amendment read, which I will hand to the Secretary.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there is no objection, the Secretary will read the amendment proposed by the Senator from Pennsylvania.

The Secretary proceeded to read the amendment, but before concluding—

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, this amendment was introduced by me in good faith simply to bring before the Senate the question whether or not it is worthy of consideration at this time to embody in this proposed legislation the machinery for the Federal supervision and inspection of election matters where Congressmen, Senators, and presidential electors are involved. It is a proposition to reenact the various sections contained in the Revised Statutes repealed by the act approved February 8, 1894. I asked to have the amendment read this afternoon for the information of the Senate. It may be that the Senate, in its wisdom, will consider that these matters should still be left exclusively to State supervision and control; but I, for one, believe that in many parts of the country it would be well to have the old Federal machinery—modified, it may be—in force.

Then I presented another amendment to follow this, largely to have it printed, so that it might be considered by the Senate; and it is well worthy of consideration, in my opinion, Mr. President, in view of the fact that it is admitted that in many sections of the country the vote cast is far out of proportion in its smallness to the representation in the electoral college; but not wishing to delay the proceedings of the Senate and being informed by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN], who has this bill in charge, that he does not intend to press the further consideration of the measure this afternoon, and in view of the fact that it is very evident that Senators are absent, engaged in other duties, and are not now prepared to give it that consideration which it deserves, I will ask his consent—in fact, I will ask unanimous consent—to have the further reading of the amendment dispensed with and to have this amendment, together with the second amendment submitted by me, printed in the RECORD for the information of the Senate, and also printed in the regular way as pending amendments.

Mr. OWEN. I shall be glad to have that done.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Pennsylvania? The Chair hears none, and that order will be made.

The amendments submitted by Mr. PENROSE are as follows:

Add as a new section at the end of the bill the following:

"SEC. 22. That all laws and parts of laws repealed by the provisions of an act entitled 'An act to repeal all statutes relating to supervisors of elections and special deputy marshals, and for other purposes,' approved February 8, 1894, be, and the same are hereby, reenacted, as follows:

"'SEC. 2002. No military or naval officer, or other person engaged in the civil, military, or naval service of the United States, shall order, bring, keep, or have under his authority or control any troops or armed men at the place where any general or special election is held in any State unless it be necessary to repel the armed enemies of the United States or to keep the peace at the polls.

"'SEC. 2005. When under the authority of the constitution or laws of any State or the laws of any Territory any act is required to be done as a prerequisite or qualification for voting, and by such constitution of laws persons or officers are charged with the duty of furnishing to citizens an opportunity to perform such prerequisite, or to become qualified to vote, every such person and officer shall give to all citizens of the United States the same and equal opportunity to perform such prerequisite and to become qualified to vote.

"'SEC. 2006. Every person or officer charged with the duty specified in the preceding section, who refuses or knowingly omits to give full effect to that section, shall forfeit the sum of $500 to the party aggrieved by such refusal or omission, to be recovered by an action on the case, with costs, and such allowance for counsel fees as the court may deem just.

"'SEC. 2007. Whenever under the authority of the constitution or laws of any State or the laws of any Territory any act is required to be done by a citizen as a prerequisite to qualify or entitle him to vote, the offer of such citizen to perform the act required to be done shall, if it fail to be carried into execution by reason of the wrongful act or omission of the person or officer charged with the duty or receiving or permitting such performance or offer to perform, or acting thereon, be deemed and held as a performance in law of such act; and the person so offering and failing to vote, and being otherwise qualified, shall be entitled to vote in the same manner and to the same extent as if he had, in fact, performed such act.

"'SEC. 2008. Every judge, inspector, or other officer of election, whose duty it is to receive, count, certify, register, report, or give effect to the vote of such citizen, who wrongfully refuses or omits to receive, count, certify, register, report, or give effect to the vote of such citizen, upon the presentation by him of his affidavit, stating such offer and the time and place thereof and the name of the officer or person whose duty it was to act thereon, and that he was wrongfully prevented by such person or officer from performing such act, shall forfeit the sum of $500 to the party aggrieved by such refusal or omission, to be recovered by an action in the case, with costs, and such allowance for counsel fees as the court may deem just.

"'SEC. 2009. Every officer or other person, having powers or duties of an official character to discharge under any of the provisions of this title, who, by threats or any unlawful means, hinders, delays, prevents, or obstructs, or combines and confederates with others to hinder, delay, prevent, or obstruct, any citizen from doing any act required to be done to qualify him to vote or from voting at any election in any State, Territory, district, county, city, parish, township, school district, municipality, or other territorial subdivision shall forfeit the sum of $500 to the person aggrieved thereby, to be recovered by an action on the case, with costs, and such allowance for counsel fees as the court may deem just.

"'SEC. 2010. Whenever any person is defeated or deprived of his election to any office, except elector of President or Vice President, Representative, or Delegate in Congress, or member of a State legislature, by reason of the denial to any citizen who may offer to vote, of the right to vote, on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude, his right to hold and enjoy such office, and the emoluments thereof, shall not be impaired by such denial; and the person so defeated or deprived may bring any appropriate suit or proceeding to recover possession of such office, and in cases where it appears that the sole question touching the title to such office arises out of the denial of the right to vote to citizens who so offered to vote on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude, such suit or proceeding may be instituted in the circuit or district court of the United States of the circuit or district in which such person resides. And the circuit or district court shall have, concurrently with the State courts, jurisdiction thereof so far as to determine the rights of the parties to such office by reason of the denial of the right guaranteed by the fifteenth article of amendment to the Constitution of the United States and secured herein.

"'SEC. 2011. Whenever, in any city or town having upward of 20,000 inhabitants, there are two citizens thereof, or whenever, in any county or parish in any congressional district, there are 10 citizens thereof of good standing, who, prior to any registration of voters for an election for Representative or Delegate in the Congress of the United States, or prior to any election at which a Representative or Delegate in Congress is to be voted for, may make known, in writing, to the judge of the circuit court of the United States for the circuit wherein such city or town, county or parish is situated their desire to have such registration or such election, or both, guarded and scrutinized, the judge, within not less than 10 days prior to the registration, if one there be, or, if no registration be required, within not less than 10 days prior to the election, shall open the circuit court at the most convenient point in the circuit.

"'SEC. 2012. The court, when so opened by the judge, shall proceed to appoint and commission, from day to day and from time to time, and under the hand of the judge and under the seal of the court, for each election district or voting precinct in such city or town, or for such election district or voting precinct in the congressional district, as may have applied in the manner hereinbefore prescribed, and to revoke, change, or renew such appointment from time to time, two citizens, residents of the city or town or of the election district or voting precinct in the county or parish, who shall be of different political parties, and able to read and write the English language, and who shall be known and designated as supervisors of election.

"'SEC. 2013. The circuit court, when opened by the judge as required in the two preceding sections, shall therefrom and thereafter, and up to and including the day following the day of election, be always open for the transaction of business under this title, and the powers and jurisdiction hereby granted and conferred shall be exercised as well in vacation as in term time; and a judge sitting at chambers shall have the same powers and jurisdiction, including the power of keeping order and of punishing any contempt of his authority, as when sitting in court.

"'SEC. 2014. Whenever, from any cause, the judge of the circuit court in any judicial circuit is unable to perform and discharge the duties herein imposed, he is required to select and assign to the performance thereof in his place such one of the judges of the district courts within his circuit as he may deem best; and upon such selection and assignment being made the district judge so designated shall perform and discharge in the place of the circuit judge all the duties, powers, and obligations imposed and conferred upon the circuit judge by the provisions hereof.

"'SEC. 2015. The preceding section shall be construed to authorize each of the judges of the circuit courts of the United States to designate one or more of the judges of the district courts within his circuit to discharge the duties arising under this title.

"'SEC. 2016. The supervisors of election so appointed are authorized and required to attend at all times and places fixed for the registration of voters who, being registered, would be entitled to vote for a Representative or Delegate in Congress, and to challenge any person offering to register; to attend at all times and places when the names of registered voters may be marked for challenge, and to cause such names registered as they may deem proper to be so marked; to make, when required, the lists or either of them provided for in section 2026 and verify same; and upon any occasion, and at any time when in attendance upon the duty herein prescribed, to personally inspect and scrutinize such registry, and for purposes of identification to affix their signature to each page of the original list, and of each copy of any such list of registered voters at such times, upon each day when any name may be received, entered, or registered, and in such manner as will, in their judgment, detect and expose the improper or wrongful removal therefrom, or addition thereto, of any name.

"'SEC. 2017. The supervisors of election are authorized and required to attend at all times and places for holding elections of Representatives or Delegates in Congress, and for counting the votes cast at such elections; to challenge any vote offered by any person whose legal qualifications the supervisors, or either of them, may doubt; to be and remain where the ballot boxes are kept at all times after the polls are open until every vote cast at such time and place has been counted, the canvass of all votes polled wholly completed, and the proper and requisite certificates or returns made, whether the certificates or returns be required under any law of the United States, or any State, Territorial, or municipal law, and to personally inspect and scrutinize, from time to time, and at all times, on the day of election, the manner in which the voting is done, and the way and method in which the poll books, registry lists, and tallies or check books, whether the same are required by any law of the United States, or any State, Territorial, or municipal law, are kept.

"'SEC. 2018. To the end that each candidate for the office of Representative or Delegate in Congress may obtain the benefit of every vote for him cast, the supervisors of election are, and each of them is, required to personally scrutinize, count, and canvass each ballot in their election district or voting precinct cast, whatever may be the indorsement on the ballot, or in whatever box it may have been placed or be found; to make and forward to the officer who, in accordance with the provisions of section 2025, has been designated as the chief supervisor of the judicial district in which the city or town wherein they may serve, acts, such certificates and returns of all such ballots as such officer may direct and require, and to attach to the registry list, and any and all copies thereof and to any certificate, statement, or return, whether the same, or any part or portion thereof, be required by any law of the United States, or of any State, Territorial, or municipal law, any statement touching the truth or accuracy of the registry, or the truth or fairness of the election and canvass, which the supervisors of the election, or either of them, may desire to make or attach, or which should properly and honestly be made or attached, in order that the facts may become known.

"'SEC. 2019. The better to enable the supervisors of election to discharge their duties they are authorized and directed, in their respective election districts or voting precincts, on the day of registration, on the day when registered voters may be marked to be challenged, and on the day of election, to take, occupy, and remain in such position, from time to time, whether before or behind the ballot boxes, as will in their judgment best enable them to see each person offering himself for registration or offering to vote, and as will best conduce to their scrutinizing the manner in which the registration or voting is being conducted; and at the closing of the polls for the reception of votes they are required to place themselves in such position, in relation to the ballot boxes, for the purpose of engaging in the work of canvassing the ballots as will enable them to fully perform the duties in respect to such canvass provided herein, and shall there remain until every duty in respect to such canvass, certificates, returns, and statements has been wholly completed.

"'SEC. 2020. When in any election district or voting precinct in any city or town, for which there has been appointed supervisors of election for any election at which a Representative or Delegate in Congress is voted for, the supervisors of election are not allowed to exercise and discharge, fully and freely, and without bribery, solicitation, interference, hinderance, molestation, violence, or threats thereof, on the part of any person, all the duties, obligations, and powers conferred upon them by law, the supervisors of election shall make prompt report, under oath, within 10 days after the day of election to the officer who, in accordance with the provisions of section 2025, has been designated as the chief supervisor of the judicial district in which the city or town wherein they served, acts, of the manner and means by which they were not so allowed to fully and freely exercise and discharge the duties and obligations required and imposed herein. And upon receiving any such report the chief supervisors, acting both in such capacity and officially as a commissioner of the circuit court, shall forthwith examine into all the facts; and he shall have power to subpœna and compel the attendance before him of any witness, and to administer oaths and take testimony in respect to the charges made; and, prior to the assembling of the Congress for which any such Representative or Delegate was voted for, he shall file with the Clerk of the House of Representatives all the evidence by him taken, all information by him obtained, and all reports to him made.

"'SEC. 2021. Whenever an election at which Representatives or Delegates in Congress are to be chosen is held in any city or town of 20,000 inhabitants or upward, the marshal for the district in which the city or town is situated shall, on the application in writing of at least two citizens residing in such city or town, appoint special deputy marshals whose duty it shall be, when required thereto, to aid and assist the supervisors of election in the verification of any list of persons who may have registered or voted; to attend in each election district or voting precinct at the times and places fixed for the registration of voters, and at all times or places when and where the registration may by law be scrutinized and the names of registered voters be marked for challenge; and also to attend, at all times for holding elections, the polls in such district or precinct.

"'SEC. 2022. The marshal and his general deputies shall keep the peace and support and protect the supervisors of election in the discharge of their duties, preserve order at such places of registration and at such polls, prevent fraudulent registration and fraudulent voting thereat, or fraudulent conduct on the part of any officer of election, and immediately, either at the place of registration or polling place, or elsewhere, and either before or after registering or voting, to arrest and take into custody, with or without process, any person who commits, or attempts or offers to commit, any of the acts or offenses prohibited herein, or who commits any offense against the laws of the United States; but no person shall be arrested without process for any offense not committed in the presence of the marshal or his general or special deputies, or either of them, or of the supervisors of election, or either of them, and, for the purposes of arrest or the preservation of the peace, the supervisors of election shall, in the absence of the marshal's deputies, or if required to assist such deputies, have the same duties and powers as deputy marshals; nor shall any person, on the day of such election, be arrested without process for any offense committed on the day of registration.

"'SEC. 2023. Whenever any arrest is made under any provision of this title, the person so arrested shall forthwith be brought before a commissioner, judge, or court of the United States for examination of the offenses alleged against him; and such commissioner, judge, or court shall proceed in respect thereto as authorized by law in case of crimes against the United States.

"'SEC. 2024. The marshal or his general deputies, or such special deputies as are thereto specially empowered by him, in writing, and under his hand and seal, whenever he or either or any of them is forcibly resisted in executing their duties under this title, or shall, by violence, threats, or menaces be prevented from executing such duties, or from arresting any person who has committed any offense for which the marshal or his general or his special deputies are authorized to make such arrest, are, and each of them is, empowered to summon and call to his aid the bystanders or posse comitatus of his district.

"'SEC. 2025. The circuit courts of the United States for each judicial circuit shall name and appoint, on or before the 1st day of May, in the year 1871, and thereafter as vacancies may from any cause arise, from among the circuit court commissioners for each judicial district in each judicial court, one of such officers, who shall be known for the duties required of him under this title as the chief supervisor of elections of the judicial district for which he is a commissioner, and shall, so long as faithful and capable, discharge the duties in this title imposed.

"'SEC. 2026. The chief supervisor shall prepare and furnish all necessary books, forms, blanks, and instructions for the use and direction of the supervisors of election in the several cities and towns in their respective districts; he shall receive the applications of all parties for appointment to such positions; upon the opening, as contemplated in section 2012, of the circuit court for the judicial circuit in which the commissioner so designated acts, he shall present such applications to the judge thereof, and furnish information to him in respect to the appointment by the court of such supervisors of election; he shall require of the supervisors of election, when necessary, lists of the persons who may register and vote, or either, in their respective election districts or voting precincts, and cause the names of those upon any such list whose right to register or vote is honestly doubted to be verified by proper inquiry and examination at the respective places by them assigned as their residences; and he shall receive, preserve, and file all oaths of office of supervisors of election, and of all special deputy marshals appointed under the provisions of this title, and all certificates, returns, reports, and records of every kind and nature contemplated or made requisite by the provisions hereof, save where otherwise herein specially directed.

"'SEC. 2027. All United States marshals and commissioners who in any judicial district perform any duties under the preceding provisions relating to, concerning, or affecting the election of the Representatives or Delegates in the Congress of the United States, from time to time, and with all due diligence shall forward to the chief supervisor in and for their judicial district all complaints, examinations, and records pertaining thereto, and all oaths of office by them administered to any supervisor of election or special deputy marshal, in order that the same may be properly preserved and filed.

"'SEC. 2028. No person shall be appointed a supervisor of election or a deputy marshal under the preceding provisions who is not at the time of his appointment a qualified voter of the city, town, county, parish, election district, or voting precinct in which his duties are to be performed.

"'SEC. 2029. The supervisors of election appointed for any county or parish in any congressional district, at the instance of 10 citizens, as provided in section 2011, shall have no authority to make arrests or to perform other duties than to be in the immediate presence of the officers holding the election, and to witness all their proceedings, including the counting of the votes and the making of a return thereof.

"'SEC. 2030. Nothing in this title shall be construed to authorize the appointment of any marshals or deputy marshals in addition to those authorized by law prior to the 10th day of June, 1872.

"'SEC. 2031. There shall be allowed and paid to the chief supervisor for his services as such officer the following compensation, apart from and in excess of all fees allowed by law, for the performance of any duty as circuit court commissioner: For filing and caring for every return, report, record, document, or other paper required to be filed by him under any of the preceding provisions, 10 cents; for affixing a seal to any paper, record, report, or instrument, 20 cents; for entering and indexing the records of his office, 15 cents per folio; and for arranging and transmitting to Congress, as provided for in section 2020, any report, statement, record, return, or examination, for each folio, 15 cents; and for any copy thereof, or of any paper on file, a like sum. And there shall be allowed and paid to each supervisor of election and each special deputy marshal who is appointed and performs his duty under the preceding provisions compensation at the rate of $5 per day for each day he is actually on duty, not exceeding 10 days; but no compensation shall be allowed in any case to supervisors of election, except to those appointed in cities or towns of 20,000 or more inhabitants; and the fees of the chief supervisors shall be paid at the Treasury of the United States, such accounts to be made out, verified, examined, and certified as in the case of accounts of commissioners, save that the examination or certificate required may be made by either the circuit or district judge.

"'SEC. 5506. Every person who by any unlawful means hinders, delays, prevents, or obstructs, or combines and confederates with others to hinder, delay, prevent, or obstruct any citizen from doing any act required to be done to qualify him to vote, or from voting at any election in any State, Territory, district, county, city, parish, township, school district, municipality, or other Territorial subdivision, shall be fined not less than $500, or be imprisoned not less than one month nor more than one year, or be punished by both such fine and imprisonment.

"'SEC. 5511. If at any election for Representative or Delegate in Congress, any person knowingly personates and votes, or attempts to vote, in the name of any other person, whether living, dead, or fictitious; or votes more than once at the same election for any candidate for the same office; or votes at a place where he may not be lawfully entitled to vote; or votes without having a lawful right to vote; or does any unlawful act to secure an opportunity to vote for himself or any other person; or by force, threat, intimidation, bribery, reward, or offer thereof, unlawfully prevents any qualified voter of any State, or of any Territory, from freely exercising the right of suffrage, or by any such means induces any voter to refuse to exercise such right, or compels, or induces, by any such means, any officer of an election in any such State or Territory to receive a vote from a person not legally qualified or entitled to vote; or interferes in any manner with any officer of such election in the discharge of his duties; or by any means, or such unlawful means, induces any officer of an election or officer whose duty it is to ascertain, announce, or declare the result of any such election, or give or make any certificate, document, or evidence in relation thereto, to violate or refuse to comply with his duty or any law regulating the same; or knowingly receives the vote of any person not entitled to vote, or refuses to receive the vote of any person entitled to vote, or aids, counsels, procures, or advises any such voter, person, or officer to do any act hereby made a crime, or omit to do any duty the omission of which is hereby made a crime, or attempt to do so, he shall be punished by a fine of not more than $500, or by imprisonment not more than three years, or by both, and shall pay the costs of the prosecution.

"'SEC. 5512. If at any registration of voters for an election for Representative or Delegate in the Congress of the United States any person knowingly personates and registers, or attempts to register, in the name of any other person, whether living, dead, or fictitious, or fraudulently registers, or fraudulently attempts to register, not having a lawful right so to do; or does any unlawful act to secure registration for himself or any other person; or by force, threat, menace, intimidation, bribery, reward, or offer, or promise thereof, or other unlawful means, prevents or hinders any person having a lawful right to register from duly exercising such right; or compels or induces by any of such means, or other unlawful means, any officer of registration to admit to registration any person not legally entitled thereto, or interferes in any manner with any officer of registration in the discharge of his duties, or by any such means or other unlawful means, induces any officer of registration to violate or refuse to comply with his duty or any law regulating the same; or if any such officer knowingly and willfully registers as a voter any person not entitled to be registered, or refuses to so register any person entitled to register; or if any such officer or other person who has any duty to perform in relation to such registration or election, in ascertaining, announcing, or declaring the result thereof, or in giving or making any certificate, document, or evidence in relation thereto, knowingly neglects or refuses to perform any duty required by law, or violates any duty imposed by law, or does any act unauthorized by law relating to or affecting such registration or election, or the result thereof, or any certificate, document, or evidence in relation thereto, or if any person aids, counsels, procures, or advises, any such voter, person, or officer to do any act hereby made a crime, or to omit any act the omission of which is hereby made a crime, every such person shall be punishable as prescribed in the preceding section.

"'SEC. 5513. Every registration made under the laws of any State or Territory for any State or other election at which such Representative or Delegate in Congress may be chosen, shall be deemed to be a registration within the meaning of the preceding section, notwithstanding such registration is also made for the purposes of any State, territorial, or municipal election.

"'SEC. 5514. Whenever the laws of any State or Territory require that the name of a candidate or person to be voted for as Representative or Delegate in Congress shall be printed, written, or contained on any ticket or ballot with the names of other candidates or persons to be voted for at the same election as State, Territorial, municipal, or local officers, it shall be deemed sufficient prima facie evidence to convict any person charged with voting, or offering to vote, unlawfully, under the provisions of this chapter, to prove that the person so charged cast or offered to cast such a ticket or ballot whereon the name of such Representative or Delegate might by law be printed, written, or contained, or that the person so charged committed any of the offenses denounced in this chapter with reference to such ticket or ballot.

"'SEC. 5515. Every officer of an election at which any Representative or Delegate in Congress is voted for, whether such officer of election be appointed or created by or under any law or authority of the United States, or by or under any State, Territorial, district, or municipal law or authority, who neglects or refuses to perform any duty in regard to such election required of him by any law of the United States or of any State or Territory thereof, or who violates any duty so imposed, or who knowingly does any acts thereby unauthorized, with intent to affect any such election or the result thereof, or who fraudulently makes any false certificate of the result of such election in regard to such Representative or Delegate, or who withholds, conceals, or destroys any certificate of record so required by law respecting the election of any such Representative or Delegate, or who neglects or refuses to make and return such certificate as required by law, or who aids, counsels, procures, or advises any voter, person, or officer to do any act by this or any preceding section made a crime, or to omit to do any duty the omission of which is by this or any of such sections made a crime, or attempts to do so, shall be punished as prescribed in section 5510 (5511).

"'SEC. 5520. If two or more persons in any State or Territory conspire to prevent by force, intimidation, or threat any citizen who is lawfully entitled to vote from giving his support or advocacy, in a legal manner, toward or in favor of the election of any lawfully qualified person as an elector for President or Vice President, or as a Member of the Congress of the United States, or to injure any citizen in person or property on account of such support or advocacy, each of such persons shall be punished by a fine of not less than $500 nor more $5,000, or by imprisonment, with or without hard labor, not less than six months nor more than six years, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

"'SEC. 5521. If any person be appointed a supervisor of election or a special deputy marshal under the provisions of title "The elective franchise," and has taken the oath of office as such supervisor of election or such special deputy marshal, and thereafter neglects or refuses, without good and lawful excuse, to perform and discharge fully the duties, obligations, and requirements of such office until the expiration of the term for which he was appointed, he shall not only be subject to removal from office with loss of all pay or emoluments, but shall be punished by imprisonment for not less than six months nor more than one year, or by a fine of not less than $200 and not more than $500, or by both fine and imprisonment, and shall pay the costs of prosecution.

"'SEC. 5522. Every person, whether with or without any authority, power, or process, or pretended authority, power, or process, of any State, Territory, or municipality, who obstructs, hinders, assaults, or by bribery, solicitation, or otherwise, interferes with or prevents the supervisors of election, or either of them, or the marshal or his general or special deputies, or either of them, in the performance of any duty required of them or either of them, or which he or they, or either of them, may be authorized to perform by any law of the United States, in the execution of process or otherwise, or who by any of the means before mentioned, hinders or perverts the free attendance and presence at such places of registration or at such polls of election, or full and free access and egress to and from any such place of registration or poll of election or in going to and from any such place of registration or poll of election, or to and from any room where any such registration or election or canvass of votes, or of making any returns or certificates thereof, may be had, or who molests, interferes with, removes, or ejects from any such place of registration or poll of election, or of canvassing votes cast thereat, or of making returns or certificates thereof, any supervisor of election, the marshal, or his general or special deputies, or either of them; or who threatens, or attempts, or offers so to do, or refuses or neglects to aid and assist any supervisor of election, or the marshal or his general or special deputies, or either of them, in the performance of his or their duties, when required by him or them, or either of them, to give such aid and assistance, shall be liable to instant arrest without process, and shall be punished by imprisonment not more than two years, or by a fine of not more than $3,000, or by both such fine and imprisonment, and shall pay the cost of the prosecution.

"'SEC. 5523. Every person who, during the progress of any verification of any list of the persons who may have registered or voted, which is had or made under any of the provisions of title "The elective franchise," refuses to answer, or refrains from answering, or, answering, knowingly gives false information in respect to any inquiry lawfully made, shall be punishable by imprisonment for not more than 30 days, or by fine of not more than $100, or by both, and shall pay the costs of the prosecution.'"

Add at the end of the bill a new section, as follows:

"SEC. 23. That the chief supervisors of elections now in office, their successors, and such chief supervisors of elections as may hereafter be appointed under any law of the United States are charged in their respective judicial districts, and in such congressional districts the majority of the counties of which are within their judicial districts, and in congressional districts where the counties are equally divided in number between two judicial districts, or where they are within more than two judicial districts that chief supervisor of elections shall be charged with duty hereunder in whose judicial district there shall be situated the counties which by the last national census contained the greatest number of inhabitants, both in person and by and through the supervisors of election who may from time to time be appointed, with the supervision of elections at which Representatives or Delegates in Congress are voted for, with the enforcement of the national election laws, and with the prevention of frauds and irregularities in naturalization.

"The words 'judicial district' where hereinafter used in this act or where found in any law of the United States relating to elections in connection with the duties, rights, and powers of chief supervisors of election shall be understood to refer to and to run throughout the jurisdiction in this section conferred.

"Any registration of voters held prior to or for any election, general or special, at which a Representative or Delegate in Congress is to be voted for, and any such election, shall be guarded, scrutinized, and supervised in the following mentioned and in the manner herein set forth:

"First. In any city or town having 20,000 inhabitants or upward, whether such city or town contains within its boundaries one or more congressional districts or is only a part of one or more congressional districts.

"Second. In any one or more counties or parishes in any congressional district and forming a part only of a congressional district.

"Third. In any entire congressional district no part of which is within any city or town of 20,000 inhabitants and upward, whenever the chief supervisor of elections for the judicial district in which either of the three above-mentioned places is situated shall have received from the first and third of such mentioned places an application or applications from 100 persons claiming to be citizens of the United States and residents and qualified voters in the city or town or in the congressional district above mentioned, or whenever he shall receive from the second of such above-described places an application or applications from 50 persons claiming to be citizens of the United States and residents and qualified voters in one or more of such counties or parishes petitioning that he will take such action as is requisite to secure such supervision therein as is provided by the laws of the United States. Every person applying for such supervision shall subscribe the same and state his place of residence.

"Every registration—preliminary or final—every revision of registration, every antecedent or subsequent act or thing incident to or connected with any system of registration of votes, and every plan, mode, or method of ascertaining who are legal voters which may be required under any State, Territorial, or local law or ordinance prior to the casting of ballots by electors who may desire to vote at any general or special election at which a Representative or Delegate in Congress is to be voted for, and every such election shall hereafter, each and both of them, be guarded, scrutinized, and supervised in the manner herein set forth.

"It shall be the duty of the chief supervisor of elections in each judicial district, in due and seasonable time, to inform a judge of the circuit court of the United States in his judicial district that he has business to present to such circuit court in respect to the next ensuing election, at which one or more Representatives or Delegates in Congress are to be voted for, whereupon it shall be the duty of such circuit judge, and he is required within 10 days thereafter to open, or cause to be opened, the circuit court at the most convenient place in such judicial district for the purpose of transacting all such business pertaining to registration or election matters as may, under the laws of the United States, there be transacted and done.

"The court when so opened shall be always open for the transaction of such business until the second day succeeding the election; and the powers and jurisdiction granted and conferred shall be exercised as well in vacation as in term time, and a judge sitting at chambers shall have the same powers and jurisdiction, including the power of preserving order and of punishing any contempt of his authority as when sitting in court. The circuit judge whom a chief supervisor shall have so informed of the receipt by him of any such petition for supervision shall personally perform and discharge all the duties devolved upon a circuit judge by any law of the United States relating to elections, save where, from any cause, he may be temporarily unable at any time to perform and discharge such duties, in which event he shall assign, in writing, to the performance thereof, in his place, such one or more of the judges of any of the district courts within that State in which the place for which supervision is sought is situated as he may deem best, and he may, from time to time, when necessary, revoke in writing any assignment made by him and, in writing, make a new assignment, or may, in writing, renew any assignment previously made and subsequently revoked; upon any such assignment being made the district judge or judges so assigned shall, during such time as the inability of the circuit judge to act shall continue, possess all of the powers and discharge all the duties devolved by law upon such circuit judge under any law of the United States relating to elections.

"Any male citizen of the United States of good character, a resident and qualified voter in the city or town, county or parish, or in the congressional district in which shall be situated the place in which he is to discharge his duties, and who can read and write the English language, may, at any time between the close of one congressional election and the holding of the next succeeding election at which an election for Representatives or Delegates in Congress is by law required to be held, or at which a special election is ordered to fill a vacancy, apply over his own signature on such blank form as the chief supervisor may prescribe to be appointed a supervisor of election.

"Whoever shall, in any such application, make any false or fraudulent statement, or shall sign thereto, or to any petition provided for in section 2 of this act, any false, fictitious, assumed, or forged name, shall be ineligible for appointment as a supervisor, liable to arrest, and, upon conviction, shall be punished by a fine of not more than $300, or by imprisonment in a county jail for not more than six months, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

"Supervisors of election shall be appointed in the following manner, namely:

"The chief supervisor of elections in any judicial district who has received any petition provided for in section 2 of this act shall thereafter, from time to time, prepare, present, and certify to such circuit court lists of persons whom he shall believe to be eligible for appointment as supervisors of election in the place or places for which petitions for supervision have been received; in preparing such lists the chief supervisor shall not be confined to the applications he may have received, and lists may be presented for each place from which a petition for the supervision of the registration or the election shall have been received, until the court shall have appointed such number as the chief supervisor shall believe to be sufficient to enable him to properly provide for the filling of all election districts or voting precincts within his jurisdiction and the filling of all vacancies which may from any cause be created or arise, which number shall not, however, be less than double the whole number of supervisors which each such city or town, county or parish, or entire congressional district is entitled to the services of. From the appointments so made the chief supervisor shall, from time to time, select for duty, and shall designate and assign for each election district or voting precinct in any such city or town, county or parish, or entire congressional district as they shall have been appointed for, three persons, but two of whom shall be of the same political party; from the three persons so assigned but two of them, who shall be of different political faith, shall be required to perform and discharge any duty prior to the day of election. The appointment of any supervisor of election may be at any time revoked or renewed by the circuit court, and every list of eligible persons presented to such court for appointment as supervisors of election shall, after action thereon by the court, be filed in the office of the chief supervisor of elections, who shall cause the same to be fully entered of record therein in index and tabular form for future reference.

"The chief supervisor of elections in each judicial district shall cause each person appointed a supervisor of election and duly assigned to duty to be notified by mail at his place of business or residence of his appointment and assignment; and thereupon it shall be the duty of every such person to appear at the time and place designated in such notice for the purpose of qualifying. All resignations of supervisors of election must be made in writing and addressed to the chief supervisor, and no resignation shall relieve or excuse any supervisor of election from service until the chief supervisor shall have notified him that his resignation will be recommended to the circuit court for acceptance, and that he is excused from further duty. The chief supervisor of elections may at any time transfer any supervisor from service in one election district to another in the same city or town, in the same county or parish, or in the same congressional district, and upon any day other than a day of registration, revision of registration, or of election may transfer any supervisor to any other duty authorized by the laws of the United States; he may relieve and suspend from duty any supervisor of election who shall fail, neglect, or refuse to perform or discharge his duties, or who shall be found incompetent, or to have made any false or fraudulent statement to secure his appointment, or whose habits shall be deemed prejudicial to a faithful and correct performance of his duties, or whose integrity he shall have reason to doubt, and may detail and assign to the place of any such suspended supervisor, or of any supervisor whose written resignation he shall have received and recommended the acceptance of, another unassigned appointee of the court, of the same political faith, to fill the vacancy so caused; supervisors who have been suspended from duty shall be reported to the court for removal from office. The chief supervisor of elections shall issue to each person appointed a supervisor of election and duly assigned to duty, and who shall have qualified, a certificate under his hand and seal, setting forth his appointment and the election district or other place to which he has been assigned. He shall also designate one of the two supervisors of election assigned to duty in any election district to serve as chairman of the supervisors, and one of the other supervisors to act as chairman during the absence, from any cause, of the chairman, and may revoke any such designations and make others.

"The supervisors of election duly appointed and assigned to duty are hereby declared to be election officers of the United States, but only such supervisors of election shall be entitled to compensation as shall, under the detail or assignment of the chief supervisor of elections, actually do duty, and the term of office of every supervisor of elections, unless sooner terminated by removal or resignation as in this act provided, shall run for and during the period of two months from and after the day of election.

"The supervisors of election appointed under this act who shall have duly qualified and been assigned to duty are, and each of them is, subject to the instructions, directions, and detail of the chief supervisor of elections, charged with the enforcement of the election laws of the United States in that portion of the State or Territory in which is situated the election district, voting precinct, or other place where their or his duty is to be performed under such instructions and detail; they are, and each of them is, authorized and required, subject to the same instructions, directions, and detail, to perform and discharge at any election, general or special, at which a Representative or Delegate in Congress is to be voted for, all the duties now imposed by law upon such officers in cities or towns having 20,000 inhabitants and upward, save where such duties are herein specifically limited to cities or towns containing a designated population, and shall also perform and discharge the following duties:

"First. To attend at all times and places fixed for the registration of voters and at all times and places fixed for any revision of any such registration or for the adding of any name or names to any registration book, list, or roll, or for the striking off or dropping from any such book, list, or roll of the name of any registered person, or for the hearing, passing upon, or deciding of any question as to the right of any person to be registered, to remain upon the registry, or to have his name changed from one registry book, list, or roll to another, whether in the same city, town, county, congressional district, or other place in the State or Territory.

"Second. To challenge the right to register of any person offering himself for registration; also the right of any person found upon any registry book, list, or roll to be or remain thereon, and to require of any officer in charge, or who has the custody of any such registry book or list, to mark the name of any person found thereon for challenge.

"Third. To personally inspect, examine, and scrutinize, at any time, when so directed by the chief supervisor of elections, the original books, rolls, or lists of any registration system which does not require, prior to each election, the personal appearance of all the electors, for the purpose of being registered, and all other or subsequent books, rolls, lists, applications, appeals, decisions, or other papers of any kind or character connected with the making of the original registration books, rolls, or lists, with the addition thereto or with the dropping or striking therefrom of any name or names, and to make a full, complete, and perfect copy of said book or books, roll or rolls, list or lists, and of all papers which in any manner relate to or affect the registry of any person to be or not to be upon the registration books, rolls, or lists.

"Fourth. To attend at all times and places where the electors are required to personally register prior to or for any such election, and to make and keep as full and complete a return of the registration of those persons who may apply for registration, or who may be registered, as is required of State, Territorial, or local election officers serving in the same election districts, and to attend at all times and places for holding elections of Representatives or Delegates in Congress, and for counting all ballots cast at any such election.

"Fifth. To personally inspect and scrutinize the manner in which all registry books, check lists, poll lists, tallies, returns, voting lists, are, and every other paper connected with the registration or voting is, being kept, and where, in their or his opinion, it is necessary for purposes of identification, or where directed by the chief supervisor of elections, to affix his signature to each and every page of the original registration book, roll, or list, and to each and every copy of the said original book, roll, or list made for use, or kept or used, in his election district by any State, Territorial, or local election officer or officers, at such times upon each day when any name may or shall be received, entered, or registered, or may be stricken or dropped from any such original book, roll, or list or any copy thereof, and in such manner as will, in his judgment, detect and expose the improper or wrongful removal therefrom or addition thereto in any manner of any name or names.

"Sixth. To verify, in cities or towns having 5,000 inhabitants or upward, by proper inquiry and examination at the respective places assigned by or to those registered as their residences all such names placed or found upon the registration books, rolls, or lists as the chief supervisor of elections shall require to be so verified, and to make full report thereof to such chief supervisor.

"Seventh. To require the statutory oath or oaths to be immediately put to any voter whose right to vote shall be challenged, and in case the State, Territorial, or local election officers shall neglect or refuse to immediately put such oath or oaths, and to at once pass upon the qualifications of any such challenged person, then it shall be the duty of the chairman of the supervisors, or in his absence the duty of either of his associates who may be present, to, without delay, put such oath or oaths, whereupon the supervisors of election present shall promptly pass upon the qualifications of such person. If the State, Territorial, or local election officers shall have acted as provided herein and decided the challenged person to be a qualified voter, or if acting hereunder the supervisors of election shall have so decided, then and in that event it shall be the duty of the State, Territorial, or local election officers who shall have so decided, or if they did not act hereunder and the supervisors of election did, then it shall be the duty of the supervisors of election who did so act and so decide to receive the vote of such challenged person and to deposit it in the ballot box provided for votes cast for a Representative or Delegate in Congress. It shall be the duty of every supervisor of election to make and keep in his record or return of the registration in the back of the poll book or list, or in some other book, a record of all challenged persons and of the challengers.

"Eighth. To personally examine and inspect on the morning of the day of any election at which a Representative or Delegate in Congress is to be voted for, and before any ballot shall be deposited by any officer or elector in any box intended to receive any ballots for any office whatsoever, the interior of each and every box, whatever ballots it may be intended to deposit therein, for the purpose of ascertaining that at that time there are no ballots for any candidate for such office of Representative or Delegate in Congress therein.

"Ninth. To make and keep on the day of election a poll list of all persons voting at such election. Such poll list, if there be a registration, shall be kept by such one or more of the supervisors as shall be designated by the chief supervisor in the book containing the supervisor's return of the registration by proper marks showing who has voted. If there be no registration the supervisors of election, or that one or more of them who shall be designated by the chief supervisor of election, shall keep a poll list, in which he shall enter the name and residence of the person voting, and his number in the order of his voting; to also make and keep in said poll books a separate list of rejected voters, in which shall be entered the name and residence of each person whose vote shall be rejected by the State, Territorial, or local election officers, and the reasons given for each such rejection; all such ballots of rejected voters, if tendered to the supervisors of election, shall be received by them; the name of the person tendering the same shall be written on the back thereof, and all such ballots so received shall be placed in a suitable envelope prepared for that purpose.

"Tenth. To make, certify, and forward, as in this act provided, all such statements, certificates, and returns of the canvass of the votes cast in his election district or voting precinct as are specially provided for herein, and such others as the chief supervisor of elections shall in accordance with now-existing laws direct and require.

"Eleventh. To make, in any city or town having 20,000 inhabitants or upward, at any time between the Tuesday five weeks preceding the day of any election at which a Representative or Delegate in Congress is to be voted for and the day of election, a thorough and effective house-to-house canvass of the whole or any portion of any election district or voting precinct which they shall be directed by the chief supervisor of elections to visit and canvass; to ascertain by inquiry at any dwelling, building, or other place of abode in any such election district or voting precinct which they may be required to so canvass the name, age, nativity, term of residence in country, State, city, county, parish, district, or precinct, and other qualifications as a voter of every male person therein residing; to make full report, in writing, to the chief supervisor of elections of all answers and information obtained by them in response to their inquiries so made, and upon the completion of their work to file their reports with said chief supervisor.

"Twelfth. To make, in any city or town having 20,000 inhabitants or upward, when required by the chief supervisor, a list of all such persons as shall be naturalized in any court therein, the date of their naturalization, whether as a minor or otherwise, with the residence of such persons, their place of nativity, and the name and residence of their witness, and for such purpose shall have at all times access to and the right to examine the original affidavits or applications presented or which have been presented to said courts and there filed. Such lists so made shall be filed in the office of the chief supervisor.

"Thirteenth. To inform all voters who may inquire of them in what box any of their ballots should properly be placed and to prevent, as far as possible, the depositing of any ballot in the wrong box.

"Fourteenth. To observe and scrutinize the manner in which naturalizations are being made and to aid the court in the matter of preventing fraudulent naturalizations, and for these purposes to have at all times free access to all rooms where such proceedings are being conducted.

"The provisions of this subdivision to apply only to such discreet or special supervisors as shall, from time to time, be directed and detailed by the chief supervisor of elections for this particular duty, in cities or towns having 20,000 inhabitants and upward, save that when a chief supervisor of elections shall have reason to believe that actual fraud or perjury has been, is being, or is about to be committed in the matter of naturalization in any particular city, town, village, or other place having less than 20,000 inhabitants, he shall take measures to ascertain the facts and expose and prevent the same, and in so doing may detail such supervisors of election as he may select to aid him therein, and such supervisors shall have all the power and authority conferred upon supervisors in cities of 20,000 inhabitants and upward.

"Hereafter all votes cast for the office of Representative or Delegate in Congress shall be counted, canvassed, certified, and returned in the manner hereinafter provided, and any State, Territorial, or municipal law or ordinance in so far as it conflicts herewith is hereby annulled.

"It shall be the duty of the State, Territorial, or local election officers in each election district or voting precinct in the United States whose duties are similar to those who are generally known as inspectors of election or as canvassers, and who will hereafter be referred to herein as inspectors of election, to count and canvass the ballots cast for such office in the manner provided by the laws of their respective States or Territories, as made to apply to the election district in which they are serving, save that in the below-mentioned particulars the methods herein set forth shall be followed, and no other.

"The counting of all such ballots shall be by tens and shall be begun and continued, as follows, until completed:

"The counting of such ballots shall begin by one of the inspectors of election counting out 10 ballots and carefully examining each name on each of said ballots. Such officer shall then pass the said 10 ballots as rapidly as counted by him to one of the supervisors of election, who shall count them in the same manner and pass them to another of the inspectors of election, who shall count them in the same manner and pass them to a third inspector of election, if there be one present, who shall count them in the same manner and pass them to the third supervisor of elections, who shall count them in the same manner and pass them to the fourth inspector of election, if there shall be one present. The chairman or acting chairman of the inspectors of election shall then call aloud the names of the persons contained in the ballots so counted and the office for which each person named therein is designated, and the poll clerks, or the State, Territorial, or local election officers answering thereto, who will be hereafter designated herein as poll clerks, shall tally the votes for each of said persons. The chairman or acting chairman of the supervisors shall then call aloud the names of the persons contained in the ballots so counted and the office for which each person named therein is designated, and each of the supervisors of election shall tally the votes for each of such persons. When the counting of all ballots found in the congressional box for any one candidate shall be wholly completed, the poll clerks and the supervisors of election shall compare their tallies, the poll clerks with each other and the supervisors of election with each other, and then the poll clerks with the supervisors of election, and they shall ascertain the total number of ballots for the candidate so canvassed, and when it shall appear that the poll clerks and the supervisors of election both agree upon the number one of the inspectors shall announce the result in a loud voice; if the poll clerks and the supervisors of election can not agree as to the number, then the chairman or acting chairman of the inspectors of election shall in a loud voice announce the result which the poll clerks have reached, and the chairman or acting chairman of the supervisors of election shall announce the result which the United States officers have arrived at. The ballots of each candidate shall be canvassed in succession in the same manner, but the ballots containing names partly from one kind of ballots and partly from another, being those usually called 'split tickets' and those from which the name of a person proper to be voted for on such ballots has been omitted or erased, usually called 'scratched tickets,' shall then be canvassed separately by one of the inspectors of election and one of the supervisors of election, sitting between the other inspectors of election on the one side and the other supervisors of election on the other side; the inspector of election shall then call off each name and the office for which it is designated to the poll clerks, and shall then pass each ballot to the supervisor of election, who shall call off each name and the office for which it is designated to his associate supervisors. The poll clerks and the supervisors of election to whom any such ballots shall be called off shall at once make a note of the same, and when all the ballots found in the congressional box which contain a vote for a Representative or Delegate in Congress have been canvassed in the manner herein provided for, the poll clerks shall compare their tallies together and the two sets of officers shall then compare their tallies each with the other, and if they agree upon the numbers the chairman or acting chairman of the inspectors of election shall announce in a loud voice the number of votes received by each candidate on 'straight ballots,' the number received by him on the 'split' and 'scratched' ballots, and the total number of votes received by him as found in that box; if the poll clerks and the supervisors of election do not agree upon the number of ballots, then an announcement of that fact shall be made by the chairman or acting chairman of the inspectors of election and by the chairman or acting chairman of the supervisors of election, each of whom shall also announce the number of votes received by each candidate in the same manner as is provided herein in case of a failure of the poll clerks and supervisors of election to agree as to the total number of ballots received by a candidate.

"No certificate, statement, or return of the final result of the count and canvass of the votes cast for a Representative or Delegate in Congress shall be written upon, filled up, or signed by any election officer, National, State, Territorial, or local, or by any person whomsoever until the final count of all ballots cast for every other office than that of Representative or Delegate in Congress shall have been wholly completed by all persons authorized by law to count the same and the certificates, statements, and returns of the result thereof shall have been wholly made out and completed. If, during the count and canvass of the ballots contained in any box other than that intended for the reception of ballots for the office of Representative or Delegate in Congress, there shall be found any ballot or ballots for the office of Representative or Delegate in Congress it shall be the duty of the chairman or acting chairman of the inspectors of election to count the number of such ballots so found and then to deliver them to the chairman or acting chairman of the supervisors of election, who shall count them and immediately place them in an envelope and seal them up, marking upon the outside of the envelope the number of ballots so placed therein and the box from which they were taken.

"If at any time the whole number of ballots found in any box intended for the reception of ballots cast for the office of Representative or Delegate in Congress which properly belong therein shall exceed the total number of persons who shall have voted that day in the election district, then in such case it shall be the duty of the chairman or acting chairman of the inspectors of election and of the chairman or acting chairman of the supervisors of election to place in the said congressional box all the ballots found to have been cast therein for the office of Representative or Delegate in Congress, and to thoroughly mingle the same when, if such excess shall be but one ballot, one of the inspectors of election, and if such excess shall exceed one ballot, then one of the inspectors of election and one of the supervisors of election shall be blindfolded and placed with his back or their backs to the said box, from which they shall publicly draw so many ballots as shall be equal to the excess, which ballots shall be forthwith destroyed and the votes for the persons named in such withdrawn ballots shall be deducted from the votes entered for such persons on the tallies. Where the ballots drawn from any such box are to be drawn by an inspector of election and a supervisor of election, such drawing shall be done as follows: The first ballot shall be drawn by the inspector of election and the second ballot by the supervisor of election; all ballots drawn thereafter shall be drawn by each of said officers alternately.

"The canvass of the ballots as provided above shall be completed by ascertaining how many ballots of the same kind, corresponding in respect to the names of the persons thereon and the offices for which they are designated, have been received, and, the result being found, the inspectors of election shall make, in accordance with the provisions of the State, Territorial, or local laws under which they are serving as such officers, save where the same may be modified herein, all such statements, certificates, or returns as under such laws they are required to make; and the supervisors of election shall make duplicate statements of the result of the canvass, and any State, Territorial, or municipal law or ordinance to the contrary notwithstanding; they shall securely paste or attach to each of said statements of such canvass, which statements shall be respectively numbered 1 and 2, one ballot of each kind, size, style, or form found to have been cast for each candidate for the office of Representative or Delegate in Congress, and they shall state in words at full length, immediately opposite such ballot, and written partly on such ballot and partly on the paper to which it shall be pasted or attached, the whole number of all the ballots that were received which correspond as to kind, size, style, or form with the one so pasted or attached, so that one of each kind, size, style, or form of the ballots received at such election for such officers shall be pasted or attached to such statement and certificate of such canvass. If only one ballot of any kind shall be found in the boxes it shall be pasted or attached to statement No. 1, and if only two ballots of one kind are found in the boxes one shall be pasted or attached to each statement. They shall also paste or attach to statement No. 1, or shall securely seal up and forward with such statement, all the ballots containing the name of any candidate for Representative or Delegate in Congress which shall have been rejected either by the inspectors of election or by the supervisors of election as being in whole or in part defective. Each such ballot shall have written across the back thereof, before being inclosed, a statement showing by whom it was rejected, and each of the duplicate statements shall show the whole number of votes given for each person for the office of Representative or Delegate in Congress, which statement shall be written or partly written and partly printed in words at length, and at the end thereof a certificate that such statement is correct in all respects; such certificate and each sheet of paper forming part of the statement shall be subscribed by each of the supervisors of election present. If any supervisor of election desires, after subscribing the same, to say anything touching the statement so subscribed by him, he shall be at liberty to do so, but he must immediately put the same in writing, in duplicate, and one copy thereof shall be inclosed with each statement so subscribed by him.

"When the inspectors of election shall have completed such statements, certificates, or returns of their count and canvass of all such ballots cast for the office of Representative or Delegate in Congress as under the provisions of this act they are required to count and canvass—which certificates, statements, or returns shall be made in accordance with the provisions of the State, Territorial, or local election law applicable in the election district or voting precinct in which they are serving, save that any State, Territorial, or municipal law or ordinance to the contrary notwithstanding, they shall show the whole number of ballots cast and canvassed for such office, and the whole number of ballots cast for each person for such office, and make separate return of all votes cast for Representative or Delegate in Congress found in boxes other than the congressional box; it shall be their duty to compare each of such statements, certificates, or returns with the other; when the supervisors of election shall have completed their statements and certificates of all such ballots as herein provided, it shall be their duty to compare each with the other, and then the said inspectors of election and the said supervisors of election shall compare each class of officers with the other class the result set forth in their respective certificates and statements.

"If differences shall be found to exist in the facts stated in said two sets of statements and certificates so compared the supervisors of election shall make a signed memorandum of the differences and attach the same to or inclose the same with their statement No. 1. The statements, certificates, or returns of the inspectors of election shall then be disposed of as provided by the State, Territorial, or local laws governing their action in the matter, and the statements and certificates of the supervisors of election shall be disposed of in the following manner:

"Each of such duplicate statements and certificates shall be inclosed in an envelope, which then shall be securely sealed, and each of the supervisors of election shall then write his name, official position, and home address across every fold at which each envelope, if unfastened, could be opened. The envelope containing statements and certificates No. 1 shall then be directed on the outside to the chief supervisor of elections, under whom the supervisors of election who made the statements or certificates so inclosed shall be serving. The envelope containing statement and certificate No. 2 shall be directed to the clerk of the United States circuit court for the same judicial district as that which the chief supervisor, to whom statement and certificate No. 1 is sent, represents. The tallies of the supervisors of election shall also be inclosed in another enevelope, which shall be securely sealed, similarly signed across each fold, and directed to the same chief supervisor of elections. All such sealed envelopes must then be taken by the supervisors of election, or such one or more of them as shall be designated by the chief supervisor of elections, and at the earliest moment thereafter, and within 24 hours from the close of the canvass of the ballots, must be deposited in the mail.

"It shall be the duty of each of the officers to whom, by the laws of the United States, any statements, certificates, tallies, or other papers or documents mentioned in the preceding section shall be addressed to receive and carefully preserve all such envelopes, papers, and documents. The one forwarded the clerk of the circuit court of the United States in any judicial district shall not be opened until such time and place as the same may be lawfully opened. The envelopes addressed to the chief supervisor of elections and received by him shall be at once opened upon their receipt, and the papers therein contained, together with the envelopes, shall be together preserved and filed. From the papers so received the chief supervisor shall tabulate, for presentation and reference to the United States board of canvassers of the congressional vote, the results as they appear therefrom in each congressional district under his jurisdiction in which this act has been enforced.

"If any one or more of the supervisors of election assigned for service in any election district shall from any cause at any time be absent or unable to perform and discharge any duty imposed upon him by the laws of the United States, his or their place shall, if possible, be at once filled by the chief supervisor of elections as provided by law, but, until it shall be so filled by another supervisor or other supervisors, all the duties imposed or required by law to be performed by the supervisors of election shall devolve upon and be performed by such one or more supervisors as are present at such election district or voting precinct, and such supervisor or supervisors shall at the time, if possible, report any absentee, and if not possible then so to do then immediately after the close of the canvass of votes he or they shall make and sign a report as to such absentee or absentees and the hours of their absence and inclose it with their tallies to the chief supervisor of elections.

"If in any election district or voting precinct, where supervisors of election have been appointed as provided in this act, no polls shall be opened as required by the laws of the State within one hour from the time such polls should be opened, then it shall be the duty of the supervisors present to open the polls for the reception of ballots for Representative or Delegate in Congress only. They shall conduct said election as provided by the laws of the State in which the election is held, save where the same are modified, annulled, or changed by the laws of the United States, and shall make, in addition to the statements and certificates required by the laws of the United States, such number of statements, certificates, or returns of the count and canvass of all such ballots as are by the State or Territorial election laws required, and such returns shall be made to such authorities as are provided in such State or Territorial laws. The returns so made under State or Territorial laws shall each be accompanied by a statement of the circumstances under which such election was held, and the returns so made shall be received, tabulated, canvassed, and certified and declared by the proper local, State, or Territorial authorities the same as if the election had been held and conducted by the State, Territorial, or local election officers.

"It shall be the duty of each chief supervisor of election, on or before the 1st day of September next following the passage of this act, to cause a judge of the circuit court of the United States in his judicial district to be informed in writing that it is necessary that the circuit court should be opened for the purpose of complying with the provisions of this section.

"It shall be the duty of the circuit judge who shall be so informed, on or before the 1st day of October next following the date of any communication containing such information, to personally open and hold a circuit court of the United States in such judicial district in such one of the States comprising his judicial circuit as shall be most convenient to him, and within 10 days thereafter the said circuit court, so held by said circuit judge, shall, for each State within the said judicial circuit, appoint three persons of good standing and repute, citizens of the United States and citizens and residents of the State for which they shall be appointed, who shall be known as the United States board of canvassers of the congressional vote within and for the State for which they shall be appointed; one of said three persons shall, when appointed, be named as chairman of the board. Such persons shall be sworn to the faithful performance of their duty and to support and defend the Constitution of the United States. They shall each hold their office so long as faithful and capable, and not more than two of them shall belong to the same political party; they shall each receive a salary of $15 a day for each day actually employed in the work of canvassing the statements and certificates of ballots cast at any election, general or special, for a Representative or Delegate in Congress and a further sum of $5 per day for their personal expenses. They shall have a seal and may appoint a clerk, who shall receive $12 a day for his services and expenses while actually in attendance upon said board. As a board it shall be the duty of such appointees of the said circuit court to convene on the 15th day of November of each even year, unless the same shall fall upon Sunday, when they shall convene on the following day. In case of a special election they shall convene one week from the day of such special election. They shall so convene at such place in their State as shall be most convenient for them, which place must, however, be a place where a term of the circuit court of the United States is by law regularly held, and there proceed to finally canvass and tabulate the votes which shall have been stated and certified as cast for Representative or Delegate in Congress in each congressional district in their State in and throughout which this act shall have been enforced, and not elsewhere, and shall declare and certify the result of the election thereof in each such district.

"For the purposes aforesaid they shall use the statements and certificates and such accompanying papers, if any, as shall have been forwarded to the clerk of the circuit court of the United States in the several judicial districts in their State, and the same shall be, by such officers, produced before the said board for such purpose; when opened by the chairman or acting chairman of the said board he shall mark each separate sheet of each such statement and certificate as shall be contained therein with the initials of his name. The said board may also require the production before it of such certificates and statements and such accompanying papers and tallies filed with the several chief supervisors of elections in the same judicial districts as shall be necessary, for examination and comparison by said board, where it shall appear by a comparison of the tabulated returns furnished for their inspection and reference by such chief supervisors, as provided in this act, with the statements and certificates filed with the several clerks of the circuit courts, that there are discrepancies or errors existing. It shall also be authorized and empowered to summon and compel the attendance before it of the supervisors of election who served on election day in any election district in and from which there shall be found to exist incomplete, imperfect, or inconsistent certificates and statements, and to examine such officers for the purpose of ascertaining whether such certificates and statements are imperfect or inconsistent and of arriving at the facts. Any supervisor of election who shall fail, neglect, or refuse, without good and sufficient excuse, to obey any summons of said board to so attend at the time and place required therein, shall be liable to arrest, and upon conviction shall be punished by a fine of not more than $500, or by imprisonment for not more than one year, or by both such fine and imprisonment. The marshal of the United States in the judicial district in which any such board of canvassers shall be convened shall detail one of his deputies to attend its sessions and preserve order thereat. Such marshal shall, by his deputies, serve all summonses of said board.

"The determination arrived at and stated in the declarations and certificates of any such United States board of canvassers shall, as to each such congressional district, be at once made public, and the declaration and certificate for each congressional district shall be made in triplicate, be signed by each member of the board, and have affixed thereto the seal of said board; one shall be filed in the office of the chief supervisor of elections, under whose supervision the congressional district covered by it was, together with all the papers and documents used, or which might by law be used, before such board for the purpose of ascertaining, declaring, and certifying the result in said congressional district; another shall be forwarded by mail to the person found by them to have been elected, addressed to him at his place of residence; the third copy shall be similarly forwarded to the Clerk of the House of Representatives of the United States at Washington. In case no person be found duly elected in any district a certificate of that fact shall be made by said board in triplicate, under their hands and seals, and forwarded as follows: One to the governor of the State, another to the Clerk of the House of Representatives, and the third to the proper chief supervisor of elections.

"The final declaration and certificate of said board as to the result in each and every congressional district shall be completed and transmitted to the Clerk of the House of Representatives as soon as practicable, and in no event later than the last day of the month in which by law said board is to convene.

"Upon the receipt by the Clerk of the House of Representatives of the declaration and certificate of any United States board of canvassers of the congressional vote as to the election of any Representative or Delegate in Congress it shall be the duty of that officer to open and file the same in his office. If by such declaration and certificate it shall appear that another and different person has been elected as a Representative or Delegate in Congress than the person certified as elected by such officer or officers of the State in which such congressional district is situated, whose duty it is by the laws of the State to make such certificate, then the person so certified as elected by the declaration and certificate of the United States board of canvassers shall be, by the said Clerk of the House of Representatives, placed upon the rolls of persons elected as Representatives or Delegates in Congress, and the provisions of existing law respecting the names of persons who shall be placed upon the roll of the House of Representatives by the Clerk thereof are modified to the extent herein provided, and to such extent only. Any Clerk of the House of Representatives who shall neglect, fail, or refuse to place upon the roll of Representatives and Delegates elect the name of any person entitled to be placed thereon as provided by the laws of the United States, shall be liable to arrest, and upon conviction of such neglect, failure, or refusal, shall be punished by a fine not less than $1,000 nor more than $5,000, or by imprisonment for not less than one nor more than five years, or by both such fine and imprisonment, and shall be forever disqualified from holding thereafter any office of trust or profit under the Government of the United States.

"The Attorney General of the United States shall seasonably before every election cause to be prepared and furnished all such blanks and forms as may be needed for the complete performance of their duties by the United States boards of canvassers of the congressional vote in this act provided for and shall furnish and supply the same to them; the accounts for such compensation and expenses as are provided by law for the members of the United States boards of canvassers of the congressional vote, and for the clerk of any such board, shall be, by the accounting officers of the Treasury, allowed and paid each such member and clerk, upon his oath as to his days of service and the certificate of the chairman of any such board as to the correctness of the account of any member or clerk of that board of which he shall be chairman; such allowance and payment shall be made from the permanent appropriation therefor provided by law.

"Any United States board of canvassers appointed under the provisions of this act for any State may in all cases act by a majority of its members, but in case either of them dissents from any decision, act, or certificate of his associates he may annex a certificate of such dissent and of his reasons therefor to each of the triplicate certificates and declarations of said board, and the same shall be transmitted therewith.

"Supervisors of election in any city or town having 20,000 inhabitants or upward shall be entitled to compensation for not more than 12 days; in such other places in which there is a registration for not more than six days, and where there is no registration for not more than three days; within such limits there shall be allowed and paid them, in any city or town having 100,000 inhabitants or upward, $5 per day for each day of actual service other than the day of election, and for election day $10, and in all other places for each day of actual service $5 per day. Special deputy marshals shall be allowed and paid for each day of actual service, not exceeding eight days, the sum of $5 per day. The chief supervisor of elections may require from each supervisor of election a written report of the day or days upon which he served, which report shall be filed in his office and shall be compared with such other records relating thereto as shall be found therein; the result of the comparison so made shall be the basis of the chief supervisor's certificate as to the period of service of the several supervisors of election. The marshal of the United States in any judicial district who shall appoint any special deputy marshals shall require of each of them a similar report of the day or days upon which he served; he shall pay all supervisors of election and special deputy marshals in his judicial district upon their oath as to their service, and his accounts for all such payments shall be presented, examined, and certified as now provided by law. Every supervisor of election who shall have faithfully performed his duty as such officer shall be exempt from all jury duty in the United States courts in the judicial district in which he served for the period of one year from the date of his qualification as a supervisor; but no supervisor of election and no special deputy marshal who shall fail to fully perform and discharge each day, when on duty, all the duties required of him shall be entitled to pay for any day when he shall have so failed.

"No person shall be appointed a special deputy marshal who shall not be able to read and write the English language. Special deputy marshals, when required by the chief supervisor of elections, shall aid and assist the supervisors of elections in making the house canvass provided for in this act; the number of special deputy marshals who may under any provision of law be appointed for election purposes shall be determined from time to time at conferences between the marshal and the chief supervisor of elections, and no other or greater number of special deputies shall be appointed than the chief supervisor of election shall from time to time certify to be, in his opinion, necessary to observe the manner in which the election officers are discharging their duties to enforce the election laws of the United States and to prevent frauds and irregularities in naturalization. In the making of assignments of such special deputy marshals as shall be appointed the marshal shall be governed by the request of the chief supervisor of elections, and it is further made the duty of the special deputy marshals, and each of them is hereby required, if directed by the chief supervisor of elections, to take charge of such returns of the canvass of the votes found in any box which under existing law the chief supervisor may require to be made to him by the supervisors of election as rapidly as the canvass of each box is completed and the returns thereof are made out and signed by the supervisors, and to at once, in such manner and at such place as the chief supervisor shall direct, safely deliver to him all such returns so intrusted to their care and custody; one-third of the special deputy marshals appointed in any authorized place must and shall be taken and named from such lists of persons as shall be forwarded the marshal by the chief supervisor of elections, and the office of every chief supervisor of elections shall be in the city, town, or other place in which he resides, and if therein there shall be a public building, the property of the United States, it is hereby made the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to assign to the use of such officer such necessary rooms therein as shall not be needed and occupied by the courts of the United States, the judges and clerks thereof, the district attorney, the marshal of the United States, and the post office—to the exclusion of all other occupants; if the said Secretary shall not be able in any such city, town, or other place so to assign the necessary rooms for the use and occupancy of any such chief supervisor of elections in such building, then, and in that event, he shall assign him therein room at least sufficient for his use as a record room, and shall fit the same up in a suitable manner for such use and shall then hire and furnish for him the necessary and requisite rooms for his office and working use in such other building in said city as may be selected by said chief supervisor and agreed to by the Secretary of the Treasury, and the annual rent of such rooms so hired and the cost of furnishing the same shall be paid by the said Secretary from the Treasury of the United States from the permanent appropriation provided by law therefor; and the same action as to hiring and furnishing offices for a chief supervisor shall be had and taken in any such city, town, or other place of residence of a chief supervisor in which there shall be no public building, the property of the United States, and a portion of which shall be occupied by the courts or the post office.

"The chief supervisor of elections in any judicial district shall prepare and furnish all blank applications for the use of those who may desire to be appointed supervisors of election, blank lists for use in presenting the names of eligible persons to the circuit court, envelopes and stationery for his office use and for the use of the supervisors of election, and all blanks, forms, books, certificates, reports, statements, returns, and instructions necessary for his own use or the use and direction of the supervisors of election within his jurisdiction or the use of the special deputy marshals, when aiding the supervisors of elections as herein required or provided for; also all such maps of congressional and election district boundaries in cities of 20,000 inhabitants or upward as may be necessary for his own use or the use of the supervisors of election, and such county and other maps as he may need for his guidance in dealing with official matters within his jurisdiction; he shall file all applications for appointment as supervisors of elections, all oaths of office of supervisors of election and special deputy marshals, all returns of the canvass of votes, all reports, and all statements and certificates of the canvass of votes, all tally sheets, poll lists, and all other papers contemplated, allowed, or made requisite by the provisions of this act, together with all letters and telegrams received by him in his official capacity relating to election matters; he shall keep and file copies of his official letters and telegrams sent upon the same matters.

"Upon the passage of this act the term of office of any chief supervisor of elections, who shall also be a clerk of either the circuit or district court, or both, in any judicial district, shall at once cease and determine, and thereafter no person shall be appointed a chief supervisor of elections who is, nor shall any person hold the office of chief supervisor of elections who shall, be appointed a clerk or deputy clerk of any circuit or district court of the United States; and in any judicial district in and for which no chief supervisor of election shall have heretofore been appointed, or in which there shall, any time after the passage of this act, be a vacancy in such office, it shall be the duty of the circuit court therein to appoint from among the circuit court commissioners one of such officers the chief supervisor of elections in and for the judicial district for which he is a commissioner; and each such chief supervisor of elections and each chief supervisor of elections now in office and not disqualified or removed by the provisions of this act shall, so long as faithful and capable, hold such office and perform and discharge the duties imposed upon him by any law of the United States.

"It shall be the duty of each chief supervisor of elections, within not less than 14 days of the day of election, to forward to the marshal of the United States in his judicial district an estimate of such amount of money as will cover the pay of the supervisors of election for their services. Such estimate shall be immediately forwarded by the marshal to the Attorney General of the United States, whose duty it shall be, without delay, and before the day of election, to cause to be deposited in a subtreasury or in a Government depository in the judicial district from which the estimate shall be sent, to the credit of the marshal of the United States for said district, the sum of money so estimated to be required. Such money so deposited shall, with all possible promptness and dispatch, and within not exceeding 20 days after the day of election, be paid by the marshal to the supervisors of election in such sums as shall be shown by the certificate of the chief supervisor of elections to be due them. Such certificate shall be attached to a pay roll, which shall include as far as practicable, at the time made, the names of all the supervisors who served and the days of such service, and a duplicate of such certificate and pay roll shall be filed in the office of the chief supervisor. Any chief supervisor of elections may at any time and from time to time subsequent to the making of the estimate hereinabove provided for make a further estimate, if the preceding one shall be found not to be sufficient, and it shall be similarly forwarded, similarly treated, and as near as may be as to time similarly disbursed. Payments to supervisors of election shall, in each instance, be made by check drawn to the order of the supervisor of election to whom the sum called for is due and payable.

"All notices, lists, applications, appointments, oaths of office, returns of registry, reports, poll books or lists, tally sheets, returns of house canvass, verification reports, returns of the canvass of votes and also all statements and certificates of the canvass of all votes cast at any election at which a Representative or Delegate in Congress is voted for, and all other documents contemplated, authorized, or required under any law of the United States relating to elections to be made or kept by the chief supervisor of elections, by the supervisors of election, or the special deputy marshals, or which are authorized or required under any law of the United States to be filed with the chief supervisor of elections, are hereby made records of his office, and to the end that they may be preserved, both for reference and the most speedy use and service, they shall be fully entered of record in either index or tabular form, or both such forms of entering may together be employed in entering any record; but no entering of record of the reports of the house canvass provided for in this act shall extend beyond the block number and the number or name of the election and ward or assembly district, and the name and residence of those males who are shown to be 21 years of age and upward and who claim the right to vote; nor shall there be any entering of record of the contents of any statement and certificate of the supervisors of election originally filed with the clerk of the circuit court of the United States, and subsequently filed with the chief supervisor of elections by the United States board of canvassers in this act provided for, nor of the tallies of the supervisors of election, and the only entering of record which shall be made of the statements and certificates forwarded to the chief supervisor of elections under the provisions of this act shall be in tabular form. There shall be allowed and paid to the chief supervisor of elections for his services as such officer the following compensation, apart from and in excess of all fees allowed by law for the performance of any duty as circuit court commissioner: For filing and caring for every return, report, application, oath of office, or other paper or document contemplated, authorized, or required to be filed with or by him, under any law of the United States, 10 cents; for affixing a seal to any certificate order of detail or assignment or any report required to be made by him under any law of the United States, 20 cents; for entering of record in such form as is by law provided by law the records of his office, 15 cents per folio; for arranging and transmitting to Congress any report, statement, return, record, or examination authorized or required by law to be so transmitted, and for tabulating and transmitting to the proper national board of canvassers of the congressional vote such tables as by law he is authorized or required to so tabulate and transmit, 15 cents for each folio; for any copy thereof or of any paper on file in his office, a like sum; and there shall be allowed and refunded to him in his accounts upon the vouchers therefor all bills paid by him for the printing and furnishing of the various forms, blanks, certificates, instructions, books, maps, and record and index volumes required for his use or the use of the supervisors of election, or which may be authorized herein, together with all bills paid by him for envelopes or other stationery authorized or necessary to be purchased and for telegraph or telephone service, or both, but no chief supervisor of elections shall be entitled to any fee for drawing instructions to supervisors or for furnishing any copy thereof to any supervisor, but he shall prepare all such instructions and cause them to be printed and distributed.

"The chief supervisor of elections shall, in his capacity of circuit court commissioner, have full power and authority to administer the oaths of office and of service to supervisors of election and special deputy marshals, and such oaths shall be administered by him or by such one or more of the circuit court commissioners in his judicial district as he shall from time to time designate; and such commissioner or commissioners shall have full power and authority to administer all such oaths, and shall administer them, and there shall be allowed and paid by the accounting officers of the Treasury to any circuit court commissioner who shall, under the provisions of this section, administer such oaths of office, or of service, the sum of 10 cents for administering each such oath and 15 cents for certifying to the same; and every chief supervisor shall issue to each supervisor of elections who, under the provisions of this act, is exempted from jury duty a certificate under seal showing such service and exemption.

"The circuit court of the United States in any judicial district may, upon the request of the chief supervisor of elections, appoint such one of the circuit court commissioners as such chief supervisor shall designate, unless there be some good and substantial reason why such appointment should not be made, to be deputy chief supervisor of elections. Such deputy shall perform and discharge from time to time all such duties as shall be assigned him by the chief supervisor of elections, and shall, in the absence, illness, resignation, removal, or death of the chief supervisor, act in his place; the said circuit court may also, upon the request of the chief supervisor of elections in any such judicial district, appoint such person as the said chief supervisor of elections shall designate, unless there shall exist some good and substantial reason why such appointment should not be made, as chief clerk of the chief supervisor's office. Such chief clerk shall perform and discharge from time to time all such duties as shall be assigned him by the chief supervisor or the deputy chief supervisor when acting as chief supervisor, and the compensation of such deputy chief supervisor and such chief clerk shall be such as shall be agreed upon between each such officer and the chief supervisor of elections and shall be borne by the chief supervisor.

"In the matter of the accounts of chief supervisors of elections, it is hereby provided that such accounts, both for services rendered and bills paid, may be rendered from time to time, either as a whole or in part, but when only partly rendered shall so state, and when made out shall be presented to either the circuit or district judge in the district in which the chief supervisor acts; they shall be sworn to before such judge, who shall have the right and authority to examine the chief supervisor under oath as to the work done, the accuracy of the count of such work, and the fees charged for the respective services; that after such examination and such inspection of the chief supervisor's office as the judge may deem necessary to make to satisfy himself that the work has been actually done and the fees charged therefor are those provided by law and the bills annexed are by law properly chargeable and have been actually and necessarily incurred and paid, it shall be his duty to certify the said accounts in the following words and figures, to wit:

"'In the matter of the accounts of ———, as chief supervisor of elections for the ——— district of ——— for the election held in ——— on the — day of ———, at which Representatives in Congress were voted for.

"'———, chief supervisor of elections for the ——— of ———, having this day presented to me in duplicate his accounts (in whole or in part, as the case may be) as chief supervisor for the election hereinabove mentioned, I hereby certify that I have examined the same and have also examined the said ——— under oath, as to the work performed by him and the extent and amount of the same, as well as the mode adopted by him in ascertaining the amount of the work so done and charged for by him; and being satisfied by my examination of him and of the work for which he has charged that the same has been actually done, that the fees charged therefor are the statutory fees, and that the bills annexed to said account are lawfully charged to the United States, have been actually and necessarily incurred, and have been paid, I do approve and allow the said accounts in the sum of ———.

"———, Judge.'"

"Such accounts, made in whole or in part after such certification, approval, and allowance by a circuit or district judge, shall be forwarded to the Treasury of the United States for payment, and it shall be the duty of such accounting officers of the Treasury as shall have cognizance thereof to treat the same as 'special,' and to allow, state, and pay the same without delay as approved and allowed by the judge who passed them, save that any clerical errors found in figures or footings may be corrected by them. Suit may be brought by any chief supervisor for the whole or any portion of any account therefor either in the Court of Claims or in the circuit court in his judicial district, and from the judgment of said court, or any part thereof, either party to the action may appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States without regard to the amount thereof; unless such appeal shall be taken within 30 days from the rendition of judgment by the court in which suit was brought the full amount of the judgment shall at once be allowed and paid by the accounting officers of the Treasury from the permanent appropriation for chief supervisors' fees; all suits involving the fees of chief supervisors and the compensation of supervisors and special deputy marshals shall, in all courts of the United States, be preferred causes and shall be heard and disposed of without delay; and all judgments in such cases must be promptly paid by the accounting officers of the Treasury from the permanent appropriation provided for the payment of such officers. All the provisions of this section shall also apply to all accounts of United States commissioners for services rendered in cases arising under the election laws of the United States, save such as relate to their certification and approval, and their payment from any permanent appropriation.

"So much of section 3689 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, title 41, 'appropriations,' as relates to 'the permanent annual appropriation' for 'fees of supervisors of election' and is contained under the head 'judicial' and subhead 'miscellaneous,' is hereby repealed, and the same shall hereafter read as follows:

"'MISCELLANEOUS PERMANENT APPROPRIATIONS.

"'Accounts of chief supervisors of elections for fees and disbursements provided by law, and for the rent and furnishing of all needed office accommodations for such officers, compensation of supervisors of election and special deputy marshals, and compensation and expenses of the United States boards of canvassers of the congressional votes, and their clerk.

"'To pay chief supervisors of elections compensation and disbursements apart from and in excess of all fees allowed by law for the performance of any duty as circuit commissioners, and to pay rents and bills for furnishing all needed office accommodations for such officers.

"'To pay supervisors of election and special deputy marshals compensation.

"'To pay the compensation and expenses of the several United States boards of canvassers and their clerks, as the same is fixed by law.'

"Whenever it shall appear by affidavit that errors have occurred in the determination of any board of canvassers, either national, State, Territorial, county, or other local board in any State or Territory in the matter of the votes cast for a Representative or Delegate in Congress, the circuit court of the United States in the judicial district in which any such board of canvassers shall have met and acted in respect thereto may, by order, require any such board to correct such errors or show cause why such correction should not be made, and, in the event of the failure of any such board to make such correction or show cause as aforesaid, the said court may compel any such board, by writ of mandamus, to correct such errors; and if any such board of canvassers shall have made its determination and dissolved, such court may compel it to reconvene for the purpose of making such corrections. For the purpose of making such corrections as the court shall order the meeting of any such board of canvassers shall be deemed a continuation of its regular session, and the statements and certificates shall be made and filed as the court shall direct; and, so far as the same shall vary from the original certificates and statements, the statements and certificates made under the order of said circuit court shall stand in lieu thereof, and shall in all places be treated with the same effect as if such corrected statement had been a part of the original required by law.

"For the purpose of service of papers and other proceedings any such board of canvassers, as organized and existing at the time of making the original canvass, shall be deemed a continuing board so far as all matters connected with the canvass of the votes cast for a Representative or Delegate in Congress are concerned, any State, Territorial, or municipal law to the contrary notwithstanding.

"Any marshal or deputy marshal, or any warden or keeper of any jail, prison, or penitentiary to which United States prisoners are committed, or in which any such prisoners are or may be confined pending trial, who shall refuse or decline to receive and safely keep any prisoner committed to his custody under any warrant or other process of any judge of any court of the United States or any circuit court commissioner, upon conviction thereof shall, for every such refusal, be punished by a fine of not less than $500 nor more than $1,000, or by imprisonment for not less than six months nor more than one year, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

"Sections 643, 645, 1988, 2017 to 2024, both inclusive, and sections 2027, 5521, and 5523 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, and each and every section of the Revised Statutes of the United States under title 24, 'Civil rights,' which section or the purport thereof came from the act of May 31, 1870, chapter 114, volume 16, Statutes at Large of the United States, and all sections of title 26, of said Revised Statutes, 'The elective franchise,' which sections or the purport thereof came from the said act of May 31, 1870, just above referred to, or from the act of February 28, 1871, chapter 99, volume 16, Statutes at Large of the United States, save such sections of either of said titles as are herein specifically repealed, are each and every of them hereby made a part of this act, and their provisions are made to refer and apply to this act with the same force and effect as if it was specifically mentioned or referred to therein, save as the same shall be changed or modified by the terms of this act.

"Sections 2011, 2012, 2013, 2014, 2015, 2016, 2025, 2026, 2028, 2029, 2031, of title 26 of the Revised Statutes, 'The elective franchise,' are each and every of them hereby repealed, so far as future elections at which Representatives or Delegates in Congress are to be voted for, but the repeal by this act of any specified section or part of a section of the Revised Statutes shall in no wise affect any officer or any individual, any complaint or indictment, or any trial which may be had, any right of any accused person, any verdict, sentence, or appeal therefrom, or any matter whatsoever where the right or wrong of any action taken, any duty performed, any complaint made, any indictment found, any trial had, any verdict rendered, any sentence imposed, or any appeal therefrom which has been or may be taken, or any fee, account, or compensation of any officer provided for under any of said sections or any as yet unpresented, or any unadjusted account, or any claim pending or which may be made, or any suit begun or which may be begun or continued, or any appeal now pending on any account or claim or on any which may be hereafter taken, or the payment of any such fee, account, or compensation, or any question, claim, or right whatsoever, arising from any act or work done where the same accrued, was done, performed, discharged, or arose from or with respect to any matter connected with any election or registration therefor held prior to the passage of this act, and all unpresented accounts as well as all accounts which have not been finally acted upon at the time of the passage of this act and not in suit shall be adjusted and paid in accordance with the provisions hereof.

"Whenever an election for a Representative or Delegate in Congress is held it shall be the duty of the State, Territorial, or local election officers in each election district, any State, Territorial, or municipal law to the contrary notwithstanding, to label or attach to the front of the box in which the ballots for such office are by law to be deposited such suitable inscription as shall clearly indicate that such ballots are to be there deposited; and it shall be the duty of such election officers and each of them, any State, Territorial, or municipal law to the contrary notwithstanding, to identify and point out to any voter who may inquire therefor the proper box for the reception of ballots for a Representative or Delegate in Congress. The box provided for the reception of votes for a Representative or Delegate in Congress shall at all times on the day of election, any State, Territorial, or municipal law to the contrary notwithstanding, be kept upon a shelf, table, or counter in plain sight of electors, easy of access to them, and at such height only as will enable the election officers or the voter, as the State, Territorial, or local election law may be, to easily and readily deposit the proper ballots therein, and as will permit all election officers, National, State, or Territorial, and the electors, to see that the ballots of the latter, when voting, are, in fact, placed therein; nor shall any such box at any time during the day of election, any State, Territorial, or municipal law to the contrary notwithstanding, be shifted, changed, or otherwise moved from the place in which, under this act, it may properly be placed at the opening of the polls, nor shall it be removed from the room or from the place therein, which, under this act, it shall during the hours provided for the reception of ballots have occupied, at any time during the day or night of election until all ballots cast for a Representative or Delegate in Congress, in whatever box they may have been placed or found, shall have been fully ascertained, tallied, counted, and canvassed, and the statements and certificates therefor have been made out, signed, and sealed as provided herein.

"Every person charged with any duty with regard to any election of Member of Congress, whether appointed by authority of the United States or of any State or Territory, who shall willfully and for the purpose of affecting such election, or the results thereof, or the ascertaining or declaration of the votes for any candidate at the same, fail to perform any of the duties required of him by law, or who shall purposely or willfully practice, either alone or in combination with any other person, any fraud, or who shall for such purpose make any false certificate, or who shall for such purpose place in any ballot box, or among the ballots lawfully cast at such election, any ballot or pretended ballot not so lawfully cast, or remove from any ballot box or from the ballots so lawfully cast any ballot which had been lawfully cast, shall be punishable by fine not exceeding $5,000, or by imprisonment not exceeding five years, or both, at the discretion of the court.

"Any person who shall bribe, or offer to bribe, any voter at any election for Member of Congress by the gift, offer, or promise of any money or other thing of value, in order to induce such voter to vote or refrain from voting for any person for such office, and any voter who shall accept any such bribe, offer, or promise, or who shall vote or refrain from voting in consequence of such bribe, offer, or promise, and any person who shall bribe or offer to bribe any officer charged with any duty in regard to said election, or the registration of voters for the same, or the counting of the ballots cast at the same, or ascertaining or declaring the result thereof, by the gift, offer, or promise of any money or other thing of value, in order to induce such officer to do any unlawful or fraudulent act to affect such election or the ascertainment or declaration of the result thereof, or to refrain from doing any duty with which such officer may be by law charged, for the sake of affecting such election, ascertainment, or declaration, and any such officer who shall in consequence of such bribe, offer, or promise do any such unlawful or fraudulent act, or refrain from doing any such duty with which he may be so lawfully charged, shall be punished by fine not exceeding $5,000, or by imprisonment not exceeding five years, or both, at the discretion of the court.

"Representatives or Delegates in Congress shall be chosen in the several States in the year 1890, and every second year thereafter, at the times and places and in the manner now provided by the laws of such States, respectively, except so far as the manner of such election is altered by this act, and except so far as the places for voting at such elections in the several States may hereafter be changed according to the laws thereof. The regulations as to such elections in the several States are hereby so altered as to conform hereto.

"This act shall not prevent any State from providing by law, if it see fit, that ballots shall be provided at the public expense, containing the names of such candidates for the office of Representative or Delegate in Congress as may have been nominated by qualified voters in the congressional district, and from providing suitable regulations for ascertaining such nomination and for screening from observation the vote of each voter and keeping the same secret, save as herein provided.

"Whenever under the law of any State any State or local election officer or other person at any election at which a Representative or Delegate in Congress is to be voted for is permitted to accompany a voter into any booth or other place provided for the voter to prepare his ballot, it shall be the right and duty of one of the supervisors of election to accompany any such voter to such booth and to render him such assistance in the preparation of his ballot as the voter shall request of him.

"Section 2, chapter 52, acts of 1879, is hereby amended by striking out all after the words 'by the clerk of such court' as far as and including the words 'placed therein.'

"The provisions of the following sections shall be considered as naming and constituting offenses against the laws of the United States when committed at any registration or revision of registration of voters for, or when committed at, any election at which a Representative or Delegate in Congress of the United States is to be voted for, and such offenses shall be punishable in the courts of the United States as described in this act.

"If at any registration of voters for an election for Representative or Delegate in Congress, or if at any meeting of any board of inspectors of election, or if at any time any officer of registration at any meeting held for such purpose, or for a revision thereof, or for adding to any registration the name of any person, or for striking therefrom any name under and in pursuance of the laws of any State or Territory, any person shall falsely personate an elector or other person and register or attempt or offer to register in the name of such elector or other person; or if any person shall knowingly or fraudulently register or offer or attempt or make application to register in or under the name of any other person, or in or under any false, assumed, or fictitious name, or in or under any name not his own; or shall fraudulently register or attempt or offer to register in any election district or voting precinct not having a lawful right to register therein; or shall knowingly or willfully do any unlawful act to secure registration for himself or any other person; or shall knowingly, willfully, or fraudulently, by false impersonation or otherwise, or by any unlawful means cause or procure, or attempt to cause or procure, the name of any qualified voter in any election district or voting precinct to be erased or stricken from any register of the voters of such district or precinct, made in pursuance of the laws of any State or Territory, or otherwise than is by such laws provided; or by force, threat, menace, intimidation, bribery, reward, or offer or promise thereof, or other unlawful means prevent, hinder, or delay any person having a lawful right to register or to be registered from duly exercising such right; or who shall knowingly, willfully, or fraudulently compel or induce, or attempt to offer to compel or induce, by such means, or any unlawful means, any supervisor of election, inspector of election, or other officer of registration, in any election district or voting precinct, to register or admit to registration any person not lawfully entitled to registration in such district or precinct, or to register any false, assumed, or fictitious name, or any name of any person, except as provided in such laws; or shall knowingly or willfully or fraudulently interfere with, hinder, or delay any supervisor of election, inspector of election, or other officer of registration in the discharge of his duties, or counsel, advise, or induce, or attempt to induce any such supervisor, inspector, or other officer to refuse or neglect to comply with or to perform his duties, or to violate any law prescribing or regulating the same, or shall aid, counsel, procure, or advise any voter, person, supervisor of election, inspector of election, or other officer of registration, to do any act forbidden by the laws of the United States or of the State or Territory in which the act committed is forbidden, or by any of said laws constituted an offense, providing such act is not permitted by the laws of the United States, or to omit to do any act by any of such laws directed to be done, providing such act is not permitted by the laws of the United States, every such person shall, upon conviction thereof, be adjudged guilty of a felony, and shall be punished by imprisonment in a State prison for not less than one nor more than five years.

"That if at any election for a Representative or Delegate in Congress any person shall falsely personate any elector or other person, and vote, or attempt to offer to vote, in, under, or upon the name of such elector or other person, or shall vote or attempt to vote in, under, or upon the name of any other person, whether living or dead, or in, under, or upon any false, assumed, or fictitious name, or in, under, or upon any name not his own; or shall knowingly, willfully, or fraudulently vote more than once for any candidate for the same office, except as authorized by law, or shall so vote or attempt or offer to vote in any election district or voting precinct without having a lawful right to vote therein, or shall vote more than once, or vote in more than one election district or voting precinct, or, having once voted, shall vote or attempt or offer to vote again; or shall knowingly, willfully, or fraudulently do any unlawful act to secure a right, or an opportunity to vote for himself or for any other person, or shall by force, threat, menace, intimidation, bribery, or reward, or offer or promise thereof, unlawfully, either directly or indirectly, influence, or attempt to influence, any elector in giving his vote, or prevent or hinder, or attempt to prevent or hinder, any qualified voter from freely exercising the right of suffrage, or by any such means induce, or attempt to induce, any such voter to refuse to exercise any such right; or shall by any such means, or otherwise, compel or induce, or attempt to compel or induce, any supervisor of election, inspector of election, or other officer of election, in any election district, to receive the vote of any person not legally qualified or entitled to vote at the said election in such district or precinct, or shall knowingly, willfully, or fraudulently interfere with, delay, or hinder, in any manner, any supervisor of election, inspector of election, poll clerk, or other officer of election in the discharge of his duties; or by any of such means or other unlawful means knowingly, willfully, or fraudulently counsel, advise, induce, or attempt to induce, any supervisor of election, inspector of election, poll clerk, or other officer of election whose duty it is to ascertain, proclaim, announce, or declare the result of any such election, or to give or make any certificate, document, report, return, or other evidence in relation thereto, to refuse or neglect to comply with his duty, or to violate any law regulating the same, or to receive the vote of any person in any election district or voting precinct not entitled to vote therein, or to refuse to receive the vote of any person entitled to vote therein; or shall aid, counsel, or advise, procure, or assist any voter or person, whether an officer of election or otherwise, to do any act unauthorized by law or by law forbidden, or constituted an offense, or to omit to do any act by law directed to be done, every such person shall, upon conviction thereof, be adjudged guilty of a felony, and shall be punished for each and every such offense by imprisonment in a State prison for not less than one nor more than five years.

"If at any election at which a Representative or Delegate in Congress is to be voted for any poll clerk or any other officer of election, either National, State, Territorial, or local, performing the duties of poll clerk, shall willfully keep a false poll list, or shall knowingly insert in his poll list any false statement, or any name or statement, or any check, letter, or mark, except such as are by the laws of the United States or of the State or Territory provided, and are by the laws of the United States not prohibited, he shall, upon conviction thereof, be adjudged guilty of a felony, and shall be punished by imprisonment in a State prison for not less than one nor more than five years.

"If, at any election at which a Representative or Delegate in Congress is to be voted for, any inspector or other officer of election shall willfully exclude any vote duly tendered for a candidate for Representative or Delegate in Congress, knowing that the person offering the same is lawfully entitled to vote at such election, or shall willfully receive a vote for any such candidate from any person knowing that such person is not a qualified voter, such inspector or other officer of election shall, upon conviction thereof, be adjudged guilty of a felony, and shall be punished by imprisonment in a State prison for not more than two years.

"Every supervisor of election, inspector of election, member of any board of canvassers, messenger, poll clerk, or other officer authorized to take part in or perform any duty in relation to any canvass or official statement of the votes cast at any election at which a Representative or Delegate in Congress is to be voted for who shall willfully make any false canvass of any votes cast for a Representative or Delegate in Congress, or who shall make, sign, publish, or deliver any false return of such votes, or any false certificate or statement of the result of such election, knowing the same to be false, or who shall willfully deface, destroy, or conceal any statement or certificate intrusted to his care or custody, shall, on conviction thereof, be adjudged guilty of a felony, and shall be punished by imprisonment in a State prison not less than two nor more than five years.

"If any person not authorized by law so to do shall, at any election at which a Representative or Delegate in Congress is to be voted for, knowingly and willfully put, or cause to be put, any ballot or ballots for a Member or Delegate in Congress, or other paper having a semblance thereof, into any box used at such election for the reception of such votes, or if any such inspector shall knowingly and willfully cause or permit any ballots to be in such box at the opening of the polls and before voting shall have commenced, or shall knowingly and willfully or fraudulently put any ballot, or other paper having the semblance thereof, into any such box at any such election, unless the same shall be offered by an elector; or if any such inspector or other officer or person shall fraudulently, during the canvass of such ballots, in any manner change, substitute, or alter any ballot taken from such box then being canvassed, or from any such box which has not been canvassed, or shall remove any ballot or semblance therefrom, or add any ballot, or semblance thereof, to the ballots taken from such box then being canvassed or from any such box which has not been canvassed, every such person shall, upon conviction thereof, be adjudged guilty of felony, and shall be punished by imprisonment in a State prison for not less than one nor more than five years.

"If any inspector of election, poll clerk, or other officer of registration, revision of registration, election, or canvass, of whom any duty is required by any law of the State or Territory in which he shall be serving at an election at which a Representative or Delegate in Congress is to be voted for, shall be guilty of any willful neglect of such duty or of any corrupt or fraudulent conduct or practice in the execution of the same, he shall, on conviction thereof, be adjudged guilty of a felony, and shall be punished by imprisonment in a State prison for not more than five years.

"Every inspector of election, poll clerk, or other person or officer having the custody of any record, register of votes, or copy thereof, oath, return of votes, certificates, poll list, or any paper, document, or evidence of any description relating to the election of a Representative or Delegate in Congress, and which is directed by the laws of the State or Territory in which he shall be serving to be made, filed, or preserved, who is guilty of stealing, willfully destroying, mutilating, defacing, falsifying, or fraudulently removing or secreting the whole or any part thereof, or who shall fraudulently make any entry, erasure, or alteration therein, except as allowed and directed by law, or who permits any other person so to do, shall, upon conviction thereof, be adjudged guilty of a felony, and shall be punished for each and every such offense by imprisonment in a State prison not exceeding five years, and shall, in addition thereto, forfeit his office.

"Every person not an officer such as is mentioned in the last preceding section, who is guilty of any of the acts specified in said section, or who advises, procures, or abets the commission of the same, or any of them, shall, upon conviction thereof, be adjudged guilty of a felony, and for each and every such offense shall be punished by imprisonment in a State prison not exceeding five years.

"Any person who shall be convicted of willful and corrupt false swearing or affirming in taking any oath or affirmation prescribed by any law of the United States, or of the State or Territory in which he shall have been convicted, to be taken upon any examination as to his right to register or vote at any election at which a Representative or Delegate in Congress is to be voted for, or upon being challenged as unqualified upon offering to register or vote, shall be adjudged guilty of the felony of perjury, and shall, upon conviction, be punished with imprisonment in a State prison for not more than five years.

"Every person who shall, at any election at which a Representative or Delegate in Congress is to be voted for, willfully and corruptly instigate, advise, induce, or procure any person to swear or affirm falsely as aforesaid, or attempt or offer so to do, shall be adjudged guilty of subornation of perjury, and shall, upon conviction thereof, suffer the punishment directed by law in cases of willful and corrupt perjury.

"If any person shall fraudulently change or alter the ballot for Representative or Delegate in Congress of any elector, or substitute one such ballot for another, or fraudulently furnish any elector with a ballot for Representative or Delegate in Congress containing more than the proper number of names, or shall intentionally practice any fraud upon any elector to induce him to deposit a ballot as his vote, and to have the same thrown out and not counted, or to have the same counted for a person or candidate other than the person or candidate for whom such elector intended to vote, or otherwise defraud him of his vote, every such person shall, on conviction thereof, be adjudged guilty of a felony, and shall, if a supervisor of election, inspector of election, poll clerk, or other officer of election, be punished with imprisonment in a State prison not less than two nor more than seven years; and if not such a supervisor, inspector, poll clerk, or other officer of election, shall be punished by imprisonment in a State prison for not less than one nor more than five years.

"If any person shall willfully disobey any lawful command of a supervisor of election, given in the execution of his duty at any election at which a Representative or Delegate in Congress is to be voted for, he shall, upon conviction thereof, be adjudged guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall be punished by imprisonment in a county jail for not less than 30 days nor more than one year, or by a fine of not less than $250 nor more than $1,000, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

"If, at any registration of voters held prior to or for an election at which a Representative or Delegate in Congress is to be voted for, or any revision thereof, or if on any day of election at which such Representative or Delegate is to be voted for, or if during the canvass of any votes cast thereat, any person shall cause any breach of the peace, or use any disorderly violence, or threats of violence, whereby any such registration, revision, election, or canvass shall be impeded or hindered, or whereby the lawful proceedings of any supervisor of election, or challenger, or person designated by any law to be present at the canvass of any ballots are interfered with, every such person shall, upon conviction thereof, be adjudged guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall be punished by imprisonment for not more than one year, or by a fine of not less than $100 nor more than $3,000, or by both.

"If any person shall, upon the day of any election at which a Representative or Delegate in Congress is to be or is being voted for, or before the canvass of all votes cast is completed, steal or willfully break or destroy any ballot box used, or intended to be used, at such election, or shall willfully or fraudulently conceal, secrete, or remove any such box from the custody of the inspectors of election, or other lawful custodians thereof, or shall alter, deface, injure, destroy, conceal any ballot which has been deposited in any ballot box at such election, which has not been already counted and canvassed, or any poll list used, or intended to be used, at such election, or any report, return, certificate, or other evidence by law required or provided for, shall, on conviction thereof, be adjudged guilty of a felony, and shall, for each and every such offense, be punished by imprisonment in a State prison for not less than two nor more than seven years.

"If in any election district, at any registration of voters or revision thereof, or at any election hereafter held where a Representative or Delegate in Congress is to be voted for, any inspector of election, poll clerk, or other officer of election, or any other person shall knowingly or willfully admit any person to registration, or make any entry upon any register of voters or poll book, or receive any vote, or proceed with the canvass of any ballots in whatever box they may be or shall consent thereto, unless a majority of all of the inspectors of election in said election district are present and concur, he shall, upon conviction thereof, be adjudged guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall be punished by imprisonment in the county jail for not less than 30 nor more than 60 days, or fined not less than $100 nor more than $1,000, or by both such fine and imprisonment. If any inspector of election in any election district shall, without urgent necessity, absent himself from the place of registration or the polls in said district upon any day of registration or election, whereby less than a majority of all the inspectors in such election district shall be present during the hours of registration, election, or canvass of ballots, he shall, upon conviction, be adjudged guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall be punished by imprisonment in a county jail for not less than 60 days nor more than six months, or shall be fined not less than $200 nor more than $1,000, or both.

"Upon any prosecution under this act for procuring, offering, or casting an illegal vote the accused may give in evidence any fact tending to show that he honestly believed, upon good reason, that the vote complained of was a lawful one, and the jury may take such facts into consideration in determining whether the acts complained of were willfully done or not.

"The doing of, or the attempting or offering to do, any act denounced in sections 5424, 5425, 5426, 5427, and 5428 of the Revised Statutes of the United States is hereby made a felony, and the punishment, upon conviction thereof, shall be imprisonment in a State prison at hard labor for not less than one nor more than five years."

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, a good many of our Members are absent this afternoon looking after their housekeeping affairs, and so forth, and upon the suggestion of Senators from the opposite side that it would be better to postpone the consideration of the bill to-day, I will ask that it be laid aside, and will give notice that at 2 o'clock each day I shall bring this measure up for consideration until it is finally disposed of.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands the Senator to ask that the bill be temporarily laid aside?

Mr. OWEN. I ask that the bill be temporarily laid aside.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there any objection?

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I desire to offer as a substitute for the pending measure a bill which I introduced about a year ago, and, in order to save time, I shall not ask to have it read. I should like, however, to have it printed in connection with the other amendments to which reference has been made.

Mr. OWEN. Might it not be printed in the RECORD? I ask that it be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, so that we may have it in full.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there any objection?

Mr. GALLINGER. I will make the further suggestion that it will be much more satisfactory, even if the proposed amendment shall be printed in the RECORD, to have it printed likewise in the usual form as a pending amendment. It can be more readily read in that form than in the RECORD.

Mr. OWEN. Yes; I quite agree to that.

Mr. GRONNA. At the proper time I desire to offer the amendment as a substitute.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Dakota offers an amendment in the nature of a substitute, and asks that it be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. OWEN. And printed also as a proposed amendment to the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. This is done without any order. In the absence of objection, the proposed amendment will be printed in the RECORD.

The amendment submitted by Mr. GRONNA is as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

"That the act entitled 'An act providing for publicity of contributions made for the purpose of influencing elections at which Representatives in Congress are elected,' approved June 25, 1910, as heretofore amended, be, and is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"'SECTION 1. That the term "political committee" under the provisions of this act shall include the national, State, and congressional committees of all political parties, and the national congressional campaign committees of all political parties, and all other committees, associations, or organizations which shall be appointed or selected for the purpose of influencing the result of an election at which Representatives or Senators in Congress or presidential electors are to be nominated or elected, or candidates for President and Vice President are to be nominated. The term "election" or "elected" shall include elections by primary, convention, or otherwise, as well as final elections. The word "candidate" shall include every person whose name is presented with his knowledge and consent for nomination or election, whether or not such person is nominated or elected. The term "Representative" shall be held and construed to include Delegates to the Congress of the United States.

"'SEC. 2. That every political committee as defined in this act shall have a chairman and a treasurer. It shall be the duty of the treasurer to keep a detailed and accurate account of all money or its equivalent received by or promised to such committee or any member thereof, or by or to any person acting under its authority or in its behalf, and the name of every person, firm, association, or committee from whom received, and of all expenditures, disbursements, payments, or promises of payment or disbursement made by the committee or any member thereof or by any person acting under its authority or in its behalf, and to whom paid, distributed, disbursed, or promised, and the purpose for which such payment, distribution, disbursement, or promise was made. No officer or member of such committee, or other person acting under its authority or in its behalf, shall receive any money or its equivalent or expend or promise to expend any money on behalf of such committee until after a chairman and a treasurer of such committee shall have been chosen.

"'SEC. 3. That every payment or disbursement made by a political committee exceeding $10 in amount shall be evidenced by a receipted bill stating the particulars of expense, and every such record, voucher, receipt, or account shall be preserved for 15 months after the election to which it relates, and shall be open to public inspection. Whoever, acting under the authority or in behalf of such political committee, whether as a member thereof or otherwise, receives any contribution, payment, loan, gift, advance, deposit, or promise of money or its equivalent, shall on demand, and in any event within five days after the receipt of such contribution, payment, loan, gift, advance, deposit, or promise, render to the treasurer of such political committee a detailed account of the same, together with the name and address from whom received, and said treasurer shall forthwith enter the same in a ledger or record to be kept by him for that purpose, which ledger or record shall plainly show the items or sums received from citizens of each State separate from other States, and shall be open to public inspection.

"'SEC. 4. That no money, money orders, checks, drafts, or notes shall be sent by any person, partnership, corporation, or political committee from one State to another for use in any election: Provided, That this shall not be held to prevent the transmission of contributions to the national committees or the transmission of his own funds by a bona fide resident of a State, temporarily without its limits, for use in such State: Provided further, That nothing in this section shall be construed to prevent or prohibit a political committee from sending funds not in excess of $10,000 to a congressional district in any one campaign, into one State from another, to be expended in good faith in defraying actual expenses of campaign speakers sent out by such committee, the actual expense of maintaining committee headquarters, and the expense of printing and distributing literature.

"'SEC. 5. That in no case shall any political committee expend in any one election in any one congressional district more than $5,000 where there is more than one such district in the State, or more than $10,000 where there is only one such district: Provided, That if the money is spent for the printing or distributing of literature, it shall be considered as spent in the district where such literature is sent or distributed.

"'SEC. 6. That no candidate for Representative in Congress shall, directly or indirectly, give, contribute, expend, use, or promise any sum or sums in the aggregate exceeding $1,500 in any campaign for his nomination or election; and no candidate for Senator of the United States shall, directly or indirectly, give, contribute, expend, use, or promise in any campaign for his nomination or election any sum or sums in the aggregate exceeding $3,000 if the State in which he is a candidate is composed of 5 or less congressional districts, exceeding $6,000 if composed of more than 5 and not more than 15 such districts, exceeding $10,000 if composed of more than 15 and not more than 30 such districts, or exceeding $15,000 if composed of more than 30 such districts: Provided, That money expended by any such candidate to meet and discharge any assessment, fee, or charge made or levied upon candidates by the laws of the State in which he is a candidate, or for his necessary personal expenses, incurred for himself alone, for travel and subsistence, shall not be considered an expenditure within the meaning of this section, and shall not be considered any part of the sum herein fixed as the limit of expenditure and need not be shown by the statements required to be filed by this act; but all other expenditures or payments, of whatever nature, to influence the results of the election, including payments for stationery, postage, printing, telegraph and telephone service, clerk hire, hall rent, distribution of literature, and assessments made by or contributions to any political committee taking part in the campaign in the State in which he is a candidate shall be considered expenditures governed by this section and must be shown in the statements required by this act. But no candidate for Representative in Congress or for Senator of the United States shall give, contribute, expend, use, or promise, or cause to be given, contributed, expended, used, or promised in procuring his nomination or election any sum in the aggregate in excess of the amount which he may lawfully give, contribute, expend, use, or promise under the laws of the State in which he is a candidate.

"'SEC. 7. That no candidate for Representative in Congress, Senator of the United States, presidential elector, President or Vice President of the United States shall promise any office or position to any person, or to use his influence in behalf of, or to give his support to any person for any office or position for the purpose of procuring the support of such person or of any person in his candidacy, nor shall he authorize any person to make any such promises on his behalf.

"'SEC. 8. That no person not a candidate for office, or association of such persons, shall expend, authorize the expenditure of, promise, collect, or contribute, for use in influencing the results of any election governed by the provisions of this act, of any sum or sums in the aggregate exceeding $500: Provided, That this shall not apply to officers of a duly constituted political committee nor to contributions to the funds of such a committee: Provided further, That any person may in connection with such election incur and pay from his own private funds for the purpose of influencing the results of such election all necessary personal expenses for his traveling where such expenses are for himself alone without being subject to the provisions of this act, but all other expenditures of whatever nature for the purpose of influencing the results of such election shall be considered expenditures governed by the provisions of this act.

"'SEC. 9. That no person shall in any one campaign make contributions to the funds of a national committee in the aggregate in excess of $5,000, or to the funds of any other political committee in the aggregate in excess of $1,000. No corporation or officer thereof on behalf of such corporation shall make any contribution to the fund of any political committee or to any other fund intended to be used to influence the results of an election, nor shall any corporation or officer thereof on its behalf use, expend, promise, or collect any money or its equivalent for the purpose of influencing the results of an election.

"'SEC. 10. That any political advertisement contained in any newspaper, magazine, or periodical shall, when published, contain the name of the committee, person, firm, or corporation who has caused the same to be published and who has paid or agreed to pay for the publication thereof.

"'SEC. 11. That nothing contained in this act shall limit or effect the right of any person to spend money for proper legal expenses in maintaining or contesting the result of any election.

"'SEC. 12. That the treasurer of every political committee shall, not more than 15 days and not less than 10 days next before any election, primary, or convention at which Representatives in Congress or Senators of the United States or presidential electors are to be elected, or candidates for Representative, Senator, or President and Vice President of the United States are to be nominated, the result of which such committee shall attempt to influence or in which it shall in any manner participate, file with the Clerk of the House of Representatives at Washington, District of Columbia, an itemized detailed statement; and on each sixth day thereafter until such election said treasurer shall file with said Clerk a supplemental itemized detailed statement. It shall also be the duty of said treasurer to file a similar statement with said Clerk within 30 days after such election. Similar statements shall be filed in connection with any primary or convention in any State or congressional district for the election of delegates to any national convention which shall nominate candidates for President and Vice President, by the treasurer of every political committee which shall take part in such election, but this shall not be held to exempt any political committee participating in such elections in two or more States from filing statements preceding and following the national convention, showing its receipts and expenditures in all States in which it shall have participated in the elections. Each of the statements required by this section shall be full and complete, shall be signed and sworn to by said treasurer, and shall conform to the requirements of the following section of this act, except that the supplemental statements herein required need not contain any item of which publicity is given in a previous statement; the final statement shall contain a summary of all previous statements. The statements so filed with the Clerk of the House of Representatives shall be preserved by him for 15 months and shall be a part of the public records of his office and shall be open to public inspection.

"'SEC. 13. That the statements required by the preceding section of this act shall state:

"'First. The name and address of each person, firm, association, or committee who has contributed, promised, loaned, given, or advanced to such political committee or any officer, member, or agent thereof, in one or more items, money or its equivalent of the aggregate amount or value of $100 or more, and the amount or sum contributed, promised, loaned, given, or advanced by each.

"'Second. The aggregate sum of all such contributions made to such political committee, or to any officer, member, or agent thereof in amounts of less than $100.

"'Third. The aggregate amount of all such contributions made by citizens of each State, together with the total sum of all such contributions received by such political committee, or any officer, member, or agent thereof.

"'Fourth. The name and address of each person, firm, association, or committee to whom such political committee, or any officer, member, or agent thereof, has distributed, disbursed, contributed, loaned, advanced, given, or promised any sum of money or its equivalent of the amount or value of $10 or more, stating the amount in each case and the purpose thereof, together with a true and accurate statement of the items or sums distributed, disbursed, contributed, loaned, advanced, given, or promised to persons, firms, associations, or committees in each State separate from other States.

"'Fifth. The aggregate sum so paid or promised by such political committee, or any officer, member, or agent thereof, where the amount or value of such payment or promise to any one person, firm, association, or committee, in one or more items, is less than $10.

"'Sixth. The total sum so paid or promised by such political committee, or any officer, member, or agent thereof.

"'SEC. 14. That every person, firm, association, or committee, except political committees hereinbefore defined, that shall expend, pay, or promise any sum of money or other thing of value amounting to $50 or more for the purpose of influencing the result of an election, primary, or convention at which a Representative in Congress or Senator of the United States or presidential elector is to be elected, or candidates for Representative or Senator or President and Vice President are to be nominated, or delegates to a national convention for the nomination of candidates for President and Vice President are to be elected, unless he or it shall contribute the same to a political committee as hereinbefore defined, shall file statements of the same under oath with the Clerk of the House of Representatives, at Washington, D. C., as required by section 12 of this act, of the treasurer of a political committee, which statements shall be held by said Clerk in all respects as required by section 3 of this act.

"'SEC. 15. That every person who shall be a candidate for nomination at any primary election or nominating convention, or for election at any general or special election, shall file, if candidate for Senator of the United States, with the Secretary of the Senate, at Washington, D. C., and if candidate for Representative in Congress, with the Clerk of the House of Representatives, at Washington, D. C., not less than 10 nor more than 15 days before the day of such convention, primary, or election, a full, correct, and itemized statement of all moneys and things of value received by him or by anyone for him with his knowledge and consent, from any source, in aid or support of his candidacy, together with the names of all those who furnished the same in whole or in part, and such statement shall, in addition, contain a true and itemized account of all moneys and things of value given, contributed, expended, used, or promised by such candidate, or by his agent, representative, or other person for and in his behalf with his knowledge and consent, together with the names of all those to whom any and all such gifts, contributions, payments, or promises were made for the purpose of procuring his nomination or election. Every such candidate shall, within 15 days after such primary election or nominating convention, and within 30 days after such general or special election, file with the Secretary of the Senate or with the Clerk of the House of Representatives, as the case may be, a similar statement containing a summary of the previous statement and continuing the same so as to show all such receipts and expenditures up to, on, and after the day of such election or convention. In every such statement the candidate shall include a statement of every promise or pledge made by him or by anyone for him with his knowledge and consent, and whether he has given authority to any person to make any such promise or pledge, before the completion of any such primary, election, or convention, relative to the appointment or recommendation for appointment of any person to any position of trust, honor, or profit, either in the county, State, or Nation, or in any political subdivision thereof, or in any private or corporate employment, for the purpose of procuring the support of such person or of any person in his candidacy; and if any such promise or pledge shall have been made the name, address, and occupation of each person to whom such promise or pledge was made shall be stated, together with a description of the position relating to which such promise or pledge was made. In the event that no such pledge or promise has been made that fact shall be distinctly stated.

"'SEC. 16. That every statement required by this act shall be verified by oath or affirmation, taken before an officer authorized to administer oaths, and the depositing of any such statement in a regular post office, directed to the Secretary of the Senate or the Clerk of the House of Representatives, as the case may be, duly stamped and registered, within the time required herein, shall be deemed a sufficient filing of any such statement under the provisions of this act. The forms for the statements required by this act shall be furnished by the Clerk of the House of Representatives.

"'SEC. 17. That the statements required by section 15 of this act to be made before nomination and before election shall include the full name and post-office address, if known, of each opponent for nomination or election, as the case may be; and if any person thus named as a candidate for nomination or election shall fail, neglect, or refuse to file any statement required by this act, it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Senate or the Clerk of the House of Representatives, as the case may be, within 30 days after such statement or statements should have been filed to certify that fact to the Attorney General of the United States.

"'SEC. 18. That the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives shall, on or before the 15th day of January next after any election governed by the provisions of this act, report to the Senate and the House of Representatives, respectively, the name of each candidate for nomination or election who has filed statements as required by this act, giving his place of residence and the State or congressional district, as the case may be, in which he was a candidate, and the total amount of campaign expenses paid or promised by him or by anyone for him, as shown by such statements; also the name of each candidate for nomination or election, as shown by the files of his office or otherwise ascertained, whether nominated or elected or not, who has failed, neglected, or refused to file any or all of the statements required of him by this act, giving his place of residence and the State or congressional district, as the case may be, in which he was a candidate; also the complete reports of political committees as defined in this act. The report required by this section shall be printed as a public document.

"'SEC. 19. That this act shall not be construed to annul or vitiate the laws of any State, not directly in conflict herewith, relating to the nomination or election of candidates for the offices herein named, or to exempt any such candidate from complying with such State laws.

"'SEC. 20. That every person who shall violate any of the provisions of this act shall, upon conviction, be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned not more than one year, or both.

"'SEC. 21. That all acts and parts of acts in conflict with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.'"

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there any objection to laying the bill aside temporarily? The Chair hears none, and the bill is so laid aside.

Mr. SIMMONS. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 2 o'clock and 34 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, December 6, 1916, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, December 5, 1916.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father in heaven, we realize that we are passing through an epoch-making period in the history of our Republic, and we most fervently pray that the chosen servants of our people may be able to meet the changing conditions as they arise with clearness of vision and honesty of purpose, preserving the nobility of our national character with its sacred traditions, defending our rights, the genius of our Republic, doing unto others as we would be done by, in the spirit of the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read.

COST OF LIVING IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up House joint resolution 91, authorizing an inquiry into the cost of living in the District of Columbia, and move to concur in the Senate amendments. The resolution is on the Speaker's table.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 91) authorizing and directing the Department of Labor to make an inquiry into the cost of living in the District of Columbia and to report thereon to Congress as early as practicable.

The Senate amendments were read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Colorado moves to take the resolution just reported from the Speaker's table and to concur in the Senate amendments.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leaves of absence were granted as follows:

To Mr. KEY of Ohio, indefinitely, on account of illness.

To Mr. CARY, indefinitely, on account of illness.

ADDITIONAL PAGE.

Mr. LLOYD. I present the following privileged resolution from the Committee on Accounts.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 384 (H. Rept. 1204).

Resolved, That the Doorkeeper be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to appoint an additional page for the present session, beginning on December 4, 1916, to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House, at a salary of $75 per month.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, this resolution provides for an additional page, who is for the use of Mr. SCHALL, of Minnesota.

It is a similar resolution to that which was passed during the last session.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

SESSION CLERKS TO COMMITTEES.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, I present the following privileged resolution from the Committee on Accounts.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 383 (H. Rept. 1203).

Resolved, That clerks to committees of the House during the session provided for by the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, be, and they are hereby, assigned for the present session of Congress to the following committees, to wit:

Committee on Railways and Canals.
Committee on Reform in the Civil Service.
Committee on Alcoholic Liquor Traffic.
Committee on Invalid Pensions (assistant clerk).
Committee on the Judiciary (additional assistant clerk).
Committee on Enrolled Bills.
Committee on Disposition of Useless Executive Papers.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, this resolution provides the same assignments as in the last Congress, excepting——

Mr. MANN. The gentleman means the last session?

Mr. LLOYD. The last session of Congress, excepting that the Committee on Education was provided for in a resolution which passed in August, and that is not included, and the Committee on Mines and Mining was given an annual clerk under the legislative, executive, and judicial bill, and that is not included. Otherwise, the resolution is the same as that passed at the last session of Congress.

Mr. MANN. Does this provide for all the additional clerks carried in the appropriation act?

Mr. LLOYD. Excepting those two.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. LLOYD. Certainly.

Mr. MADDEN. How many years has it been since the Committee on Railways and Canals had a meeting?

Mr. LLOYD. Well, I am not advised about that.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that it is a waste of money to be appropriating for clerks of committees that never meet and have no business, and the House ought to be advised of the desirability of entering into some sort of economy in the expenditure of the public money.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, the supposition is that these committees have met and discharged their duties. As far as I know, all these committees to whom these clerks have been assigned have discharged their duties.

Mr. MADDEN. They have not any business.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the following concurrent resolution:

House concurrent resolution 62.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the two Houses of Congress assemble in the Hall of the House of Representatives on Tuesday, the 5th day of December, 1916, at 1 o'clock in the afternoon, for the purpose of receiving such communication as the President of the United States shall be pleased to make to them.

EMPLOYEES OF VARIOUS COMMITTEES.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, I also present the following resolution from the Committee on Accounts.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

House resolution 382 (H. Rept. 1202).

Resolved, That the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Agriculture, the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice, the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Commerce, the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of the Interior, the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Labor, the Committee on Expenditures in the Navy Department, the Committee on Expenditures in the Post Office Department, the Committee on Expenditures in the State Department, the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department, the Committee on Expenditures in the War Department, and the Committee on Expenditures on Public Buildings each be allowed a clerk at the rate of $125 per month; that the Committee on Rules be allowed an assistant clerk at the rate of $100 per month; and that the Joint Select Committee on Disposition of Useless Executive Papers be allowed a messenger at the rate of $60 per month during the second session of the Sixty-fourth Congress, the salaries of said clerks, assistant clerk, and messenger to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

CALL OF COMMITTEES.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will proceed with the call of committees, and the chairmen of the various committees will please give heed.

The Clerk proceeded with the call of committees.

Mr. ADAMSON (when the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce was called). Mr. Speaker, if this is a call with a view of getting up some real business, and not a mere perfunctory call, I will call up some real business.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman had best call it up.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 563) to amend section 20 of an act to regulate commerce, to prevent overissues of securities by carriers, and for other purposes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the committee can not call up a bill on the Union Calendar on this call. This is not Calendar Wednesday.

Mr. KITCHIN. Will the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON] yield?

Mr. ADAMSON. I yield to both of the gentlemen with pleasure.

RECESS.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the House stand in recess until 12 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that the House stand in recess until 12 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Accordingly (at 12 o'clock and 20 minutes p. m.) the House took a recess until 12.55 p. m.

At the expiration of the recess the House resumed its session and was called to order by the Speaker.

JOINT MEETING OF THE SENATE AND HOUSE.

At 12 o'clock and 52 minutes p. m. the Doorkeeper, J. J. Sinnott, announced the Vice President of the United States and the Members of the United States Senate.

The Members of the House rose.

The Senate, preceded by the Vice President and by their Secretary and Sergeant at Arms, entered the Chamber.

The Vice President took the Chair at the right of the Speaker, and the Members of the Senate took the seats reserved for them.

The SPEAKER. On the part of the House the Chair appoints the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN], the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD], the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT], the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] as a committee to wait on the President and escort him into the House.

The VICE PRESIDENT. On the part of the Senate the Chair appoints the Senator from Indiana [Mr. KERN], the Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE], the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS], the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER], and the Senator from California [Mr. WORKS].

At 1 o'clock p. m. the President of the United States, escorted by the committee of Senators and Representatives, entered the Hall of the House and stood at the Clerk's desk, amid prolonged applause.

The SPEAKER. Gentlemen of the Sixty-fourth Congress, I present the President of the United States. [Applause.]

ADDRESS OF THE PRESIDENT (H. DOC. 1384).

The PRESIDENT. Mr. Speaker, Mr. President, and gentlemen of the Congress, in fulfilling at this time the duty laid upon me by the Constitution of communicating to you from time to time information of the state of the Union and recommending to your consideration such legislative measures as may be judged necessary and expedient, I shall continue the practice, which I hope has been acceptable to you, of leaving to the reports of the several heads of the executive departments the elaboration of the detailed needs of the public service and confine myself to those matters of more general public policy with which it seems necessary and feasible to deal at the present session of the Congress.

I realize the limitations of time under which you will necessarily act at this session and shall make my suggestions as few as possible; but there were some things left undone at the last session which there will now be time to complete and which it seems necessary in the interest of the public to do at once.

In the first place, it seems to me imperatively necessary that the earliest possible consideration and action should be accorded the remaining measures of the programme of settlement and regulation which I had occasion to recommend to you at the close of your last session in view of the public dangers disclosed by the unaccommodated difficulties which then existed, and which still unhappily continue to exist, between the railroads of the country and their locomotive engineers, conductors, and trainmen.

I then recommended:

First, immediate provision for the enlargement and administrative reorganization of the Interstate Commerce Commission

along the lines embodied in the bill recently passed by the House of Representatives and now awaiting action by the Senate; in order that the Commission may be enabled to deal with the many great and various duties now devolving upon it with a promptness and thoroughness which are, with its present constitution and means of action, practically impossible.

Second, the establishment of an eight-hour day as the legal basis alike of work and of wages in the employment of all railway employees who are actually engaged in the work of operating trains in interstate transportation.

Third, the authorization of the appointment by the President of a small body of men to observe the actual results in experience of the adoption of the eight-hour day in railway transportation alike for the men and for the railroads.

Fourth, explicit approval by the Congress of the consideration by the Interstate Commerce Commission of an increase of freight rates to meet such additional expenditures by the railroads as may have been rendered necessary by the adoption of the eight-hour day and which have not been offset by administrative readjustments and economies, should the facts disclosed justify the increase.

Fifth, an amendment of the existing Federal statute which provides for the mediation, conciliation, and arbitration of such controversies as the present by adding to it a provision that, in case the methods of accommodation now provided for should fail, a full public investigation of the merits of every such dispute shall be instituted and completed before a strike or lockout may lawfully be attempted.

And, sixth, the lodgement in the hands of the Executive of the power, in case of military necessity, to take control of such portions and such rolling stock of the railways of the country as may be required for military use and to operate them for military purposes, with authority to draft into the military service of the United States such train crews and administrative officials as the circumstances require for their safe and efficient use.

The second and third of these recommendations the Congress immediately acted on: it established the eight-hour day as the legal basis of work and wages in train service and it authorized the appointment of a commission to observe and report upon the practical results, deeming these the measures most immediately needed; but it postponed action upon the other suggestions until an opportunity should be offered for a more deliberate consideration of them. The fourth recommendation I do not deem it necessary to renew. The power of the Interstate Commerce Commission to grant an increase of rates on the ground referred to is indisputably clear, and a recommendation by the Congress with regard to such a matter might seem to draw in question the scope of the Commission's authority or its inclination to do justice when there is no reason to doubt either.

The other suggestions,—the increase in the Interstate Commerce Commission's membership and in its facilities for performing its manifold duties, the provision for full public investigation and assessment of industrial disputes, and the grant to the Executive of the power to control and operate the railways when necessary in time of war or other like public necessity,—I now very earnestly renew.

The necessity for such legislation is manifest and pressing. Those who have entrusted us with the responsibility and duty of serving and safeguarding them in such matters would find it hard, I believe, to excuse a failure to act upon these grave matters or any unnecessary postponement of action upon them.

Not only does the Interstate Commerce Commission now find it practically impossible, with its present membership and organization, to perform its great functions promptly and thoroughly but it is not unlikely that it may presently be found advisable to add to its duties still others equally heavy and exacting. It must first be perfected as an administrative instrument.

The country can not and should not consent to remain any longer exposed to profound industrial disturbances for lack of additional means of arbitration and conciliation which the Congress can easily and promptly supply. And all will agree that there must be no doubt as to the power of the Executive to make immediate and uninterrupted use of the railroads for the concentration of the military forces of the nation wherever they are needed and whenever they are needed.

This is a programme of regulation, prevention, and administrative efficiency which argues its own case in the mere statement of it. With regard to one of its items, the increase in the efficiency of the Interstate Commerce Commission, the House of Representatives has already acted; its action needs only the concurrence of the Senate.

I would hesitate to recommend, and I dare say the Congress would hesitate to act upon the suggestion should I make it, that any man in any occupation should be obliged by law to continue in an employment which he desired to leave. To pass a law which forbade or prevented the individual workman to leave his work before receiving the approval of society in doing so would be to adopt a new principle into our jurisprudence which I take it for granted we are not prepared to introduce. But the proposal that the operation of the railways of the country shall not be stopped or interrupted by the concerted action of organized bodies of men until a public investigation shall have been instituted which shall make the whole question at issue plain for the judgment of the opinion of the nation is not to propose any such principle. It is based upon the very different principle that the concerted action of powerful bodies of men shall not be permitted to stop the industrial processes of the nation, at any rate before the nation shall have had an opportunity to acquaint itself with the merits of the case as between employee and employer, time to form its opinion upon an impartial statement of the merits, and opportunity to consider all practicable means of conciliation or arbitration. I can see nothing in that proposition but the justifiable safeguarding by society of the necessary processes of its very life. There is nothing arbitrary or unjust in it unless it be arbitrarily and unjustly done. It can and should be done with a full and scrupulous regard for the interests and liberties of all concerned as well as for the permanent interests of society itself.

Three matters of capital importance await the action of the Senate which have already been acted upon by the House of Representatives: the bill which seeks to extend greater freedom of combination to those engaged in promoting the foreign commerce of the country than is now thought by some to be legal under the terms of the laws against monopoly; the bill amending the present organic law of Porto Rico; and the bill proposing a more thorough and systematic regulation of the expenditure of money in elections, commonly called the Corrupt Practices Act. I need not labor my advice that these measures be enacted into law. Their urgency lies in the manifest circumstances which render their adoption at this time not only opportune but necessary. Even delay would seriously jeopard the interests of the country and of the government.

Immediate passage of the bill to regulate the expenditure of money in elections may seem to be less necessary than the immediate enactment of the other measures to which I refer; because at least two years will elapse before another election in which federal offices are to be filled; but it would greatly relieve the public mind if this important matter were dealt with while the circumstances and the dangers to the public morals of the present method of obtaining and spending campaign funds stand clear under recent observation and the methods of expenditure can be frankly studied in the light of present experience; and a delay would have the further very serious disadvantage of postponing action until another election was at hand and some special object connected with it might be thought to be in the mind of those who urged it. Action can be taken now with facts for guidance and without suspicion of partisan purpose.

I shall not argue at length the desirability of giving a freer hand in the matter of combined and concerted effort to those who shall undertake the essential enterprise of building up our export trade. That enterprise will presently, will immediately assume, has indeed already assumed, a magnitude unprecedented in our experience. We have not the necessary instrumentalities for its prosecution; it is deemed to be doubtful whether they could be created upon an adequate scale under our present laws. We should clear away all legal obstacles and create a basis of undoubted law for it which will give freedom without permitting unregulated license. The thing must be done now, because the opportunity is here and may escape us if we hesitate or delay.

The argument for the proposed amendments of the organic law of Porto Rico is brief and conclusive. The present laws governing the Island and regulating the rights and privileges of its people are not just. We have created expectations of extended privilege which we have not satisfied. There is uneasiness among the people of the Island and even a suspicious doubt with regard to our intentions concerning them which the adoption of the pending measure would happily remove. We do not doubt what we wish to do in any essential particular. We ought to do it at once.

At the last session of the Congress a bill was passed by the Senate which provides for the promotion of vocational and industrial education which is of vital importance to the whole country because it concerns a matter, too long neglected, upon which the thorough industrial preparation of the country for the critical years of economic development immediately ahead of us in very large measure depends. May I not urge its early and favourable consideration by the House of Representatives and its early enactment into law? It contains plans which affect all interests and all parts of the country and I am sure that there is no legislation now pending before the Congress whose passage the country awaits with more thoughtful approval or greater impatience to see a great and admirable thing set in the way of being done.

There are other matters already advanced to the stage of conference between the two Houses of which it is not necessary that I should speak. Some practicable basis of agreement concerning them will no doubt be found and action taken upon them.

Inasmuch as this is, Gentlemen, probably the last occasion I shall have to address the Sixty-fourth Congress, I hope that you will permit me to say with what genuine pleasure and satisfaction I have cooperated with you in the many measures of constructive policy with which you have enriched the legislative annals of the country. It has been a privilege to labour in such company. I take the liberty of congratulating you upon the completion of a record of rare serviceableness and distinction. [Applause.]

At 1 o'clock and 18 minutes p. m. the President retired from the Hall of the House.

Thereupon the Vice President and the Members of the Senate returned to their Chamber.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, December 6, 1916.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we pray Thee to so order those unseen forces that give direction to the currents of human thought that our deliberations may be found to accord with the divine plan. Within the sphere of our human responsibility do Thou give to us Thy Spirit for guidance, and above all the measure of our thinking or asking may we be surrounded by Thy providence and grace. Forbid that anything should go out of this Chamber that would influence for evil the thoughts of the people. Grant that we may realize the far-reaching influence of every word and act, that being ordered by the Lord in all our deliberations we may be enabled to perpetuate the glorious institutions that have come from Thy hand through the currents of our history. Guide us in the thought and work of this day. For Christ's sake. Amen.

HENRY A. DU PONT, a Senator from the State of Delaware; WESLEY L. JONES, a Senator from the State of Washington; JAMES D. PHELAN, a Senator from the State of California; and WILLIAM ALDEN SMITH, a Senator from the State of Michigan, appeared in their seats to-day.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. PAGE presented a petition of Bellevue Chapter, Daughters of the American Revolution, of St. Albans, Vt., praying that the Government of the United States purchase "Monticello," the home of Thomas Jefferson, which was referred to the Committee on the Library.

Mr. WADSWORTH presented petitions of the congregations of the Baptist Church and the Presbyterian Church and of the Tourist Club, of Waverly, all in the State of New York, praying for the establishment of a national leprosarium, which were referred to the Committee on Public Health and National Quarantine.

He also presented petitions of the Trades Assembly; of Local Union No. 247, International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers; and of Central New York District Council, International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, all of Schenectady, in the State of New York, praying for the placing of an embargo on food products, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented petitions of sundry citizens of New York City, N. Y., praying for the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution to prohibit polygamy, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a memorial of the Trades Assembly of Schenectady, N. Y., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to provide for compulsory arbitration of industrial disputes, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented a petition of the Chamber of Commerce of Kingston, N. Y., praying for the enactment of legislation to extend the authority of the Interstate Commerce Commission, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

RAILWAY EMPLOYEES.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I wish to present petitions of some 300,000 men employed on the railroads in other than the service of the trains, praying for specific legislation. I ask that the letter addressed to me by the committee having the petitions in charge and the brief appeals of the so-called 80 per cent of the railway employees outside of the train service be read by the Secretary.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none. The Secretary will read.

The Secretary read as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., December 5, 1916.

Hon. FRANCIS G. NEWLANDS,
United States Senate, Washington.

SIR: We have the honor to address you on a matter of present interest and national importance—wage regulation for employees of interstate carriers by the Congress of the United States.

There has seldom been a time in the affairs of the Nation when a matter of such gravity and latent danger has confronted the Federal Government.

By those whom we represent it is not believed to be within the province of the Government of the United States to regulate the wages of men engaged in any of our great industries, for such regulation operates to deprive the laborer of the right to bargain with his employer for the service he sells. However, the Congress has taken upon itself the burden of regulating wages for some of the men engaged in the transportation service, and we submit that it should likewise legislate equitably for all men so engaged. Therefore we appeal to you to present to the Senate the accompanying petitions of those railway employees who are not included in the provisions of legislation heretofore enacted.

These petitions, signed by such of this class of employees as have had the opportunity, some 300,000 in number, citizens of 35 States, pray—

First. That provision be made for a thorough investigation by a duly appointed commission of all hours of service and wages of all railway employees;

Second. That after such investigation said commission be empowered to fix an equitable scale of wages for all such employees; and

Third. That in order to prevent destructive and ruinous interruptions of interstate commerce provision be made, binding alike upon employer and employee, for compulsory arbitration of all disputes involving the question of wages and hours of service.

Trusting that these prayers, which we believe are fair, just, and in the interest of the Nation as a whole, will receive the favorable consideration of the Congress, we are, sir,

Very respectfully,

ROBERT T. FRAZIER, Jr.,
Chairman, Engineering Department, Nashville, Chattanooga & St. Louis Railway, Nashville, Tenn.,
B. W. WALDEN,
Accounting Department, Chicago & Alton Railroad, Chicago, Ill.,
O. H. RADDATZ,
Accounting Department, Great Northern Railway, St. Paul, Minn.,
FRANK M. MCCABE,
Telegraph Department, Northern Pacific Railway, St. Paul, Minn.,
Committee Railway Employees' 80 Per Cent Movement.

List of States represented in the petitions of the railway employees' 80 per cent movement:

Alabama, Arkansas, Arizona, California, Delaware, Georgia, Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Idaho, Kentucky, Kansas, Louisiana, Michigan, Maryland, Minnesota, Missouri, Montana, Massachusetts, New York, New Jersey, New Mexico, Nebraska, North Carolina, North Dakota, Ohio, Oregon, Pennsylvania, South Carolina, South Dakota, Tennessee, Texas, Washington, Wisconsin, and Wyoming.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I ask also that the headings of the petitions be read by the Secretary, the petitions now being at the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

AN APPEAL OF THE 80 PER CENT.

We, the undersigned citizens of the State of ———, employees of the ——— Railroad, and among those comprising more than 80 per cent of the employees of the railways of our State and country, being confronted with the possibility of the entire paralyzation of the railways of the country by the proposed general strike of the four orders of trainmen, a group of less than 20 per cent of the entire number of railway employees, and the consequent curtailment of income to us, the more than 80 per cent, and to whom such a curtailment would be ruinous, and fully realizing that under this great Government, where the ruling doctrine is "The greatest good to the greatest number"; we, the large majority, more than 80 per cent, of the people to be directly injured by such destructive methods of the few who happen to be placed in a position where they can use them—having a clear and definite right to be protected (the general public and all other industries seriously endangered also having that right):

Do earnestly petition you, our Senators and Representatives, individually, and as the Congress of the Nation, and pray that some definite legislative action be taken whereby the vast majority of the people of the country shall be protected from a destructive interruption of interstate commerce, due wholly to selfish action of a small group of men, and all differences which may arise between railways and employees shall be settled by proper arbitration.

In this you will recognize the fundamental principle of the Republic, and that no group of men ought to be permitted, directly or indirectly, to conspire to an end calculated to benefit them only and, directly or indirectly, work wrong and loss upon the great majority.

The second petition is as follows:

Date blank——

Mr. STONE. I should like to have the names read.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I will state to the Senator from Missouri that this is simply the heading of the petition.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator can not be heard on this side. Some of us here really do not know what is going on.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I will simply state that the headings which are now being read by the Secretary are the headings signed by these petitioners. I am told that there are about 300,000 names in the petitions, but the general statement which they signed is contained in the two papers which are about to be read by the Secretary.

Mr. STONE. Yet to be read?

Mr. NEWLANDS. One has been read and the other is about to be read. So if the Senator should require the names of the petitioners to be read it would mean the reading of 300,000 names.

Mr. STONE. When I made the suggestion I supposed that there were certain names of representatives, of gentlemen who were presenting the petitions.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I will state to the Senator that I was called upon yesterday by a committee representing the so-called 80 per cent of railway employees, being that proportion of the railway employees who are not engaged in the actual operation of trains, and I suggested to them that they should send me a formal letter which I could present to the Senate of the United States in presenting their petition. That formal letter, signed by the committee, has already been read and will appear in the RECORD.

Mr. STONE. Let the Secretary proceed.

The SECRETARY. The second form of petition is as follows:

To the President and the Congress of the United States:

We, the undersigned, citizens of the State of ———, are employed by the ——— ——— Railroad, which is engaged in handling interstate transportation of every character, including the United States mails and men and munitions for the Army and Navy of the United States.

We are among the 80 per cent of the employees of said company who are not actually engaged in train or yard service.

The average compensation of this 80 per cent of the employees is less than half the average compensation of those engaged in the train and yard service.

Many of us have more hours of service than do the train and yard men and the work which most of us perform is more laborious than their work. Equal or greater skill—acquired through a longer period of training—is required for the performance of the work of many of us than is necessary to do the work of the train and yard employees.

On September 2, 1916, the Congress enacted a law which was, on the following day, approved by the President which will have the effect of increasing the wages of train and yard service men about 25 per cent without in any way protecting the 80 per cent. When this law becomes effective—on January 1, 1917—the chances for betterment of the condition of the 80 per cent will be diminished by reason of the great tax upon the revenues of the railroads in paying this 25 per cent increase to the train and yard service employees.

We appeal to you to enact a system of legislation that will provide for a thorough investigation, through a commission, of the wages paid by railroads engaged in interstate commerce, which will empower said commission or board, after such investigation, to fix equitable scales of wages for the employees of such railroads, and which will further provide, in order to prevent destructive and ruinous strikes, for compulsory arbitration of all questions relating to conditions of work, hours of service, and wages.

NAME.	BRANCH OF SERVICE.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, the first paper read was signed by several men whose titles were given as representing some organizations. The first one represented, as I caught the reading, is an organization described as the "engineering department." I should like to ask the Senator what is the engineering department?

Mr. NEWLANDS. I will examine the letter and will then answer the Senator's question. [Examining.] I understand that this letter is signed by men who represent organizations. It is a committee of the railway employees' 80-per-cent movement, and it consists of Robert T. Frazier, chairman, who belongs to the engineering department of the Nashville, Chattanooga & St. Louis Railway, Nashville, Tenn.

Mr. STONE. That brings the Senator to the point of my inquiry.

Mr. NEWLANDS. One of these men represents the engineering department.

Mr. STONE. What is that?

Mr. NEWLANDS. I presume it is the engineering department of this railroad.

Mr. STONE. Does the Senator mean locomotive engineers?

Mr. NEWLANDS. No; I think not. Another is the representative of the accounting department of the Chicago & Alton Railway; another is the representative of the accounting department of the Great Northern Railway; and another is the representative of the telegraph department of the Northern Pacific Railway.

Mr. STONE. The Senate heard all that read. The Senator from Nevada, then, can not tell me just what is meant by the term "engineering department"?

Mr. NEWLANDS. I understand it to mean, not the engineers who are engaged in operating trains but that branch of every railway system that has charge of the engineering problems of the railway.

Mr. OVERMAN. The civil engineers.

Mr. STONE. Civil engineers?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Yes; civil engineers and construction engineers.

Mr. STONE. The construction engineers?

Mr. NEWLANDS. And so forth; yes.

Mr. STONE. I desire to be informed about that. Do the men who sign this paper represent any organization of men employed by railroads?

Mr. NEWLANDS. I am not accurately informed regarding that, but my impression is that the men who signed these petitions are not organized as are the railway brotherhoods.

Mr. STONE. Was the Senator from Nevada visited by the representatives of these petitioners?

Mr. NEWLANDS. The men who signed this letter called upon me yesterday and stated that they had petitions bearing the signatures of 300,000 employees of railway companies outside of the operation of trains and yards and that they desired to present these petitions to the United States Senate.

Mr. STONE. Did the Senator understand that these 300,000 men were antagonizing the so-called brotherhoods in their controversies with the executives of the railroads?

Mr. NEWLANDS. I think the main object——

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I hope Senators will speak a little louder. It is impossible to hear this interesting colloquy on this side of the Chamber.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I think the main object, as shown by their letter, is to get relief for the remaining 80 per cent of the employees of the railroads, and that in presenting the petition for investigation and legislation they do complain that a preference is being given to the members of the railway brotherhoods. To that extent they seem to be opposed to the legislation which has been adopted.

Mr. STONE. Of course I do not now, Mr. President, enter upon that question. That is a question which was more or less debated in the last session, the contention being made by Senators upon the floor that the so-called Adamson bill, then pending, was intended to promote the interests of certain classes of railway employees to the exclusion of a larger class. The railroad executives themselves in their contention here at Washington presented the same view. I have not in mind at all to enter upon any discussion of that question. I simply wanted to get the information the Senator might have from his conferences with these gentlemen as to their attitude, just whom they represent, how it was brought about, what influence instigated this movement at this particular time, and whether it was a movement antagonistic to legislation already enacted and that which is pending.

Of course we know, Mr. President, that there are influences—powerful influences, to be more specific, as I have no objection to being—at work, and that the executives of many—not all, but many—of the great railroads of the country are arrayed against any legislation along the lines of that we have been considering. I merely wanted to find out if I could just what influences were operating at this moment, if the Senator knows—and I should imagine he knew, for he is a very acute Senator; he is considering this subject and is in consultation with these men—and the Senate and the country, particularly the Senate, ought to be advised as to just what it is we are now confronting.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I am not informed as to what influences are back of this movement. While I was greatly occupied I had a brief interview, lasting only a few moments, with this committee, and they requested me to present the petition of these employees. I thought it my duty to present it, just as I would have presented a petition of the brotherhoods or of organized labor for the consideration of the Senate, if requested so to do. I have no doubt that for some period of time this movement has progressed for obtaining the signatures. The number of the signatures, some 300,000 I am told, would indicate that.

As to the general character of the movement I do not understand that it is a protest against beneficial action in favor of the members of the railway brotherhoods. It is rather a protest against preferential action and an insistence that, whilst the claims of the highly-paid operatives of the railroads are being considered by Congress, the claims of those not so fortunate should also be considered. I thought it a proper request to make of me and so I presented the petition.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, will the Senator permit a question?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Yes.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator will remember that when the bill which was passed near the close of the last session was under consideration, some of us suggested that it was incomprehensible to us that legislation affecting a small proportion of the men engaged in railroad pursuits, increasing their wages, should not be followed by a request for legislation affecting the wages of the million or two millions of men who were engaged in railroad work and getting much lower wages. Now, is not this simply a movement on the part of those men, which some of us anticipated would follow, and which, I think properly follows, to have their cases considered by a commission and a report made as to the proper adjustment of wages, so far as they are concerned? It does not seem to me that this can possibly emanate from the managers of the railroads as has been suggested, but from the men who are getting relatively low wages in the employment of these railroads. Is not that the fact?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Well, I do not know, Mr. President, where it emanates from. All I know is that the signatures of some 300,000 men employed by the railroads are presented through a petition asking Congress to investigate and give them relief——

Mr. GALLINGER. Precisely.

Mr. NEWLANDS. And that their action is in a measure a protest against what they regard as preferential legislation. I ask, Mr. President——

Mr. GALLINGER. I will ask if the petition headings submitted by the Senator from Nevada have been read, because I have a very brief statement which I desire to have read.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I wish to ask that the petitions presented by me be referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, that reference will be made.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I have a petition which came in the mail to-day from employees in the maintenance of way department of American railways—whatever that means—in which they represent that they are associated with 400,000 railroad employees who are underpaid, and they petition for relief. I ask that the heading of that petition be read. It is signed by 51 men in the city of Nashua, N. H.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none, and the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

To the honorable the Members of the Senate and House of Representatives in the United States Congress assembled, greeting:

We, the undersigned voters and employees in the maintenance of way department of American railways, do respectfully petition your honorable body to include the employees in our department in the workings of the eight-hour day. We respectfully submit for your consideration the following facts:

First. That the number of employees affected are in excess of 400,000.

Second. That our work is of a most strenuous nature—rough, dirty, and laborious—and has to be performed often under the most unfavorable conditions, in heat and cold, winter and summer, rain or shine, our men are exposed to all kinds of inclement weather conditions by night and day, as we are subject to a call at any time, and in case of severe storm we are expected to go on duty without a call except as our experience shall dictate that same is necessary to preserve intact the tracks and bridges, for the safety of which we are held responsible.

Third. That at certain times, owing to the strenuous nature of our employment, men are often physically unable to stand the strain, and as a consequence in a few years are broken in health and unable to continue longer at this work.

Fourth. For the preservation of health and prolongation of life, aside from any pecuniary consideration, we deem an eight-hour day an actual necessity.

Fifth. At the present time, although we must serve an apprenticeship of from three to seven years to become proficient in the trade to earn a foreman's position, our department is one of the poorest paid in the entire service, while our duties and responsibilities are among the most exacting.

Wherefore we pray you to give our petition consideration and grant us the relief we so earnestly desire.

L. V. BARRETT

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, I should like to ask Senators who have presented these petitions if the gentlemen who have signed the petitions have asked for relief from the companies by whom they are employed? Do Senators know whether or not they have made such requests?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I do not know. I only had a brief interview with them. They asked me to present this petition, and I have done so.

Mr. LANE. It would be a matter of information to know whether they had first applied to Congress or to their employers.

Mr. NEWLANDS. As to that I am not informed.

EMBARGO ON FOOD PRODUCTS.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, in the RECORD of the proceedings of yesterday, on page 13, it appears that I presented a petition of sundry citizens of Jackson County, Fla. The statement is that the petition prayed for the placing of an embargo on food products. That is a mistake. The petition, on the contrary, urged opposition to such an embargo. I desire to have printed in the RECORD a letter which accompanied the petition, and which will explain it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, that may be done.

The letter referred to is as follows:

MARIANNA, FLA., December 2, 1916.

Hon. D. U. FLETCHER,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I note from the press the probability of a measure advocated by Mr. FITZGERALD, of New York, I believe, to be introduced in Congress placing an embargo on the exportation of corn, wheat, meat, and other food products. Believing that such a measure would operate against the best interest of this section, I have secured a petition indorsed by some of our representative people requesting that you oppose the passage of such embargo. If you can consistently oppose the passage of this measure, we would thank you to consider the inclosed petition and take such action in the premises as your judgment dictates.

Thanking you for this consideration, I am,
Yours, very truly,
W. J. DANIEL.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. WILLIAMS submitted an amendment proposing to repeal so much of the provision of the act of June 30, 1915, relative to the salary of the commissioner of immigration at New Orleans, La., so that the annual salary paid him shall be left to the discretion of the Secretary of Labor, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BORAH submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $10,000 for the investigation and survey of what is known as the Black Canyon irrigation project in the counties of Canyon, Gem, and Ada, in the State of Idaho, intended to be proposed by him to the urgent deficiency appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

CORRUPT PRACTICES.

Mr. KENYON submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 15842) to revise, amend, and codify the laws relating to publicity of contributions and expenditures made for the purpose of influencing the nomination and election of candidates for the offices of Senator and Representative in the Congress of the United States, extending the same to candidates for nomination and election to the offices of President and Vice President of the United States, limiting the amount which may be expended, providing for the publicity of campaign expenses, and for other purposes, which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

INAUGURAL CEREMONIES.

Mr. OVERMAN submitted the following concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 27), which was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That a joint committee, consisting of three Senators and three Representatives, to be appointed by the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives, respectively, is authorized to make the necessary arrangements for the inauguration of the President-elect of the United States on the 5th day of March next.

REGULATION OF IMMIGRATION—NOTICES ON THE CALENDAR.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, on yesterday I gave notice that immediately upon the conclusion of the unfinished business I would call up the immigration bill. It has been the custom of the Senate since I have been here, when such notices have been given, to have them printed on the calendar, so that Senators might be aware of the intention of the one giving the notice, and be prepared to meet it. I see that the notice is not printed on to-day's calendar. I just rose to know whether or not that course had been taken simply with reference to this particular bill, or whether the proper authorities had decided to abolish the custom of printing such notices.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair supposes the Senate might as well decide now as at any time the question as to whether it is the duty of the Secretary to put on the face of the calendar anything except the unfinished business. While it has nothing to do with this particular bill, the Chair will state to the Senator from South Carolina that last session there was hardly room on the front page to publish all sorts of notices, and the Chair then ordered that they be not further published until there was an order of the Senate to that effect.

Now, if the Senate wants these notices to go on the calendar, all it has to do is to say so. The Chair has been impressed with the idea that the only thing to be put on the face of the calendar is the unfinished business or unanimous-consent agreements.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I will state that I have not given the matter any particular thought, but I did not care, for several reasons, to have the notice that I gave go without an explanation. Of course, the Senate can do as it sees fit about the matter. I have no particular desire one way or another, but, as it had been the custom, I thought perhaps it would keep the Senate aware of my intention to do what I said yesterday that I would do. The matter is left entirely with the Senate as to whether the custom or usage will be abolished, or perhaps a rule will be adopted in regard to it.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Certainly.

Mr. LODGE. Do I understand that the Senator's notice is that upon the final disposition of the present unfinished business it is his intention to move to take up the immigration bill?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I was gratified on yesterday to hear the Senator inform the Senate that that was his purpose. That is in the RECORD, but I think it is a very bad practice to place on the calendar a suggestion that a Senator is to move at a certain time to take up a bill. It gives the Senator giving that notice no priority over other Senators. During the last session we had on one calendar four notices from four different Senators that when the unfinished business was concluded they would make motions to proceed to the consideration of four different bills.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It was just at that time that the Chair ordered them left off the calendar until the Senate should order them to be put on again.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I agree with the Senator that it is a bad practice; but when a Senator rises and gives notice that on a certain day he intends to call up a bill it seems to me that that ought to be on the calendar, so that Senators may know that that bill is coming up at that time.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes; if the Senator suggests that he will move to take up a bill on a certain day, I think that might well go on the calendar.

Mr. OVERMAN. I think that ought to go on the calendar.

Mr. GALLINGER. But a statement that he will move to take it up when the unfinished business is concluded is a different proposition.

Mr. OVERMAN. I think so myself, because that is not any notice at all; but when notice is given that on a certain date a Senator will move to take up a certain bill, it seems to me it should appear on the calendar.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. The only question that was in my mind was this: I wanted it clear as to whether or not the custom generally was to be discontinued. I have no choice in the matter one way or the other, and have not considered whether it was a good or a bad practice; but I did not want the immigration bill to be left at that particular point without an explanation that the practice was going to apply to all similar cases.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will simply add that when the Senator from South Carolina finds a favorable opportunity to move to take up the immigration bill, he will find great support on this side of the Chamber.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. If the Senator from South Carolina does not change his mind, and the present unfinished business seems to promise interminable debate, he will move to take up the immigration bill, the unfinished business notwithstanding.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Chair a question, in view of the Chair's statement that he has made an order that the printing of notices on the cover of the calendar shall be discontinued. Suppose a Senator wishes to give notice that he desires to address the Senate at a certain time, the usual form being at the conclusion of the morning business. That has been a practice here for a long time. Is it understood now that notices of that kind are not to go upon the calendar in the future?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair has not the slightest objection to the Committee on Rules making any order that it pleases. If it wants the face of the calendar filled up with all sorts of notices it has a right to have it done. Notice that a Senator is going to speak at a certain time depends, the Chair should say, on whether or not the Chair recognizes him when that time comes. Ordinarily he does if it is possible to do so.

At the last session of the Senate, however, there were four notices for the same day and the same hour that four Senators were going to make speeches at the same time, and the Chair ordered them left off. There is no rule of the Senate on the subject. There has never been any order of the Senate on the subject. The Chair does not care anything about it.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I do not care very much about the matter one way or the other, but I do not see what harm comes from putting notices on the cover of the calendar in accordance with the practice we have been following. Now, there may be some conflicts. Of course, two or three Senators might give notice that they would call up given bills on a given day; but the Senate could settle that when the time came. Any Senator can call up a bill whether he has given previous notice or not, and he can make a motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill. The mere fact that a notice had been printed on the cover of the calendar would give no preference to the Senator giving the notice.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Why put it there, then?

Mr. STONE. The reason for putting it there, as I see it, Mr. President, is that a Senator in charge of a bill, as in the case of the immigration bill, could in that way inform the Senate as to his purpose. This notice we would see from day to day, every morning, when we took up the calendar, and thus be advised that at a certain time a motion would be made to take up a certain important measure.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. STONE. Thus the Senate would be advised. Senators, if interested, could be present to oppose the consideration of the measure or to advocate it. A Senator might desire to address the Senate on some important matter. He puts upon the face of the calendar a notice that at a given time he will address the Senate on a given subject. There might be Senators who would desire to hear the address, and the notice would be of use to them.

Mr. BORAH. What I wanted to ask the Senator was this: I presume, since the question has been raised, that it might be wise to suggest that the Committee on Rules prescribe what shall go upon the front of the calendar.

Mr. STONE. I think that is a very good suggestion, Mr. President. As a matter of first impression, I am not disposed to favor the absolute wiping out of the practice of having these notices placed upon the front of the calendar; but it might be well enough, to prevent any undue abuse of it, to have the Senate Committee on Rules prescribe some regulation of the subject. But what I want to ask now is whether, if a notice should be given to-day that a motion would be made to take up a given bill on Saturday, it would appear on the face of the calendar?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It certainly would.

Mr. STONE. It would?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It certainly would.

Mr. STONE. On the calendar?

The VICE PRESIDENT. On the calendar. That is notice of a definite proposal.

Mr. STONE. I thought the Vice President had indicated to the contrary.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Oh, no. The Vice President has tried to make himself clear that the reason these notices were stricken off was that they were each of this character—that "at the conclusion of the unfinished business now pending before the Senate I will move to take up a certain bill," and there were four of those notices. The Vice President ordered them left off the calendar, and ordered nothing put on there that was not definite in its character.

CUSTOMS COLLECTION DISTRICTS.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and referred to the Committee on Finance:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

The sundry civil act approved August 1, 1914, contains the following provision, viz:

> The President is authorized from time to time, as the exigencies of the service may require, to rearrange, by consolidation or otherwise, the several customs-collection districts and to discontinue ports of entry by abolishing the same or establishing others in their stead: Provided, That the whole number of customs-collection districts, ports of entry, or either of them, shall at no time be made to exceed those now established and authorized except as the same may hereafter be provided by law: Provided further, That hereafter the collector of customs of each customs-collection district shall be officially designated by the number of the district for which he is appointed and not by the name of the port where the headquarters are situated and the President is authorized from time to time to change the location of the headquarters in any customs-collection district as the needs of the service may require: And provided further, That the President shall, at the beginning of each regular session, submit to Congress a statement of all acts, if any, done hereunder and the reasons therefor.

Pursuant to the requirement of the third proviso to the said provision, I have to state that customs-collection districts Nos.

2 and 3, with headquarters ports at Burlington and Newport, Vt., were, on November 21, 1914, by Executive order offective January 1, 1915, consolidated into one customs-collection district, No. 2, with headquarters at St. Albans. This consolidation was made for the reason that the customs business in the State of Vermont could be handled by one collector, and would result in a reduction of the expense of administration.

The port of entry at Somers Point, N. J., in district No. 11, headquarters port, Philadelphia, was abolished by Executive order dated November 30, 1915, to become effective January 1, 1916, for the reason that the customs business at said place was not of sufficient volume to warrant the expenditure necessary to continue the office.

The port of entry at Charlotte, N. Y., in district No. 8, headquarters port, Rochester, N. Y., was abolished by Executive order dated January 28, 1916, to become effective February 1, 1916, for the reason that Charlotte had been by the laws of the State of New York included within the corporate limits of and merged with the city of Rochester.

By Executive order dated February 7, 1916, the boundary line between district No. 29, Oregon, and district No. 30, Washington, was changed so as to detach that part of the State of Washington which embraces the waters of the Columbia River and the north bank thereof west of the one hundred and nineteenth degree of west longitude from customs collection district No. 30, and to place the same within the limits of district No. 29. This action was taken in order to facilitate the transaction of customs business on the north bank of the Columbia River.

By Executive order dated April 24, 1916, to become effective May 1, 1916, Winston-Salem, N. C., was created a port of entry in customs-collection district No. 15, headquarters port, Wilmington, N. C., for the reason that a commercial necessity existed which warranted such action.

By Executive order dated November 21, 1916, to become effective December 1, 1916, Gladstone, Mich., headquarters port, Detroit, Mich., was abolished for the reason that the customs business had been removed to Sault Ste. Marie, Mich.

WOODROW WILSON.

THE WHITE HOUSE, December 6, 1916.

REPORT ON AERONAUTICS (S. DOC. NO. 559).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

In compliance with the provisions of the act of Congress approved March 3, 1915 (naval appropriation act, Public, No. 273, 63d Cong.), I transmit herewith the Second Annual Report of the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1916.

WOODROW WILSON.

THE WHITE HOUSE, December 6, 1916.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The morning business is closed.

CIRCUIT AND DISTRICT JUDGES.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I move that we proceed with the consideration of Senate bill 706, the first bill on the calendar.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That seems to be the first bill on the calendar.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes, Mr. President. I move to proceed with the consideration of that bill. I make the motion because I think it proper and I have the right to do it.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Let us have the yeas and nays on that motion, Mr. President.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina (when Mr. HARDWICK's name was called). The junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK] is detained from the Senate on account of sickness. He is paired with the junior Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS].

Mr. WADSWORTH (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Kansas [Mr. THOMPSON]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. SIMMONS (after having voted in the affirmative). I should like to inquire whether the junior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP] has voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. SIMMONS. I have a pair with that Senator, but I transfer the pair to the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. LEA] and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. CHILTON. I have a pair with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL], which I transfer to the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL], and vote "yea."

Mr. DILLINGHAM (after having voted in the negative). I should like to inquire whether the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH] has voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I withdraw my vote, having a general pair with that Senator.

Mr. McLEAN (after having voted in the negative). Has the junior Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS] voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. McLEAN. I withdraw my vote, being paired with that Senator.

Mr. GALLINGER (after having voted in the negative). I inquire whether the Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN] has voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have a general pair with that Senator, which I will transfer to the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. OWEN. I transfer my pair with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CATRON] to the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] and vote "yea."

Mr. GRONNA (after having voted in the negative). May I inquire if the senior Senator from Maine [Mr. JOHNSON] has voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. GRONNA. I have a pair with that Senator, and I will ask leave to withdraw my vote.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BROUSSARD] on account of illness.

The result was announced—yeas 42, nays 33, as follows:

YEAS—43.

So the motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 706) to amend section 260 of an act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yesterday I suggested an amendment striking out certain language in the bill and substituting other language. The exact change that I ask is to strike out "if in his opinion the public good so requires, may" and substitute "if in his opinion the efficient conduct of the business of the court so requires, shall." Yesterday I used the word "proper" before "conduct." I use now the word "efficient." I send the amendment to the Clerk's desk and ask that it may be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 10, line 10, in lieu of the amendment proposed on yesterday, after the word "President" and the comma, strike out the words "if in his opinion the public good so requires, may" and insert in lieu the words "if, in his opinion, the efficient conduct of the business of the court so requires, shall."

Mr. SMOOT. I notice that the Senator on July 19, 1916, offered an amendment to the bill and that as amended the bill was ordered printed.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. No; the amendment was not made.

Mr. SMOOT. Then, with the proposed amendment, the bill was ordered printed. I notice the amendment which was offered at that time by the Senator reads to strike out the words he now proposes to strike out and insert the following:

If he finds that the efficient administration of the business of the court so requires shall.

I understand the Senator makes a change in that amendment.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I modeled this language a little more exactly after the language used in the embargo cases. In the embargo cases the language used was "if in his judgment," and I use the language "if in his opinion," that having been the language used in the House bill and reported by the Judiciary Committee. There is not any substantial difference. I would as willingly use one expression as the other.

Mr. CLARK. I should like to ask the Senator from Georgia, who proposes the amendment, if in his opinion the amendment proposed by the Senator makes any practical difference in the operation of the bill?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do not think so. I think the other language——

Mr. CLARK. Then I should like to ask the Senator what is the purpose of the amendment?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. To remove all doubt as to the meaning of the language in the original bill. In discussing the subject when it was up some months ago I stated what I considered was the meaning of the language in the bill, but that I would be glad to relieve all doubt as to its meaning and modify the language as I now propose. I think either form of language is sufficient. I think the word "may" in the bill means "shall," but I prefer to use the word "shall" so that there can be no possible doubt.

Mr. CLARK. My inquiry was not directed to the use of the word "shall" or the word "may," but to the other portion proposed to be stricken out. The Senator proposes to strike out the words "if in his opinion the public good so requires" and insert "if in his opinion the efficient conduct of the business of the court so requires." I ask the Senator if there is any practical difference or if it would make any difference in the practical operation of the law which of those is used?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I think the correct interpretation of the language in the original bill would be the language used in this amendment. That is the interpretation I would place upon the language of the original bill; but as the bill has not yet been passed and some question was raised as to the meaning I think it desirable to use the language offered in this amendment; especially do I deem it desirable to substitute the word "shall" for the word "may."

Mr. CLARK. I do not know that I have any objection to the amendment. To my notion it means precisely what the other language would mean.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I think so; but the amendment saves the necessity of construction.

Mr. CLARK. I think with the bill as passed by the House whenever a judge arrives at the age of 70 years and has had 10 years of service the President may appoint an additional judge for that circuit or that district. I do not believe any language can be used that will modify the practical application in that way. In other words, my belief is that the bill is intended and will be so construed as authority to the President to increase at the present time the number of United States judges by from 17 to 20——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Three or four of them have died since we were here last summer.

Mr. CLARK. Call it 14, then. There are from 14 to 16, and to appoint an additional Federal judge whenever any Federal judge has reached the age of 70 years and been 10 years in service. That to my notion is the prime object and purpose of this bill, and I do not believe the words which the Senator proposes as an amendment conceal that purpose to any great extent.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I will say to the Senator I have no desire to conceal any purpose.

Mr. CLARK. If the Senator had waited until I had gotten through, he would have heard me say that the words proposed in the Senator's amendment do not conceal that purpose any more effectually than do the words of the bill as passed by the House. I, myself, if I was going to vote for the bill, perhaps would prefer the amendment proposed by the Senator from Georgia, because at least it has a little better appearance than the wording of the House bill; but, as I said, the whole practical effect of the entire bill is in my judgment exactly as I have stated, to allow the President of the United States whenever he so desires to put in these additional judges under the conditions expressed in the bill.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, while the amendment suggested by the Senator from Georgia is pending, I propose to discuss somewhat fully the bill. We have before us in this bill a series of remarkable propositions all coming under the same general principle.

The bill proposes to amend the Judicial Code: First, by investing the President with the power to appoint an additional circuit judge in any circuit where the present incumbent of that office having served continuously for a period of 10 years has reached the age of 70 years and still desires to remain in office and perform the work of a judge.

Second, the additional judge so appointed takes the place of the present incumbent as one of the judges of the circuit court of appeals, the present judge being to all intents and purposes relieved from the duties which had devolved upon him as one of the judges of said circuit court of appeals. The judge of 70 years of age is now made the junior of the other judges of that court.

Third, by the special grace of the presiding judge of that court the old incumbent may be designated to sit on occasion in the hearing of a cause, but only when in the opinion of such presiding judge the public good may so require. That is according to the terms of the original bill. Whether that part is changed by the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia, I am not quite sure, but I hardly think so. Under the terms of the bill the Chief Justice is empowered to, on occasion, designate the circuit judge, who has declined to resign at 70, to aid in the hearing of a cause or causes pending before the circuit court of appeals in some other circuit.

Fourth, the same rule is made to apply to district court judges who have reached the age of 70 years after 10 years of continuous service, and, unconscious of any impairment of necessary faculties for the performance of their work, have been careless about resigning. They are to be henceforth relieved save as they may be on occasion designated for duty by a circuit judge under existing provisions of law.

All this is, Mr. President, as I shall attempt to show, nothing less than an attempt to do by indirection what no lawyer would propose to do directly, namely, terminate the services of all Federal circuit and district court judges who, having served a period of 10 years, have reached the age of 70 years. It is true that if the incumbent on reaching the age of 70 does not voluntarily retire he is apparently continued in office during life or good behavior, and that on full pay; but he is required without his consent to relinquish the right to exercise the functions and to perform the duties and to possess the dignities of that high office in favor of another to whom in the terms of the bill the older incumbent is now to become the junior judge. As the law now stands there is the right of voluntary retirement at the age of 70 or at any time after that age, but the right to retire at any time after 70 from the office and from the performance of the duties that go with the office is to be superseded by a legislative plan whereunder there will be an involuntary surrender of the functions and duties of the office.

To surrender these is, in effect, to surrender the office. Title and emoluments do not constitute an office. Inseparable from the office are the duties and the business of the office; they are of the essence of the office, and a man can not be said to hold an office unless he has the right and is under the obligation to perform the work of the office.

The most liberal interpretation you can put upon the relation of the old judge who will be affected by this bill to the new orders of things will be that through such change he will be demoted. Demotion is not confined to a simple reduction in salary or compensation as in the case of a civil-service employee. We are familiar with demotions of this kind when changes of administration take place. But demotion primarily means to be reduced to a lower rank or grade as in the case of school children who may through failure in examinations be required to go back from the seventh to the sixth grade instead of being promoted to the eighth. Just so with this bill. He who was appointed to the first and only rank will be required by legislative manipulation to not only discontinue the regular work of his rank but suffer as well loss or degradation of rank to a junior place, and this by the very language of the bill. Viewed either as an enforced retirement or as a demotion, there is such change in the relation of the incumbent to all that pertains to the office except the compensation as, in my judgment, results in a plain violation of that provision of the Constitution under which these courts are established and these Federal judges appointed.

In the series of resolutions outlining a frame of government submitted by John Randolph early in the proceedings of the Convention of 1787, provision was made for a Federal judiciary the members of which were to hold their offices "during good behavior." Again and again at many sittings of the convention the proposition for the establishment of such judiciary and the tenure of office of the judges came up for discussion. The provision appeared in many different forms, but nowhere in all the proceedings did any statement omit the declaration that tenure was to be "during good behavior," and the finished product of the labors of the convention in this respect appeared at last as section 1 of Article III:

The judicial power of the United States shall be vested in one Supreme Court and in such inferior courts as the Congress may from time to time ordain and establish. The judges, both of the Supreme and inferior courts, shall hold their offices during good behavior, and shall at stated times receive for their services a compensation, which shall not be diminished during their continuance in office.

Whatever prudence on the part of the individual judge may dictate, whatever infirmity of body or mind or the good of the service may dictate concerning voluntary retirement when a judge has reached the age of 70, we know that tenure during good behavior is not conditioned upon age, nor even upon the infirmities of age, for despite these the tenure is for life unless bad behavior sooner terminates the right to hold the place and gives cause for removal by impeachment or otherwise.

In an early case decided by Lord Holt in 1693 (Barcourt v. Fox, 1 Shower, 515) the court held and decided as follows:

"During good behavior" is during life; it is so long as he doth behave himself well, i. e., if he behaves himself well in it so long as he lives, he is to have it so long as he lives. During life and during good demeanor are, therefore, synonymous phrases; the same thing when used with relation to offices. The condition annexed, if observed, continues it during life; the contrary determines it. This is the rule and law in case of offices in general, and must hold in this, for this is an office; * * * it is capable of being enjoyed for life, and consequently of being granted so, especially when an act of Parliament declares it shall be so. There is nothing in the nature of the employment that hinders it.

This definition of the term "during good behavior" prevailed in English law at the time of the adoption of the Constitution. By a familiar rule of interpretation it is the meaning which, without other considerations, must be given to the term or phrase "during good behavior." But we are not without American authority. According to the decision in Smith v. Bryan (100 Va., 199), "An official tenure 'during good behavior' is for life unless sooner determined for cause. And removal for cause implies a right to be heard and a trial in one form of procedure or another."

Let us bear in mind the language of the Constitution. It is, they "shall hold their offices during good behavior."

And this now invites us to consider for a moment the legal meaning and significance of the word "office." As we pursue the inquiry we shall see that fundamentally an office is a right; a right to exercise certain functions, to perform certain duties. Take away this right and you take away the office; take from the incumbent the right to perform some of the duties which the law prescribes for that office without diminishing the duties of the office itself and pro tanto you deprive the incumbent of his office. Moreover, it is not the individual incumbent alone that is affected by such diminution of duties or by a deprivation of the right to perform the office. The office is a public office, and since, as in this case, a man can not under the supreme law of the land be appointed to the office for a shorter term than during good behavior or for life it must be presumed that the public interest requires the appointee, he being capable, to hold the office during the term for which he was appointed. As I have attempted to show, however, he is not holding the office unless, having the capacity and the will, he is permitted to do that which the law prescribes shall be done by any person appointed to the place.

An office, as defined by Bouvier, is a right to exercise a public function or employment and to take the fees and emoluments belonging to it.

Burrill says:

The idea of an office clearly embraces the ideas of tenure, duration, fees or emoluments, rights and powers, as well as that of duty.

Three writers, Bacon in 1750, Cunningham in 1783, and Tomlins in 1836, using practically the same language, say that the word "officium" (office) principally implies a duty, and in the next place the charge of such duty.

Blackstone defines offices as a right to exercise a public or private employment.

The definition given by Goodnow in his work entitled "The principle of administrative law in the United States, 1905," is illuminating. It is as follows:

By an office is understood a right or duty conferred or imposed by law on a person or several persons to act in the execution and application of the law.

The first right to be noticed is the right of the officer to exercise the powers and perform the duties connected with his office. A continuing right to the office can be spoken of only in the case of an officer whose tenure of office is independent of any administrative superior, so far as the length of term is concerned. Only those officers have a permanent right to exercise the powers and perform the duties of the office who may not be arbitrarily discharged by any administrative superior.

How significant the statement that "the first right to be noticed is the right of the officer to exercise the powers and perform the duties connected with his office."

What are the powers and duties of every district or circuit judge under the law? He is the one essential part of every district or circuit court charged with the duty to hear and determine all cases at law, all suits in equity over which the court to which he has been appointed has jurisdiction, and to hear and determine them in his own right as judge of that court. Likewise may he exercise all powers in interlocutory and ancillary proceedings and while sitting as judge in chambers, incident to his position or conferred by statute. He can do all things necessary to effect the object for which the court was established. All the judicial power vested in the court is called into exercise by the individual judge of that court and that power is as broad as the jurisdiction of the court under the law.

The definition of a public office as given by Mechem is interesting for the reason that it includes the other element of which some hint has already been given, namely, the public benefit to accrue from the exercise of the functions of the office by him who holds it:

A public office is the right, authority, and duty created and conferred by law, by which for a given period, either fixed by law or enduring at the pleasure of the creating power, an individual is invested with some portion of the sovereign functions of the Government, to be exercised by him for the benefit of the public. The individual so invested is a public officer.

Where the term of the officer is fixed by the constitution, the legislature can neither extend nor abridge it.

Mechem further says relative to the terms and tenure of the office and the want of power in the legislature to change the same:

But where the tenure and terms of office are fixed by the constitution, different considerations apply. Such provisions as the constitution makes are beyond the power of the legislature to alter or destroy.

And it is this contention, Mr. President, that the effect of this bill will be to alter or destroy the tenure of office as fixed by the terms of the Constitution itself.

Thus where a State constitution provides for the election of sheriffs and fixes the term of office, though it does not define what powers, rights, and duties shall attach or belong to the office, the legislature has no power to take from a sheriff a part of the duties and functions usually appertaining to the office and transfer it to an officer appointed in a different manner and holding the office by a different tenure.

The essential thing here is not that the power is transferred to another appointed in a different manner and holding by a different tenure, but that the powers and duties usually appertaining to the office are transferred at all.

Throop, in his treatise on the law relating to public office, in discussing the power of the legislature to remove an officer or abridge his term, had this to say:

But these principles are subject to the qualifications that the legislature can not remove an officer where the tenure of his office is fixed by the constitution, and it has also been said that the same result can not be effected indirectly by transferring the office to another or by abbreviating the term; in such a case the legislature can only abolish the office. It has also been held that where the office is created by the constitution, the tenure and compensation being left to be regulated by statute, the legislature can not virtually abolish the office by a colorable reduction of the compensation or by taking it away altogether. Nor can the legislature take from the officer the substance of the office and transfer it to another, to be appointed in a different manner, and to hold by a different tenure, although the name of the office is changed or the office divided, and the duties assigned to two or more officers under different names.

And that will apply, Mr. President, to the proposition involved in this bill, of treating the old incumbent not as senior, not as a judge of equal rank with any new appointee, but as junior judge, to be subject to the will of the new incumbent of the office. Mr. Throop cites many cases in support of these propositions.

Again, Mr. President, I say it is immaterial that the duties of the office are assigned to others, or to another appointed in a different manner who is to hold by a different tenure. The gist of the act, of the wrong, consists in taking from the officer the substance of the office. And this you surely do when you not only appoint a new judge who shall outrank the present incumbent, but when you relieve the incumbent from the performance of his regular duties, and leave it to the arbitrary will of another judge or judges whether the old incumbent shall perform a single one of those duties usually appertaining to the office.

Throop further says:

It is well settled that where the constitution creates or recognizes an office, and declares that the incumbent may be removed in a specified manner or for specified reasons, the legislature can not constitutionally provide by statute for his removal for any other reason or in any other manner.

But here you propose not to remove for any disability, nor for anything for which the judge might be impeached under the Constitution, nor is it the incapacitated individual judge against which the bill is aimed. You propose by this bill to remove Federal judges en bloc for no cause specified in the Constitution and against the plain provision that they shall hold their office during good behavior. Instead of belonging to an independent judiciary with power of direction and initiative in the administration of justice, in the manifold business of the circuit court of appeals or of the district court to which he was appointed under the Constitution and the law, he is relieved entirely, or if called to occasional service it is not by virtue of his right under the Constitution, for under this bill he need not be and probably will not be called at all, but if he is it will be as a subordinate and subject to the will of other judges.

Mr. President, it is not contemplated that his services will be needed even in the uncertain, desultory manner provided in the bill. It is evident that the whole scheme and purpose is to deprive these judges who after 10 years of service have reached the age of 70 years of the right to perform the duties of the office to which they were appointed, to provide for their involuntary retirement, and "will they nill they" appoint their Democratic successors.

The very terms of the bill show that no additional judges are in fact needed in addition to the number already qualified to serve in the circuit court of appeals or in the district court. The animus of this proposed measure is disclosed by the last paragraph, which is that—

> Upon the death or resignation of any circuit or district judge so entitled to resign, following the appointment of any additional judge as herein provided, the vacancy caused by such death or resignation of the said judge so entitled to resign shall not be filled, but the number of judges then in office shall be reduced accordingly.

Attempts have been made to deprive an officer of the fees of his office by relieving him of the duties of the office, but the office being a constitutional office, it was held that this could not be done. This was in the case of People v. Howland, Forty-fifth New York Statutes, page 347, and the court there held that there can be no public office with no duties to be performed.

Mr. President, it has been asserted, and not without reason, that the real object of this bill is to confer favors upon and give places to some 15 or 16 "deserving Democrats."

Let us give the author of the bill, the distinguished Senator from Georgia, the benefit of the doubt.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, one moment. The author of the bill was Attorney General McReynolds, who first recommended it when he was Attorney General, and then it was recommended again by Attorney General Gregory. The bill came from the Department of Justice. The Senator gives me credit for more than I deserve.

Mr. STERLING. I assumed that the distinguished Senator who introduced the bill, and who is now advocating it so earnestly, was the author of the bill.

Mr. COLT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JOHNSON of Maine in the chair). Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. STERLING. I yield to the Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. COLT. May I ask the Senator from Georgia if it is not a fact that the recommendations of the former Attorney General differed radically from the present bill, in that under his proposed bill the President was obliged to appoint?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. COLT. Because, in a conversation some time ago with Mr. Justice McReynolds, I understood him to say that this bill did not meet with his approval, for the reason, as I understood, that it gives the President discretionary power to appoint.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I should like to ask the Senator from Rhode Island if he will support a bill which would make it obligatory to appoint an additional judge when the old judge reaches the age of 70?

Mr. COLT. I might say that that bill would be open to the objection that the President would be obliged in every case, when a judge reaches the age of 70 and has served 10 consecutive years, to appoint another judge; and it hardly seems to me that that would be a practical measure, in that the effect would be to increase the number of judges more than was necessary. Further, I am opposed to any feature which allows either Congress or the Executive to demote or degrade a judge while he is holding the office of judge. Therefore I could not support the bill proposed by the Senator.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. If the Senator will allow me, the change from the recommendation of the Department of Justice in this bill simply consists in the modification of the provision which makes it obligatory upon the President, in all cases when a judge reaches the age of 70, to appoint the additional judge. The bill amended will provide that the appointment of the additional judge shall be made only if in the opinion of the President the efficient conduct of the business of the court so requires. That is the change from the bill recommended by the Department of Justice.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, may I, with the permission of the Senator from South Dakota, ask the Senator from Georgia a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. STERLING. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The Senator from Georgia, I think, knows that heretofore whenever a judge has reached the age of 70 years, and has declined to retire, but by reason of disability is not able fully to discharge the duties of the office, Congress has provided by a special bill for the appointment of an additional judge.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Is that a question addressed to me?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I make that statement of fact as preliminary to a suggestion or a question which I desire to ask of the Senator.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I will let the Senator finish.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Now, if that is correct—and my observation during my 12 years' service in this body convinces me that it is—what objection is there to leaving this discretion where it is now, whenever a case is presented such as is contemplated by this bill? Why should we take from Congress the discretion which it now possesses to pass upon the individual case and determine whether or not the inefficiency of the discharge of the judicial duties will justify the appointment of a new judge? Why take it from Congress and vest it in the President?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I will answer the Senator. In the first place, I dissent from the statement of fact that he announces. I dissent from the statement that Congress has taken action whenever the necessity arose, and I instance a circuit court judge in the fifth circuit. Bill after bill for the past five years has been introduced to provide an additional judge in the fifth circuit, where a judge had been bedridden for five or six years, where he had reached the age of 82 years, where he had not been on the bench for years, and never again was expected to perform the duties of his office. We were not able to get the bill through to relieve this situation. So, Mr. President, it is not an accurate statement when it is laid down as a fact by the Senator that Congress does act in all cases where the necessity arises.

Now, let me go further——

Mr. SUTHERLAND. That is, it did not act in that case in the manner in which, in the opinion of the Senator from Georgia, it ought to have acted; but in the opinion of Congress the action which the Senator wanted was not justified.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I have the floor now. Let me answer the Senator. The Senator has asked me a question, and I will answer it. I answer him first by saying that Congress has not always acted; that a failure of justice by a failure to provide proper judicial officers has grown out of the age and inefficiency of judges, and Congress has neglected to act. I have named one extreme case where Congress did not give relief. I might name others. Now, then, going one step further, the advantage of this bill over congressional action is that we uniformly provide for the contingency, without additional legislation and without the delay caused by waiting for action by Congress in special cases. We lay down one general rule to be applied to all cases, which is that where the judge has passed the age of 70 and the efficient conduct of the business of the court so requires, without the delay of legislative action, without the uncertainty of legislative action, the President, in touch with the Department of Justice, at once meets the necessity and provides an additional judge who may attend to the business. That, I think, is an important advantage of this bill over the old system.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The effect of all of which is, Mr. President, if I understand the position of the Senator from Georgia, that he thinks the President of the United States is more likely to act in accordance with his views than the Congress of the United States; but I undertake to say, from my observation, that whenever a case has been presented to Congress and facts have been presented that have justified a provision for an additional judge provision has been made. It was done in the case of a bill presented by the Senator himself within the last two years, when he desired an additional judge appointed in the State of Georgia. The Committee on the Judiciary investigated the question and came to the conclusion that the position of the Senator from Georgia was right, and an additional judge was provided for. We provided for it in the case of Maryland three or four years ago. Now, it seems to me that inasmuch as the Constitution of the United States contemplates that this power of creating judicial offices should be exercised by the Congress of the United States and not by the President, Congress ought not to abdicate its power; it ought to retain the power on the theory that Congress is better able to determine whether an additional judge is required than is the President.

Mr. STERLING. Since the Senator from Georgia disclaims authorship of this bill, let me say, then, that——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I should make this qualification: I do not mean that this bill was not drawn by me. I mean that the responsibility for it rests upon the Department of Justice, which had twice recommended the bill before I undertook to meet their desires. The bill was actually prepared by the chairman of the Judiciary Committee of the House, by myself, and by the Solicitor General of the United States, to carry out the request of the Department of Justice. That is an accurate statement.

Mr. STERLING. I think I understand the Senator from Georgia in that respect.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me for just a moment, I should like to ask the Senator from Georgia a question.

Mr. STERLING. I yield to the Senator from California.

Mr. WORKS. Under what constitutional or statutory authority does the Attorney General recommend or advise legislation by Congress? I supposed that such recommendations were required to come from the President.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The heads of the departments furnish their reports, embodying suggestions as to the needs of the Government, as an incident to their departmental work; and it has grown to be the practice for the President simply to adopt their reports and send them to Congress practically as his own. They really come to us as the acts of the assistants of the President, through the President.

Mr. WORKS. The Senator has not answered my question, but I will waive that. I understand that these reports first go to the President of the United States. Formerly they were embodied in his message to Congress; and it has always seemed to me that if any recommendation or advice respecting the enactment of any legislation is made, it should come from the President. He is directly authorized by the Constitution to make these recommendations; but there is no such provision as relating to any department, so far as I know.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. No; but Presidents recently have furnished us these reports and requested us to consider them as a part of their messages, as the President did yesterday.

Mr. WORKS. Well, Mr. President, if that has become the custom of the executive departments, it is an exceedingly dangerous one—if all of the recommendations that are made by the heads of departments are regarded as being made by the President because he refers them to Congress.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, instead, then, of giving the author of the bill the benefit of the doubt, let us give the benefit of the doubt to the distinguished Senator from Georgia, and let us say that he was not impelled by the sight of 15 or 16 old and decrepit men vainly endeavoring to keep up the appearance of performing their judicial duties, but who through failure of their powers to longer weigh evidence or grasp and apply the legal principles involved in the cases before them were manifestly unfit for their tasks; but let us take the more charitable view and agree that the introduction of the bill was inspired by one or two isolated cases which have come under his personal observation, where physical and mental infirmities to some degree incident to age have prevented the performance of the duties of their offices by one or more Federal judges. Suppose this to be the case. Is he without remedy? Is there no relief save by the questionable method here proposed? Can there not be the disposition of causes without resort to this drastic method of forcing all judges of 70 out of the service at the will of the Executive? Is there no relief under existing law for these specific cases without peremptorily putting 15 or 16 good and competent men on the superannuated list? If existing law does not cover the case, let us make a law that will. We can do it and keep within the bounds of the Constitution, I am sure.

I want to call attention, Mr. President, to some of the provisions of the Judicial Code relative to cases of disability and the provisions made for the trial of cases and the transaction of the business of the court under such circumstances.

Calling attention to section 13, the language is:

> When any district judge is prevented, by any disability, from holding any stated or appointed term of his district court, and that fact is made to appear by the certificate of the clerk, under the seal of the court, to any circuit judge of the circuit in which the district lies, or, in the absence of all the circuit judges, to the circuit justice of the circuit in which the district lies, any such circuit judge or justice may, if in his judgment the public interests so require, designate and appoint the judge of any other district in the same circuit to hold said court, and to discharge all the judicial duties of the judge so disabled, during such disability. Whenever it shall be certified by any such circuit judge or, in his absence, by the circuit justice of the circuit in which the district lies, that for any sufficient reason it is impracticable to designate and appoint a judge of another district within the circuit to perform the duties of such disabled judge, the Chief Justice may, if in his judgment the public interests so require, designate and appoint the judge of any district in another circuit to hold said court and to discharge all the judicial duties of the judge so disabled, during such disability—

And so forth.

Section 14 provides for another class of cases. Section 13 especially relates to disability on the part of the presiding judge; but section 14 relates to the accumulation of business, and provides that—

> When, from the accumulation or urgency of business in any district court, the public interests require the designation and appointment hereinafter provided, and the fact is made to appear, by the certificate of the clerk, under the seal of the court, to any circuit judge of the circuit in which the district lies, or, in the absence of all the circuit judges, to the circuit justice of the circuit in which the district lies, such circuit judge or justice may designate and appoint the judge of any other district in the same circuit to have and exercise within the district first named the same powers that are vested in the judge thereof. Each of the said district judges may, in case of such appointment, hold separately at the same time a district court in such district, and discharge all the judicial duties of the district judge therein.

And then another section—section 16—provides for a new designation in the case of failure of one or the other of the first designations to be made.

So it seems, Mr. President, that here in this Code is ample provision made for the dispatch of the business of the court in case of disability on the part of the judge, or in case of a great accumulation of business.

But it is said that appointments are to be made only if in the opinion of the President the public good so requires. The Senator from Georgia proposes now to change the language so that it will be in substance, if not literally, this, "If in his—the President's—opinion the efficient conduct of the business of the court requires." Mr. President, under the admission of the Senator from Georgia himself, made this morning, there is no material difference between the language first appearing in the bill in this respect relating to the public good, and the President's judgment and discretion in regard to the public good, and the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia.

How plausible, now, does this seem, "as the public good may require," or, in the new language, "if, in his opinion, the efficient conduct of the business of the court requires"! In either case there may be, and there is likely to be, an exercise of power purely arbitrary. Under the ample authority to designate judges for service in any district or in any Federal court save the Supreme Court, as now conferred by law, where is the need for this new power with which you propose to invest the President?

The power to do something for the public good must wait upon the public need, and I think it quite demonstrable if not already demonstrated, that even in the rare and isolated case or cases which I concede may have inspired the framing of this bill, there is no real genuine need. I would suggest to the distinguished Senator from Georgia that in that distressed and burdened district they need not suffer from the "law's delay" for a single day. Let them avail themselves of the advantages, the opportunities the law already gives them; let them call for the designation of another judge under the law as it is, and go to work and "clean up the calendar."

But does it not occur to us that the framers of the Constitution had in mind the public good when they adopted section 1 of article 3 of that great instrument? And that they must have believed that on the whole and in the long run the public good would be best served by providing that the judges of the Supreme Court, and such inferior courts as Congress might from time to time ordain and establish, should hold their offices during good behavior? The vice of this bill is that it substitutes the opinion of the President of the United States as to the public good, and what that good requires, for the opinion of the wise, far-seeing men who made the Constitution, and in it established or provided for the establishment of what I believe to be one of the greatest, and perhaps the greatest, judicial system in the world.

But, Mr. President, aside from the objection to this bill on constitutional grounds; aside, too, from the absence of evidence of any real need for the proposed legislation and the great additional expense involved, should we enact it, the bill is objectionable from the standpoint of expediency and of a wise policy in providing for the administration of justice as a part of our Federal system. Gouverneur Morris, speaking in the Senate here in 1802 in opposition to the repeal of the judiciary act then attempted, said in part:

> Lest a doubt should be raised, they have carefully connected the judges of both courts in the same sentence; they have said "the judges both of the supreme and inferior courts," thus coupling them inseparably together. You may cut the bands, but you can never untie them. With salutary caution they devised this clause to arrest the overbearing temper which they knew belonged to legislative bodies. They do not say the judges, simply, but the judges of the supreme and inferior courts shall hold their offices during good behavior. They say, therefore, to the legislature, you may judge of the propriety, the utility, the necessity, of organizing these courts; but when established, you have done your duty. Anticipating the course of passion in future times, they say to the legislature, you shall not disgrace yourselves by exhibiting the indecent spectacle of judges established by one legislature removed by another. We will save you, also, from yourselves. We say these judges shall hold their offices, and surely, sir, to pretend that they can hold their office after the office is destroyed is contemptible.

And, as already shown, you deprive a man of his office when you deny him the right to perform the duties of the office.

Continuing Mr. Morris said further:

The framers of this Constitution had seen much, read much, and deeply reflected. They knew by experience the violence of popular bodies, and let it be remembered that since that day many of the States, taught by experience, have found it necessary to change their forms of government to avoid the effects of that violence.

Mr. President, what Senator Morris said in regard to the framers of the Constitution having seen much, read much, and deeply reflected, is pertinent to this discussion. His observation has been verified in the triumphant march of our great charter of government and of free institutions through a thousand tests and vicissitudes from that day down to this. They foresaw the evils that might flow from a judiciary made dependent and subservient by short or uncertain tenure of office. They foresaw that nothing would tend more to the growth and perpetuity of the Republic than the prompt and proper administration of justice with equality before the law. They foresaw the peril sure to hover about a system of government which left its judiciary to be selected or removed as party or factional exigency or legislative caprice might dictate, and, foreseeing as they did, they forestalled all such evil contingencies by providing that the judges in this great department of Government should hold their offices during good behavior.

We would not think of openly and directly changing a policy fixed by the Constitution. It is not a splendid performance to attempt such a thing in this devious and circuitous way.

On the score of good and faithful service, of the recognized mental ability of most men of education of good physical health at the age of threescore and ten as we see and know them every day of our lives, this is an unwise, an improvident, and a humiliating measure. The age of about one-eighth of the membership of this Senate is beyond 70 years, 26 Members are more than 65 years of age, while the average age of the 96 Members of this honorable body is about 58 years; and we have the daily exhibition of most untiring industry, of wisest counsel, and of splendid achievement on the part of men who have passed the seventieth milestone of their lives. They are found on both sides of this Chamber; the States they represent honor themselves and confer a benefit upon the Nation by continuing them in this most honorable and yet exacting public service.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. STERLING. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Is it not true that the people have a chance every six years to retire Senators and that they have retired at least more than half of them before they were 70?

Mr. STERLING. But not on account of their age. It is admittedly true that some of the most eminent men in this honorable body have years since reached the age of three score and ten, and much of the most valuable service rendered the Senate and the country has been rendered by men of that age. I think the Senator from Georgia is well aware of that.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Is it not true that as amended the bill will leave such men on the bench and will only furnish efficient judges in the cases where the old judges have ceased to be efficient and where the people would retire Senators for inefficiency?

Mr. STERLING. Not necessarily so. It is in the power of the President, just as it was under the former language of the bill before the Senator from Georgia proposed to amend it this morning. He, the President, should not have the power to arbitrarily determine whether a judge is rendering efficient service or not. It was never contemplated that under the Constitution such power could be conferred upon him. The law itself provides for cases of inefficient service arising from disability or from urgency of business and for the designation of a judge or judges accordingly who are able to dispose of the business of the court.

Mr. President, we are not without further and contemporary reasons for this tenure of the Federal judiciary during good behavior—I mean reasons contemporary with the adoption of the Constitution itself. Who better than Alexander Hamilton foresaw the need of an independent judiciary? Who better than he saw the danger of any legislative limitation upon such tenure? Who more clearly divined than he the delicate and difficult questions inherent in the Federal system itself, and which these courts, especially the Supreme Court, would be called upon to decide? Although the frame of Government and the distribution of its powers may not have been after the pattern advocated by Hamilton, it is certain that among those who labored for the adoption of the Constitution there were none who appeared quite so earnest or quite so powerful as he; none who better comprehended or more clearly interpreted its various provisions. With his usual sagacity and prescience he saw the advantages to accrue from a tenure during good behavior, not the least of which was that the judge under any age limit of service which the legislature would be likely to adopt, if it fixed a limit at all, might still be able to render the country his most efficient service. Addressing himself to this phase of the question, he says in the Federalist:

The want of a provision for removing the judges, on account of inability, has been a subject of complaint. But all considerate men will be sensible that such a provision would either not be practiced upon or would be more liable to abuse than calculated to answer any good purpose. The mensuration of the faculties of the mind has, I believe, no place in the catalogue of known arts. An attempt to fix the boundary between the regions of ability and inability would much oftener give scope to personal and party attachments and enmities than advance the interests of justice or the public good. The result, except in the case of insanity, must for the most part be arbitrary; and insanity, without any formal or express provision, may be safely pronounced to be a virtual disqualification.

The constitution of New York, to avoid investigations that must forever be vague and dangerous, has taken a particular age as the criterion of inability. No man can be a judge beyond 60. I believe there are few at present who do not disapprove of this provision. There is no station in relation to which it is less proper than to that of a judge. The deliberating and comparing faculties generally preserve their strength much beyond that period, in men who survive it; and when, in addition to this circumstance, we consider how few there are who outlive the season of intellectual vigor, and how improbable it is that any considerable proportion of the bench, whether more or less numerous, should be in such a situation at the same time, we shall be ready to conclude that limitations of this sort have little to recommend them. In a Republic where fortunes are not affluent and pensions not expedient, the dismission of men from stations in which they have served their country long and usefully, on which they depend for subsistence, and from which it will be too late to resort to any other occupation for a livelihood, ought to have some better apology to humanity than is to be found in the imaginary danger of a superannuated bench.

But we do not rest this part of the case with Hamilton. We have the words of Story, a near contemporary and one of the most distinguished of the earlier Supreme Court Justices, as well as an authoritative interpreter of the Constitution. Justice Story, lamenting that unwise New York law which deprived the State of the judicial services of the great Chancellor Kent at the age of 60 years, and who began the writing of his great work "The Commentaries on American Law" at the age of 63, has this to say among other things in his work on the Constitution (5th ed., v. 2, p. 437):

The limitation of New York struck from its bench one of the greatest names that ever adorned it in the full possession of his extraordinary powers. I refer to Mr. Chancellor Kent, to whom the jurisprudence of New York owes a debt of gratitude that can never be repaid. He is at once the compeer of Hardwicke and Mansfield. Since his removal from the bench he has composed his admirable Commentaries, a work which will survive as an honor to the country long after all the perishable fabrics of our day shall be buried in oblivion. If he had not thus secured an enviable fame since his retirement, the public might have had cause to regret that New York should have chosen to disfranchise her best citizens at the time when their services were most important and their judgments most mature.

Even the age of 70 would have excluded from public service some of the greatest minds which have belonged to our country. At 80, said Mr. Jefferson, Franklin was the ornament of human nature. At 80 Lord Mansfield still possessed in vigor his almost unrivaled powers. If 70 had been the limitation in the Constitution of the United States, the Nation would have lost seven years of as brilliant judicial labors as have ever adorned the annals of the jurisprudence of any country.

And Rawle in his "A View of the Constitution," written in 1829, on page 278, most admirably vindicates the wisdom of the framers of the Constitution in making the provision they did for the tenure of Federal judges. He says:

In some States a power is given to the executive authority, on the application of a certain proportion of the legislature, to remove a judge from office. Reasons will occur both for and against such a provision. If a judge should be incapacitated by infirmity or age or be otherwise, without any fault of his own, prevented from performing his duties, he would not be a proper subject for removal by impeachment; yet, where duties can not be performed, the officer should not be continued. The incapacity should, however, be established in the specific case, and to lay down a general rule that on the attainment of a certain age the judge shall no longer be admitted to act may withdraw from the service of the public a person capable of being highly useful to them. In New York the commission expires at the age of 60 years; in Connecticut at 70 years; and thus their constitutions seem to intend to impose laws on nature itself or to drive from their own service men in whom may still reside the most useful faculties, improved by time and experience. The Constitution of the United States abstains from this error.

In prefiguring the capacity and achievements of men past three score and ten, Hamilton and Story spoke not alone as statesmen but as men who had seen much, read much, and deeply reflected, and knew thence how to predict the future. They were prophets as well as statesmen.

Turning to the record, we find that of the 65 judges of the Supreme Court appointed from the beginning of the Government under the Constitution down to the present time, 27 or about three-sevenths of the entire number, have served beyond 70 years, the age of voluntary retirement. Among the 27 are 4 out of 9 Chief Justices, including the present most active, capable, and distinguished incumbent of that high office, and including, of course, those unrivaled luminaries of the greatest judicial tribunal in the world, ranking in order of greatness as in order of time of service, namely, Marshall, who died in the service at 80, and Taney, at the age of 87.

Three, or one-third, of the members of that great court as now constituted are past 70.

In view of these authorities and this record no man will have the hardihood to introduce a bill like this which would apply to the Justices of the Supreme Court; and yet no argument can be adduced in favor of the pending measure but which might not with equal reason and equal force be applied to the Supreme Court. On the other hand, all the wise counsel which we have inherited from the past and all the sane and reasonable arguments in favor of the principle of tenure during good behavior or for life and which find their complete vindication in the career and services of the Supreme Court Justices will with equal force and reason and with the same vindication apply to all Federal, circuit, and district court judges throughout the land.

Mr. President, there seems to be a strange obsession on the part of certain forces in this administration in regard to the age of Federal judges, both the age at the time of appointment and the age at which they should retire from the service. I recall a personal experience arising out of my advocacy of the appointment of an able and distinguished friend of mine to the position of circuit judge in place of Judge Grosscup, of Chicago, who had resigned. My friend served many years, I think 15 or 16, as one of the State circuit court judges in one of the great circuits in the State of Illinois. Following this service came several years of distinguished service on the appellate bench of Illinois. Throughout the State he was regarded as one of its most upright and able judges. Being in full possession of all his splendid powers of mind, he became an applicant for the place made vacant by the resignation of Judge Grosscup; but, unfortunately for him, he was past 60 years of age, and although I had the hardihood to interview the President himself in regard to the matter of my friend's appointment, the fiat had gone forth from the Department of Justice that no man should be appointed to a Federal judgeship who was more than 60 years of age. The splendid qualifications of the applicant were all recognized. Moreover, he agreed, if appointed, that on reaching the age of 70 years he would then retire from the service. But all in vain; he had passed the "dead line," and, in the opinion of the then Attorney General, was ineligible, and that opinion, and not a doubt as to the candidate's fitness or ability on the part of the Executive, controlled. With this as the strong predilection of the then Attorney General in regard to the age which should bar appointment to the Federal bench, it is not remarkable that he wrote the opinion on which the Senator from Georgia relies with such evident satisfaction.

Mr. SHERMAN. I wish to interrupt the Senator for a moment at this point.

Mr. STERLING. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SHERMAN. If next to the last justice of the Supreme Court had not been appointed until November 13, 1916—I allude to Justice Brandeis—he himself would have passed the sixtieth year. He barely came within the limitation imposed by the Executive fiat referred to by the Senator.

Mr. STERLING. Yes.

Mr. SHERMAN. It shows how extremely arbitrary the application of the rule is as well as the narrowness of the rule itself.

Mr. STERLING. Yes, Mr. President; and partly along the same line referred to by the Senator from Illinois, I want to call attention here to some figures in regard to that, showing when appointments to the Supreme Court were made in a number of instances; that is, showing at what age the justices were appointed. Judge Lurton was appointed at 65 or 66; Justice Hunt, at 63; Justice Lamar, at 63; William Strong, at 62; Samuel Blatchford, at 62; Howell E. Jackson, at 61; Justice Holmes, at 61; Justice Shiras, at 60; Chief Justice Taney, at 59, and he served 28½ years after his appointment; Thomas Johnson, at 59; Gabriel Duval, at 59; J. P. Bradley, at 58, who served 22 years.

I have here, Mr. President, a list of 20 justices of the Supreme Court who served after 70 years of age. The judge with the shortest service was Justice Waite, who served 1⅛ years after he reached the age of 70. The one with the longest service was Chief Justice Taney, who served 17½ years after he was 70 years of age. The average service of these 20 justices after they had reached the age of 70 years was 7$\frac{1}{10}$ years.

As I recall my personal experience, Mr. President, alluded to a moment ago, I found myself wishing, after I had gone through it, that there had been some further delimitation of the departments and powers of government in the Constitution, to put it mildly.

The distinguished Senator from Georgia may find various reasons for the capacity and serviceableness of old men on the bench. He may find it in the nature of the work of the judge, which for the most part is the quiet work of studying, examining, and comparing statutes and precedents, and by process of legal reasoning to which he has been long accustomed, applying them to the facts of the case in hand. The very temperament which makes him fit to be judge at all keeps him free from the passions involved in the case. To do justice between hotly contending attorneys and litigants he must maintain that poise and self-command which are most conducive to both bodily and mental health. So that we are enabled to say of many judges:

> Though old, he still retained
> His manly sense and energy of mind.

Shakespeare furnishes yet another reason. I think with rare exception it will apply to the bench if not to the bar:

> Though I look old, yet I am strong and lusty; for in my youth I never did apply hot and rebellious liquors in my blood; and did not, with unbashful forehead, woo the means of weakness and debility: therefore my age is as a lusty winter, frosty but kindly.

But I find in these few words of Mrs. Gatty the noblest recognition of the value of the achievements and service to the world of the intellectual old man:

> It is often the case with fine natures that when the fire of the spirit dies out with increasing age the power of intellect is unaltered or increased, and an originally educated judgment grows broader and gentler as the river of life widens out to the everlasting sea.

But why multiply instances or have recourse to the wisdom and achievements of age as embodied in literature. The men who had seen much, read much, and deeply reflected knew what duties would be imposed, what capacities and faculties would be required in their performance, and with this experience and knowledge before them they deliberately embodied the principle in the Constitution and gave to all Federal judges a life tenure. And so the Constitution is their shield, their protecting ægis. And there it shall stand forever, not only as a protection to those whose high function it is to interpret the law and administer justice, but a protection as well to the great public whom the judges serve.

CORRUPT PRACTICES.

During the delivery of Mr. STERLING's speech,

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JOHNSON of Maine in the chair). The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 15842) to revise, amend, and codify the laws relating to publicity of contributions and expenditures made for the purpose of influencing the nomination and election of candidates for the offices of Senator and Representative in the Congress of the United States, extending the same to candidates for nomination and election to the offices of President and Vice President of the United States, limiting the amount which may be expended, providing for the publicity of campaign expenses, and for other purposes.

Mr. CURTIS. I should like to offer three amendments to the bill, and have them printed and lie on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. They will be received and printed and ordered to lie on the table, without objection.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I should like to ask other Senators who may have amendments that they wish to offer to the bill to supply them for the record so that the Senate may be advised.

Mr. WORKS. I have two or three amendments that I desire to propose to the bill, and if the Senator thinks it advisable I would be glad to have them printed.

Mr. OWEN. I would be glad if the Senator would have them printed for the information of the Senate, so that we may have an opportunity to see them.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator does not ask that they be printed in the RECORD, but printed in the regular form?

Mr. OWEN. Printed in the regular form.

Mr. WORKS. Very well. I will submit two or three amendments that meet my view. I may desire to offer some very short amendments which it is not worth while to have printed in advance, but I am sending to the desk two amendments that I think it well to have printed now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments will lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. OWEN. I venture to suggest to the Senator from South Dakota that the fact that the corrupt practices bill is now before the Senate need not interrupt his remarks, because he may under the rules proceed with his remarks, as he has not yet completed them.

Mr. STERLING. I was in some doubt as to the effect of laying the unfinished business before the Senate, but I will proceed and conclude my remarks at this time.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Before the Senator resumes I should like to state to the Senate that while the unfinished business of course takes precedence, if anything should happen that the unfinished business would not continue to occupy the Senate and it should be temporarily laid aside, I shall then ask that Senate bill 706 be taken up and proceeded with. I mention it now so that Senators may be advised. I do not know that anything of the kind will happen, but if there should be an interim I shall ask to fill it up with this bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Dakota will proceed.

After the conclusion of Mr. STERLING's speech,

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I desire to repeat that if at any time after 2 o'clock the bill which is now the unfinished business is not in a position to be pressed and is temporarily laid aside, I shall at once ask that the judicial bill which we have been considering this morning receive immediate consideration. I mention that lest anyone might be surprised by the bill being called up later on in the afternoon.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, can that be done without making the bill the unfinished business, under the rules of the Senate? It certainly hardly seems just that those who are interested in the one bill, and perhaps not interested in the other, should be compelled to be in attendance at all times, unless the bill referred to by the Senator from Georgia shall become the unfinished business, so as to require such attendance.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I suppose really the place for all of us all the time when the Senate is in session is on the floor of the Senate Chamber.

Mr. CLARK. Well, the Senator from Georgia may make that observation——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I thought the Senator was through. If I am mistaken in that, I will wait on him.

Mr. CLARK. No, Mr. President; I was not through.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Then I will wait until the Senator has concluded.

Mr. CLARK. I ask for a ruling upon the question whether what the Senator from Georgia suggests can be done without making the bill the unfinished business and displacing the corrupt-practices act.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, as I understand the suggestion of the Senator from Georgia, it merely is to the effect that, in the contingency of the unfinished business being temporarily laid aside, he intends to be in his seat on the floor of the Senate and then to move to take up this other matter.

Mr. CLARK. So far as that is concerned, of course, there would be no objection to it; but as for taking up the bill——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I only mentioned that so Senators who are interested in the measure might not be taken by surprise if it happened; that was all. It was intended only as a courtesy to those who are interested in this bill, and not as a discourtesy.

Mr. CLARK. Yes; but my parliamentary question went a little further than the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] seems to indicate. If after 2 o'clock the bill of the Senator from Georgia is taken up on motion it becomes, to my notion, the unfinished business and displaces the bill of the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. OWEN. I think that would be quite true, Mr. President, but it is not the intention of those in charge of the bill to limit expenses in political campaigns to neglect to press that bill. Their purpose is to dispose of that bill, and I shall certainly be diligently at hand to ask the Senate to pass upon the suggested amendments and to dispose of the bill, I hope, very soon.

Mr. CLARK. The only purpose of my inquiry was to ascertain whether or not we are to have one unfinished business a part of the day and another bill as the unfinished business for the balance of the day.

Mr. OWEN. No; that can not be understood, and there is only one unfinished business. I think there is nothing more in the suggestion of the Senator from Georgia than that he would be in his seat prepared to press his bill in case the unfinished business were temporarily laid aside. There are some Senators who are not quite prepared to offer amendments which they desire to offer. The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA], I understand, has some amendments which he wishes to offer, but which he has not yet prepared. The Senator from California [Mr. WORKS] has some which he is going to submit this afternoon, I believe. I understand there are some amendments offered this morning by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] to be printed, which I think would necessarily carry the bill over until to-morrow, because the Senate would not want to act upon the bill until the amendments shall have been printed.

Mr. CLARK. But, if the Senator will pardon me, if the Senator from Georgia in that event should come in with his motion to take up the judicial bill and that motion should prevail, then to-morrow the judicial bill would still be the unfinished business, and the Senator from Oklahoma could only again get his bill before the Senate as the unfinished business by displacing by motion and vote of the Senate the judicial bill.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. CLARK. Yes.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Does the Senator think where the unfinished business after 2 o'clock is laid aside temporarily by unanimous consent, and then the Senate proceeds to take up some other measure for that afternoon with which to occupy itself, that the previous piece of unfinished business has been displaced?

Mr. CLARK. I think so, if it is taken up by motion.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I wanted to get the Senator's idea about that. I have not been of that opinion.

Mr. CLARK. If it is taken up by motion, that would be true; but if it is taken up, nobody objecting, then it would not be true.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I had supposed, Mr. President, that where the unfinished business was only temporarily laid aside and where that was done by unanimous consent, then, even if another matter was taken up by motion that afternoon, the unfinished business having only been temporarily laid aside, it retained its place as unfinished business. I may be mistaken about that.

Mr. OWEN. That is the practice of the Senate, I am sure.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It has undoubtedly been the ruling of the Chair and it has been the ruling of the Senator from Connecticut. I think that is the accepted rule of the Senate.

If the Senator from Wyoming will permit me, I desire to say that I had been told that there were Senators upon his side of the Chamber who might not be ready to go on this afternoon, that it might be necessary to temporarily lay aside the bill which is now the unfinished business, and that it might be necessary, in order to accommodate Senators on his side of the Chamber, to temporarily lay aside the unfinished business. That being true, we would accomplish something by adopting my suggestion, and I thought it would be a matter of convenience to mention to Senators upon the other side that if such a contingency happened I should be here to move to take up the bill that we are now considering. That is the whole of it.

Mr. CLARK. I wanted to get an understanding of the matter. My understanding is, if the present unfinished business is laid aside and after 2 o'clock another bill comes before the Senate upon motion and vote taken, that the present unfinished business is displaced as the unfinished business.

Mr. OWEN. That would be true, but under no circumstances would those in charge of this bill do more than ask unanimous consent to lay aside the unfinished business temporarily, without losing its place.

Mr. CLARK. Well, but we do not get any closer together, of course, because my notion is that it is not a question of agreement, but is a question of legislative procedure, that a bill taken up after 2 o'clock becomes the unfinished business and displaces any unfinished business then upon the calendar. With that view the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] does not agree.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, in order to make myself clear about that, if I do not interrupt the Senator, my idea was that where the Senate by unanimous consent agreed that a bill should be only temporarily laid aside, it meant that it should not be displaced. There is no other meaning to be given to the words "temporarily laid aside," except that a measure is not permanently laid aside or displaced.

Mr. OWEN. That is my understanding of the rule.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, just a word. I quite agree with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK] that if a bill is laid aside, whether it be temporarily or otherwise, and another bill is taken up on motion, that that bill becomes the unfinished business. Any one Senator can object to a bill being temporarily laid aside, if that is necessary to enforce the position which the Senator from Wyoming and the Senator from New Hampshire take in this matter; but of course the Senator from Oklahoma could on the next day move to take up his bill and the probability is that the Senate would support him in that motion, as he has had the right of way and ought not to be deprived of it on any motion to take up any other bill.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I think to avoid any embarrassment about it I shall insist upon this bill being disposed of.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, in looking up the precedents of the Senate I find them on both sides of this question.

Mr. GALLINGER. They are.

Mr. SMOOT. I notice that former Vice President Sherman held that where——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the Senator from Utah will pardon the present occupant of the chair, he will state that the unfinished business has not been temporarily laid aside. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the present occupant of the chair laid the unfinished business before the Senate. The Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING] was then proceeding with a speech upon another measure, and he continued to speak, the Chair presumed by parliamentary fiction, upon the unfinished business; but the unfinished business never has been temporarily laid aside, and is still before the Senate as the pending business, with the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] pending.

Mr. OWEN. I will say, Mr. President, to avoid any unnecessary debate about the parliamentary status, that the bill will not be temporarily laid aside.

Mr. SMOOT. Then there is no need of discussing the question further.

Mr. OWEN. No.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I will suggest to the Senator from Oklahoma two or three amendments simply to correct the phraseology of the bill. Running through the bill the words "Representative in Congress" are used except in three instances where the expression "Member of the House of Representatives" is employed. Those words are incorrect.

Mr. OWEN. I should be very glad to have an amendment covering that made.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator will turn to page 18, line 24, he will notice that phraseology. I move to strike out, on that line and page, the words "Member of the House of Representatives" and insert "Representative in Congress."

Mr. OWEN. I will be glad to accept the proposed amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. On page 37, line 2, I move the same amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. There is one other place, I think, where the same change should be made. On page 38, lines 20 and 21, I move the same amendment.

Mr. OWEN. I will be glad to accept the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will say to the Senator from Oklahoma that that makes the phraseology uniform throughout the bill, and in every respect correct.

Mr. OWEN. That is an obvious improvement of the language, Mr. President, and I am glad to accept it.

Mr. GALLINGER. There is language on page 44, line 16, which perhaps is correct and still it strikes me as being rather vague. I read from the bill, commencing in line 14, page 44:

> For the purpose of influencing or attempting to influence, through any printed matter in such newspaper or other periodical, any voting at any election or primary through any means whatsoever.

Perhaps, as I have said, the language is correct, but still it is rather awkward.

Mr. OWEN. It is awkward.

Mr. GALLINGER. I simply call the Senator's attention to it, and perhaps he will desire to change it.

Mr. OWEN. The words "at any primary or other election" would probably cover that.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think so.

Mr. OWEN. I move to make that change in the language so that, on page 44, line 16, it will read "at any primary or other election."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 44, line 16, after the word "any," it is proposed to strike out the words "election or," and after the word "primary" to insert "or other election," so as to read "at any primary or other election through any means whatsoever."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] gave notice yesterday that he would offer certain amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. SHERMAN obtained the floor.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, before the Senator from Illinois proceeds, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Bankhead	Hughes	Norris	Smoot
Borah	Husting	Oliver	Sterling
Brady	James	Overman	Stone
Brandegee	Johnson, Me.	Owen	Sutherland
Bryan	Johnson, S. Dak.	Page	Swanson
Chamberlain	Jones	Phelan	Thompson
Chilton	Kenyon	Pittman	Tillman
Clark	Kern	Poindexter	Townsend
Culberson	Kirby	Pomerene	Underwood
Cummins	La Follette	Reed	Vardaman
Curtis	Lane	Saulsbury	Wadsworth
Dillingham	Lee, Md.	Shafroth	Walsh
Fernald	Lippitt	Sheppard	Warren
Gallinger	McCumber	Sherman	Watson
Gronna	Martin, Va.	Shields	Weeks
Harding	Martine, N. J.	Simmons	Williams
Hitchcock	Nelson	Smith, Mich.	Works
Hollis	Newlands	Smith, S. C.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Seventy-one Senators have responded to their names. There is a quorum present.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I find in the bill under consideration, on page 31, in a paragraph of section 10, the provision that—

> The aggregate of all disbursements made for the purpose of aiding, influencing, or controlling, or attempting to aid, influence, or control, each nomination or election of any United States Senator, shall not exceed the sum of $5,000.

That language is not exactly definite. I am not able to say whether a candidate can expend $5,000 for the nomination and then an additional $5,000 for the election, or whether one sum of $5,000 must cover both the nomination and the election. If the sum indicated is intended to cover both, it is entirely inadequate. It might be that $2,500 for each would be proper for a State of limited population or territory, but it would not be adequate for the average large State.

This limitation of $5,000 is upon the expenditure made by the campaign committee. In section 14, on page 40, is an enlargement of that sum. It uses the following language:

> Any person may, in connection with his candidacy for nomination or election as a United States Senator or as a Representative in the Congress of the United States, incur and pay from his own private funds all necessary personal expenses for his traveling, for stationery, circulars, advertising, postage, and for telegraph and telephone service, without being subject in respect thereto to the provisions of this act: Provided, That an account shall be kept of all moneys expended for circulars and advertising authorized by this section, which shall be reported in the statements required by this act as an addenda thereto, but not subject to the limitations in amount fixed by section 10 of this act.

It seems to me that this limitation in section 14 on the amount to be expended out of the candidate's own private funds creates an undue discrimination among candidates. In a State of any size, Mr. President, unless the candidate is possessed of ample private means, how can he make a campaign that is adequate to that State? This is an artificial and a purely arbitrary limitation. It is subject to some of the cricitisms made on this provision on this side of the Chamber at the first session of this Congress when the bill was under consideration last August and the fore part of September, 1916. On behalf of the minority side I again call the attention of the authors and supporters of this bill to the difference in the legitimate expenditures that may be made.

In the State of Nevada the total vote is about 21,000; in the State of Arizona about 23,000; in the State of Oklahoma about 253,000. I am giving now the returns of 1912, and proportionately the percentages will hold good, approximately, for 1916. In the State of New York about 1,600,000 male votes were cast in 1912; in the State of Pennsylvania a somewhat smaller number, say, one million four hundred and some odd thousand. I am quoting now merely from memory. In the State of Illinois one million one hundred and some thousand votes were cast in 1912. In 1916, Mr. President, nearly 2,000,000 votes were cast in Illinois—1,114,000, or nearly 1,200,000 male votes and quite 800,000 female votes. Approximately 2,000,000 votes are to be reached in every primary and in every election in the event of the universal right of suffrage, which in due time is likely to prevail. In the State mentioned, where nearly 2,000,000 votes actually were cast on the 7th of November, 1916, if an ordinary expense account were to be paid out of the pocket of the candidate without contributions it would make ineligible the average candidate in either the Democratic or the Republican Party. The expenses of reaching any considerable number of the voters in a direct primary would run far beyond the sums that the average person would like to expend from his private fortune.

Section 14 entirely prohibits any contributions from an outside source. In other words, my neighbor who might wish to contribute $500, or 10 of my neighbors who might wish to contribute $5,000, for my necessary personal expenses would be prohibited under the provisions of section 14 from contributing one dollar. All those men could do would be to contribute to the campaign committee. The campaign committee, under the provisions of section 10, already referred to, would report for publicity purposes all of the contributions, giving the name of the donor and the amount donated. But when it came to my personal expenses, after the committee had expended $5,000 obtained from miscellaneous sources, no further expenditures could be made unless out of the candidate's private pocket. No friend could contribute a dollar; no organization political in character could contribute anything to my personal expenses The personal expenses of every candidate beyond the $5,000 that might be met by the committee would be a charge on the private means of the candidate himself.

At the close of the last session of this Congress I alluded to some of the legitimate expenses in a campaign for either a primary or an election, especially in the larger States. As I remember, I quoted there some figures, and I repeat them now, because the same inhibition is visited upon the candidate in the redrafted bill as in the original bill. I had a mailing list myself of 215,000 voters who were Republicans in more than active political life, meaning something more than the average voter of my party, having more than the average acquaintance in his precinct, township, or city ward, and taking more than a merely casual interest in the results of primary contests.

A 1-cent letter, Mr. President, had as well be unsent. If it can not be a 2-cent letter mailed to the voter, it will meet the usual fate of all such communications; its destination is the wastebasket and not the voter. We go on the idea that a 2-cent stamp is indispensable. Outside of the stationery, the printing, and the clerical bills required in reaching the mailing list of 215,000 voters in a direct primary contest, it requires of itself $4,300 for a single circular letter sent out in a sealed envelope under a 2-cent stamp, but the continual advance in the number of voters increases this legitimate expense. With a 2-cent stamp, every time the letter is repeated it repeats the expense of $4.300. The expenses of a direct primary and an election under the popular form of election could aggregate, under this method, $1,000,000, and still, Mr. President, every dollar of it would be a legitimate expenditure.

There is no corruption in appealing to the voter's understanding. There is no corruption in contributions by friends for the purpose of reaching the voter's understanding in a legitimate way. I do not anticipate that nominations will go in the future alone to those possessed of wealth. I have an idea that in the future, as in the past years, they will go many times to persons in moderate circumstances. If this limitation in section 14 should persist in some 9 or 10 States of the Union it will be impossible for a candidate to make a direct primary fight, followed by the direct election of a Senator, unless he is possessed of more than the average means.

I know Senators who are sitting in this Chamber now who could not have afforded to make a direct primary fight within the last 20 years if the same rules of political activity had been applied to them that have been applied in the last two years, since 1914 and including 1916. Instead of improving the characteristics of this body, these limitations will have a tendency to deteriorate them. There are enough difficulties now in the way of reaching a seat in this Chamber without adding those of section 14.

If I departed for a moment from the cold reasoning that belongs to election returns and to the legitimate expenses of a campaign, I would make the prediction, Mr. President, that in a 20-year period the seats of men in this body will change oftener, their tenure of office will be less, in the large States where political majorities are uncertain, than in the past. In a large State, Mr. President, under a direct primary, with the direct election of United States Senators, the constant tendency will be to shorten the tenure of office of every Senator. It is not within the limits of physical endurance, it is not within the campaigning possibilities of any Senator, nor is it within the reach of the pocketbook of any man in moderate circumstances, to make the continual fights that are required in the large States of New York, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Illinois, and similar States, and remain in his seat long. The smaller States have favorable conditions presented to them for keeping their Senators here for life. I would prefer to represent a smaller State territorially and in population, like the State of Arizona, Nevada, or Delaware, rather than the larger States, even the Empire State of New York, because of these constant contests, the immense burden and the difficulties inherent in political factional fights within the lines of one's own party, as well as the limits of physical endurance consequent upon the protracted and lengthy fights for a nomination, followed by those of an election.

As it is, under present conditions a candidate of moderate means can have his expenses in part paid by friends who contribute. We have published in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, on behalf of both parties, the campaign expenses on the national ticket. I do not think any of them have been complete. In all probability the amounts are too small. We have not, probably, in the last campaign diminished those amounts. Very likely the money spent both by the Democratic Party and the Republican Party in the 1916 campaign will never be accurately known.

For my part, Mr. President, this limitation of section 14 would impose upon me and my colleague, in the event of our future candidacies, the payment of such sums of money as would practically, if we made anything like a detailed fight, make it an impossibility for us to meet it. With the 800,000 new voters in my own State, Mr. President, I apprehend that campaign expenses will be legitimately increased. There is enough trouble in meeting the new issues. A campaign can not be conducted in the future as it has been in the past 20 years. New methods of reaching the voter must be devised. It takes a new form of campaign letter. I think if I had to reach the whole 800,000 in my own State I would have to give a separate campaign letter to each one of them, and about 55 per cent of them are Republicans, as shown by the last returns. This would take a separate campaign letter addressed to them on campaign issues. It requires more detail and more explanation.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I will ask the Senator whether women vote for Senators in his State?

Mr. SHERMAN. No; but it is a mere question of time when they will. They vote for President; they vote for electors, and they voted pretty cheerfully. They seemed to want to get to the polls. They wanted to be informed; and still, politically—and I intend to vote for the Anthony amendment, Mr. President—politically, every one of the 800,000 women is in the primary class, in the A, B, C of politics. I can write a letter to the average male voter presuming that I am not obliged to spell every word in politics and to indulge in a discussion of elemental things that are well known by the average voter who has been voting for some years. That can not be done when a new State is suddenly introduced to the universal suffrage. It takes a different campaign letter; it takes a different campaign address; it takes a different campaign argument. Cigars do not go—not even cigarettes. [Laughter.] I do not know whether millinery and the latest styles of ribbons, or what, would appeal to the voters. You could stamp your campaign badges on all the colors of the rainbow, and still, under section 14, if you paid for it yourself, it would be a proper campaign expenditure. If you could not, your millionaire competitor would pay for the merchandise and get the votes.

It seems to me that section 14 makes this limitation bear very heavily upon a candidate. If he goes beyond the $5,000 expended by the committee, he must pay it out of his own pocket. If any of his friends contribute, he will be unseated on a contest. In addition to that, under the provisions of this bill, he will subject himself to penalties. The bill declares it to be a felony, and provides for fine and imprisonment as well as for his being deprived of his seat.

I have seen a good many of the primary laws of the different States. They vary in their requirements. Under the primary laws of some States a very simple process is observed. It costs but little money. The contests are not strenuous; they are not long continued; and they are comparatively inexpensive. In others the reverse is true. The contests are extremely expensive and exhausting upon the candidate. There is no distinction in section 14 or in section 10 as to the kind of State or the character of the controversy in which the candidate engages.

These are some of the matters that go to the form as well as the substance of the measure. It is not my purpose, Mr. President, to discuss at any length the reasons that underlie such legislation, nor do I intend to go at length into the question. I wish to submit only those two observations on section 10 and on section 14 for the consideration of the Senate and hope that there may be some proper amendment that will enlarge section 14 so that the burden may not be such as to make it obligatory upon the candidate to be possessed of wealth before he is eligible to enter the lists.

I content myself at this time with these observations, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KIRBY in the chair). The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole. The question is upon the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE].

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, do I understand that my amendment is up? I offered it yesterday and asked to have it lie on the table. I did not expect it to be voted on to-day. I expect to address the Senate on the amendment, but I am not prepared this afternoon in any way. I do not think the parliamentary status of the amendment is that it is up to be voted on. I offered it and asked, as the RECORD will show, to have it lie on the table in order to be printed. It was not printed yesterday, and it has been only a few hours since Senators have had copies of it. I have not had a chance to examine it myself to know whether it has been correctly or accurately printed, and I do not understand that the amendment is anywhere except on the table to be called up. Moreover, it provides for two additional sections to the bill; and it seems to me that the Senate, in logical procedure, would consider amendments to the body of the bill and to the preceding sections before they take up the consideration of my two amendments, which are two additional sections to come at the end of the measure.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, several minor amendments have been agreed to during the day, but I do not wish to press the Senate unduly with regard to the matter. I am only anxious that we dispose of it as promptly as possible. Several amendments have been ordered printed and have gone over until to-morrow, and there are several other amendments intended to be offered by other Senators.

I realize that we have just assembled here, and it has been difficult for Senators to get their minds on this bill when we are just meeting in this way. It is a very important measure. Some objections have been pointed out which seem to me justified, and the only reason why I went on with the measure was because I was advised by Senators on the other side of the Chamber that if I did not do so it would be displaced by moving to substitute some other measure. If we might, by unanimous consent, agree that this bill should take its place to-morrow as the unfinished business, I would be glad to move to lay it aside temporarily.

Mr. PENROSE. There will be no difficulty in getting that consent, I think, Mr. President.

Mr. OWEN. I ask that consent.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, just a moment. Let me suggest to the Senator having the bill in charge that I believe time would be saved if the Senate would take an adjournment now, so that we can prepare the amendments to which he has already referred. It is half-past 3 o'clock now. That would give us a couple of hours to work in our offices, and then we could perhaps work at home to-night.

Mr. OWEN. I think that is a good suggestion.

Mr. SMOOT. I want to say to the Senator that there is no disposition whatever to put aside action upon this bill, but I take it for granted that the Senator from Oklahoma, like every other Senator, wants it perfected. The only way to do that is to give Senators time, now that it has been discussed somewhat, to prepare what they think would serve best to make the bill workable.

Mr. OWEN. I am glad to be able to say to the Senator that I have received many assurances from Members on that side of the Chamber that they desire in good faith to perfect this bill, and that is all I want. I am glad to have that spirit exhibited. In view of that suggestion, I feel justified in asking that the bill be laid aside temporarily, and then I will move that the Senate adjourn, to give the opportunity to which the Senator refers.

Mr. PENROSE. It is not necessary to lay the bill aside. If the Senate adjourns, the bill is still the unfinished business.

Mr. OWEN. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 3 o'clock and 28 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, December 7, 1916, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, December 6, 1916.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Take us, O God our heavenly Father, into Thy nearer presence, even into the Holy of Holies, that we may be purified, strengthened, and inspired by the touch; and be prepared to enter upon the new duties of the hour with confidence, earnestness, and courage; and thus quit ourselves like men, as followers of the Jesus of Nazareth. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

NATIONAL ARCHIVES BUILDING.

The SPEAKER. In the last session there was a letter ordered printed about the national archives building that should not have been ordered printed. Without objection, the order to print it will be canceled.

There was no objection.

CALENDAR WEDNESDAY.

The SPEAKER. This is Calendar Wednesday. The unfinished business is H. R. 563, the Rayburn bill.

Mr. MANN. What bill is that?

The SPEAKER. Union Calendar 105, H. R. 563, a bill to amend section 20 of an act to regulate commerce, to prevent overissues of securities by carriers, and for other purposes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MANN. The bill that the Speaker refers to was called up by the gentleman from Georgia yesterday, on what was called the ordinary call of committees—not on Calendar Wednesday.

The SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Without referring to the fact that he could not call up that bill yesterday, a question arose early in the present Speakership as to whether a bill, being the unfinished business on the ordinary call of committees, should be taken up as the unfinished business on Calendar Wednesday and vice versa; and the present Speaker, reversing the ruling of the former Speaker, Mr. CANNON, held that there were two calls of committees, one the Calendar Wednesday call and one the ordinary call, and decided that the call on Calendar Wednesday did not rest with the committee called on the ordinary call, but that the unfinished business on Calendar Wednesday went over until the succeeding Calendar Wednesday, and that the call of committees on the ordinary call went over until the next ordinary call of committees.

The SPEAKER. The Chair adheres to that ruling. What misled the Chair was the fact that this bill was lying here on the table, and the Chair supposed that it was the Barnhart printing bill. The Chair thinks that his former ruling was correct.

Mr. ADAMSON. I should like to ask if the call does actually rest with the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce on Calendar Wednesday?

Mr. MANN. It rests with the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Mr. ADAMSON. That was my impression. I know I had parts of two days, and when I insisted that I ought to have the right to another day the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] remarked that we had been lucky in getting through the bills that we did consider; but when I saw that we were still marked on the calendar as entitled to be called I hoped that I would be permitted to put in the few hours I was entitled to in order to make up two full days, in order to call up a couple of bills that are not only very innocent, but that would be very beneficial if they could be enacted.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman states that he had a piece of time left. How much time?

Mr. ADAMSON. I think about half of each day.

Mr. MANN. Oh, the gentleman had his two days under the call.

Mr. ADAMSON. I know my committee was called on two days, but I did not have anything like two full working days.

SEVERAL MEMBERS. Eight-hour days. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The law does not take any account of pieces of days.

Mr. ADAMSON. Then they ought not to be counted against me.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman ought not to have taken a piece of a day. He ought to have got a whole one.

Mr. MANN. He could not help himself about that.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I understand that the call rests with the Committee on Rivers and Harbors to-day. Am I correct?

The SPEAKER. The Clerk says you are. The Clerk will call the committees.

The Committee on Rivers and Harbors was called.

The Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries was called.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I have a bill which I desire to call up.

The SPEAKER. The House will first receive a message from the President.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

Sundry messages, in writing, from the President of the United States were communicated to the House of Representatives by Mr. Sharkey, one of his secretaries.

ADVISORY COMMITTEE FOR AERONAUTICS (H. DOC. NO. 1448).

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

In compliance with the provisions of the act of Congress approved March 3, 1915 (naval appropriation act—Public, No. 273, 63d Cong.), I transmit herewith the second annual report of the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics, for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1916.

WOODROW WILSON.

THE WHITE HOUSE, December 6, 1916.

The SPEAKER. This message will be printed and the message and accompanying documents will be referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs. Accompanying the message is a great bundle of documents, which for the present will not be printed.

JACOB HOFFMAN (NAEGER) (H. DOC. NO. 1447).

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which, with the accompanying documents, was referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs and ordered to be printed:

To the House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a report from the Secretary of State, with an accompanying paper, in response to the resolution adopted by the House of Representatives on August 18, 1916, requesting him to furnish to the House of Representatives certain information regarding the case of Jacob Hoffman (Naeger), arrested and detained by the military authorities at Victoria, British Columbia.

WOODROW WILSON.

THE WHITE HOUSE, December 6, 1916.

CUSTOMS COLLECTION DISTRICTS (H. DOC. NO. 1449).

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was referred to the Committee on Ways and Means and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

The sundry civil act approved August 1, 1914, contains the following provision, viz:

The President is authorized from time to time, as the exigencies of the service may require, to rearrange, by consolidation or otherwise, the several customs-collection districts and to discontinue ports of entry by abolishing the same or establishing others in their stead: Provided, That the whole number of customs-collection districts, ports of entry, or either of them, shall at no time be made to exceed those now established and authorized except as the same may hereafter be provided by law: Provided further, That hereafter the collector of customs of each customs-collection district shall be officially designated by the number of the district for which he is appointed and not by the name of the port where the headquarters are situated, and the President is authorized from time to time to change the location of the headquarters in any customs-collection district as the needs of the service may require: And provided further, That the President shall, at the beginning of each regular session, submit to Congress a statement of all acts, if any, done hereunder and the reasons therefor.

Pursuant to the requirement of the third proviso to the said provision, I have to state that customs-collection districts Nos. 2 and 3, with headquarters ports at Burlington and Newport, Vt., were, on November 21, 1914, by Executive order effective January 1, 1915, consolidated into one customs-collection district, No. 2, with headquarters at St. Albans. This consolidation was made for the reason that the customs business in the State of Vermont could be handled by one collector and would result in a reduction of the expenses of administration.

The port of entry at Somers Point, N. J., in district No. 11, headquarters port, Philadelphia, was abolished by Executive order dated November 30, 1915, to become effective January 1, 1916, for the reason that the customs business at said place was not of sufficient volume to warrant the expenditure necessary to continue the office.

The port of entry at Charlotte, N. Y., in district No. 8, headquarters port, Rochester, N. Y., was abolished by Executive order dated January 28, 1916, to become effective February 1, 1916, for the reason that Charlotte had been by the laws of the State of New York included within the corporate limits of and merged with the city of Rochester.

By Executive order dated February 7, 1916, the boundary line between district No. 29, Oregon, and district No. 30, Washington, was changed so as to detach that part of the State of Washington which embraces the waters of the Columbia River and the north bank thereof west of the one hundred and nineteenth degree of west longitude from the customs-collection district No. 30, and to place the same within the limits of district No. 29. This action was taken in order to facilitate the transaction of customs business on the north bank of the Columbia River.

By Executive order dated April 24, 1916, to become effective May 1, 1916, Winston-Salem, N. C., was created a port of entry in customs-collection district No. 15, headquarters port, Wilmington, N. C., for the reason that a commercial necessity existed which warranted such action.

By Executive order dated November 21, 1916, to become effective December 1, 1916, Gladstone, Mich., headquarters port, Detroit, Mich., was abolished for the reason that the customs business had been removed to Sault Ste. Marie, Mich.

WOODROW WILSON.

THE WHITE HOUSE, December 6, 1916.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 407) to provide for stock-raising homesteads, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. MYERS, Mr. THOMAS, and Mr. SMOOT as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

WILLIAM H. G. MURRAY (ALIAS HENRY GORDON).

By unanimous consent, at the request of Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania, leave was granted to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of William H. G. Murray (alias Henry Gordon), H. R. 16140, Sixty-fourth Congress, first session, no adverse report having been made thereon.

FISH-CULTURAL STATIONS IN CERTAIN STATES.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the bill H. R. 15617, on the Union Calendar, reported from the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

The SPEAKER. This bill is on the Union Calendar, and the House automatically resolves itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BARNHART] in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 15617) to establish fish-hatching and fish-cultural stations in the States of Alabama; Louisiana; Florida; Georgia, South Carolina, or North Carolina; Maryland or Virginia; Oregon or Washington; Texas; Oklahoma; Illinois; Washington; Arizona; New Mexico; Michigan; Idaho; Missouri; Pennsylvania, Delaware, or New Jersey; and Minnesota.

Be it enacted, etc., That the following sums, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and the same are hereby, authorized to be appropriated for the establishment of fish-hatching and fish-cultural stations in the States hereafter named at suitable points indicated hereafter, to be selected in the discretion of the Secretary of Commerce, including purchase of sites, construction of buildings, and equipment:

State of Alabama, $50,000.
State of Louisiana, $50,000.
State of Florida, $50,000.
Migratory fish station on the South Atlantic coast, in Georgia, North Carolina, or South Carolina, $50,000.
State of Maryland or Virginia, for the special study of fish diseases and problems in propagation of fish, $40,000.
State of Oregon or Washington, along the Columbia River Basin, $50,000.
State of Texas, northwestern section, $50,000.
State of Oklahoma, $50,000.
State of Illinois, $50,000.
State of Washington, on the Quiniault River or its tributaries, or on Lake Quiniault, $50,000.
State of Arizona, $50,000.
State of New Mexico, $50,000.
State of Michigan, $50,000.
State of Idaho, $50,000.
State of Missouri, $50,000.
State of Pennsylvania, Delaware, or New Jersey, on the lower Delaware River, $50,000.
State of Minnesota, $50,000.
State of Texas, on or along the Gulf coast, for the propagation of sea fish, $50,000.

Provided, That before any final steps shall have been taken for the construction of a fish-hatching and fish-cultural station in accordance with this act the States herein named, through appropriate legislative action, shall accord to the United States Commissioner of Fisheries and his duly authorized agents the right to conduct fish hatching and fish culture and all operations connected therewith in any manner and at any time that may by them be considered necessary and proper, any fishery laws of the State to the contrary notwithstanding: And provided further, That the operations of said hatchery shall be discontinued whenever the State ceases to accord the right referred to in the preceding proviso, and may be suspended by the Secretary of Commerce whenever, in his judgment, the laws and regulations affecting the fishes cultivated are allowed to remain so inadequate as to impair the efficiency of said hatchery.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Chairman, I wish to inquire if there is any limitation under the rule for general debate on this bill?

The CHAIRMAN. The rule limits general debate to two hours.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Is the time to be equally divided?

The CHAIRMAN. The rule provides that the time shall be equally divided.

Mr. ALEXANDER. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GREENE] is the ranking minority member and will control the time on that side.

Mr. MANN. The time is to be equally divided between those in favor of the bill and those opposed.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I do not know who is opposed to the bill.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman will probably discover who is opposed to it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will inquire if there is any disposition to debate the bill?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I do not know of any.

Mr. MANN. I think some one will debate the bill. None of these pork-barrel bills can get through without debate.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, the rule requires that an hour be given to those who oppose the bill. If there is no one opposing the bill, then there will be but one hour for those in favor of the bill?

The CHAIRMAN. That is evidently correct.

Mr. MANN. I have no doubt that when the time comes some one will be recognized in opposition to the bill.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I have no desire to cut off anybody. I simply desire to clear up the situation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that those who are not in favor of the bill will be protected in the matter of debate.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say a few words in a brief discussion of the bill. This bill provides for the establishment of 18 fish hatcheries and fish-cultural stations in the different States in the Union named in the bill, and authorizes an expenditure of $890,000 for that purpose. No bill is included in this omnibus bill that has not been favorably recommended by the Department of Commerce. Every bill incorporated in the present omnibus bill, with possibly one or two exceptions, was incorporated in an omnibus fisheries bill reported from the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries in the last Congress, but was not reached on the calendar for consideration and passage.

I have been a member of the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries for 10 years past, and during that time bills have been reported out for fish hatcheries and fish-cultural stations, but very few of them were considered or passed the House. In fact, I do not recall any bills that were reached or came up for consideration on the call of the committee that passed the House. Most of the bills that were passed were bills that came over to the House from the Senate and were subsequently incorporated in the sundry civil bill in the Senate by amendment and became a law. For that reason the membership of this House has not received the consideration in the establishment of fish hatcheries and fish-cultural stations in the several States of the Union to which it is entitled. In fact, I doubt if we have passed one bill that originated in the House to establish a fish hatchery or fish-cultural station on an average in each of the four past Congresses.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. This bill provides approximately $900,000 for the establishment of new fish hatcheries. Will the gentleman explain why there is a difference between the direct appropriation made to the States of $50,000 in most instances and an appropriation of $40,000 for Maryland or Virginia for "the special study of fish diseases and problems in the propagation of fish"?

Mr. ALEXANDER. The Commissioner of Fisheries made that recommendation and said that $40,000 would be sufficient.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Would not every one of these stations provided for be for the study of fish diseases and problems in the propagation of fish?

Mr. ALEXANDER. No; they are fish-cultural stations and hatcheries.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Then this is for a separate and distinct purpose?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman says this has the recommendation of the Department of Commerce?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Yes. They all come from and are recommended by the Bureau of Fisheries. It may be asked why we did not report out the individual bills rather than an omnibus bill. The records of the committee show that 66 bills were introduced asking for the establishment of fish hatcheries or fish-cultural stations in the different States of the Union. It was impossible to report out all of those bills. In some instances half a dozen or more bills were introduced from one State. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BURKE] was chairman of the subcommittee on fish hatcheries and had direct control of this legislation. He is not here, and hence the duty devolves upon me of presenting this bill to the House. If we had undertaken to report individual bills it would have been very difficult to make a selection between the different bills introduced from the same State, and many of them called for the location of the hatchery or fish-cultural station in the district represented by the author, and it would have been a very delicate matter to discriminate between the authors of the several bills and more difficult to determine the proper sites for the stations. Then again, it would have been embarrassing for us to discriminate between the different States. Hence our rule has been to refer these bills to the Bureau of Fisheries through the Department of Commerce with a request that no bill should be recommended except in States where there is a present need for the establishment of stations with a view to the propagation of fish for the food supply of the country, having in mind the orderly development of this great industry in the years to come. Hence this bill only embodies the same bills reported to the House by the committee on the omnibus fish-hatchery bill in the last Congress and does not include any new projects, with possibly one or two exceptions, as I now remember.

It may be asked why we have asked for an authorization of expenditure of $50,000 for each of 17 of these stations and $40,000 for the other, rather than $25,000, as has been heretofore asked. Dr. Smith, the Commissioner of Fisheries, informed me that it may not be necessary in every instance to expend that much money, but in many instances it will be necessary. Heretofore the bureau has been compelled to come back to Congress and ask for an increase in the appropriations. For instance, the only fish hatchery or fish-cultural stations provided for in the last few years have been incorporated in the sundry civil appropriation bills, as I say, by amendment in the Senate. One, for instance, for the State of Utah, was established, and the original appropriation for that station was $25,000. That hatchery was authorized June 23, 1913, in the sundry civil appropriation bill. An additional appropriation for this hatchery was afterwards made of $25,000 on August 1, 1914, making the total appropriation $50,000, although the original appropriation was only $25,000. Again, in the State of Wyoming a fish hatchery was authorized in the sundry civil appropriation bill by amendment in the Senate in the sum of $25,000 on March 4, 1911. Afterwards an additional appropriation was made of $18,000 on March 3, 1915, making a total of $43,000. There is a request now pending in the estimates of the Department of Commerce for an additional appropriation of $7,000 to complete the hatchery.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. ALEXANDER. In a moment. In South Carolina a fish hatchery was authorized, to cost $25,000, on March 4, 1914. An additional appropriation was made on March 3, 1915, of $10,000, making a total of $35,000, and they are asking for an additional appropriation of $6,000 to complete that plant.

In the State of Kentucky the establishment of a hatchery was authorized. The original law called for an appropriation of $25,000. It was passed on March 4, 1911. An additional appropriation of $20,000 was made March 3, 1915, for this hatchery, making a total of $45,000. Hence I say the committee thought it wise to ask for $50,000 for the establishment of these fish hatcheries or fish-cultural stations in the first instance rather than to come back to Congress and ask for additional appropriations. In some instances it will cost this much money and in other instances it may not cost so much, but in every instance the department must go to the Committee on Appropriations and ask for the money necessary for the establishment and equipment of these stations, and the Committee on Appropriations can determine whether or not the expenditure is necessary.

Mr. LANGLEY. Will the gentleman yield to me now?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Yes.

Mr. LANGLEY. I do not happen to be familiar with the location of all of the hatcheries that have heretofore been provided for. I want to ask the gentleman if this bill carries a provision for a hatchery in any State which already has one in it?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I think it does.

Mr. LANGLEY. Why did the gentleman not give us another one in Kentucky?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I am not sure that the gentleman asked for any.

Mr. LANGLEY. I am. The gentleman ought to remember that I introduced a bill for one at Booneville, on the Kentucky River, and talked with him a number of times about it, and asked him to get a report from the department upon it, which he said he would do.

Mr. ALEXANDER. The gentleman's bill was referred to the department along with the other bills. There are some States where the necessity is greater than in others.

Mr. LANGLEY. We have one in Louisville, but I understand it has not been very much of a success. We want one established in the mountains, where the water is pure, and where it will run into it by the force of gravitation instead of having to pump it in as they do at Louisville.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Chairman, with reference to the cost of hatcheries, I will state that through Dr. Smith, the Commissioner of Fisheries, I have learned that the State of California is now building a trout fish hatchery at the base of Mount Whitney at a cost of $170,000, the State of Oregon a salmon hatchery at Bonneville at a cost of $100,000, and New Jersey a bass and trout hatchery at Hackettstown at a cost of $120,000, so that the amounts asked for in this bill in authorizations are certainly very reasonable. But, as I stated, in every instance the Committee on Appropriations will have it in its power to determine what sums may be expended for these hatcheries.

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I yield.

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. I am not familiar with the merits of these items, except as shown in the report of the committee. I assume that each item is meritorious, and the question I wish to ask the gentleman is whether, in his judgment, the need of these items is sufficiently urgent to make it necessary for Congress to act upon them at this time, in view of the extraordinary drain that is being made upon the Treasury for the purpose of increasing the Army and the Navy and other extraordinary appropriations that have been made to meet matters of very great urgency.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Well, I may say that the food supply of the country seems to be one of the paramount issues just now, and the establishment of these hatcheries in the several States of the Union is of much profit to the people in the matter of food supply. Very great interest is taken in this subject from time to time by the department which is charged with the duty of conserving the food fishes of the country as well as by Members of Congress. During the years I have been chairman of the committee, as well as during the years preceding when I served on the committee under the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GREENE], the committee has been very careful to discriminate between those cases that are meritorious or most urgent and those that are not meritorious or are less urgent. I wish to call attention to the fact that there are only 18 projects provided for in this bill, and during the last 10 years I do not believe there has been a fish-hatchery bill reported from the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries enacted into law except in the manner that I have already indicated. I do not recall any now. The bills that have been enacted into law were bills which were reported to the Senate and passed the Senate, but failed to pass the House, and which were incorporated in the sundry civil bill in the Senate by way of amendment and agreed to in conference. That is the only way we have obtained legislation. I think the membership of the House has some rights; I think they are entitled to consideration in the establishment of these hatcheries. So far as the appropriation of money at this session to meet the requirements of this bill is concerned, I wish to say this: I asked Dr. Smith that question this morning. He said he did not believe the present Congress would be called upon to make an appropriation of more than $10,000 for the preliminary work; that is to make the selection of sites and make surveys, with a view to the establishment of these hatcheries.

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. ALEXANDER. So it will not involve a large present expenditure at all. The appropriations made at this session will be for the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1917; and the small sum that will be called for by this bill will not be a serious drain on the Treasury in the next fiscal year. The expenditures authorized by this bill will be extended over several years.

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. Would not this, though, if all the appropriations asked for in the various bills which are pending and which are equally meritorious with this, are granted, probably require the levying of additional taxes in order to take care of the Treasury during the next fiscal year?

Mr. ALEXANDER. This bill calls for, I think, about $890,000, and if that sum were to be expended in the next fiscal year the gentleman might be right. This is an authorization only, and it will take several years to locate and construct these hatcheries. The personnel must be provided for, and it will not involve a large expenditure in any one year; but I think a start should be made, and I think these several States that are asking for these hatcheries should be recognized, and that during the years to come other hatcheries should be authorized in States not recognized in this bill, where the need is less urgent, but whose claims have great merit.

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. Of course, this bill will grow considerably before it gets to the Senate and becomes a law. I merely wanted to ask the gentleman's opinion as to the wisdom of undertaking to deal with this class of authorizations, meritorious though they be, but which are not sufficiently urgent to hazard the duty of having to levy additional taxes to take care of the Treasury in the future.

Mr. ALEXANDER. It will be the determined purpose of the committee, in which we hope to have the support of the House, to prevent the incorporation of any more projects in the bill by way of amendment. I can not say what will happen in the Senate. I think all the bills which passed the Senate were referred to my committee and were considered by the committee and are incorporated in this bill. If the bill is loaded down, I am frank to say, I will lose interest in it, whether it is loaded down here or in the Senate. If we ever expect to make any progress in this class of legislation, we must be reasonable about it.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I will.

Mr. FESS. What is the policy of the Government? Do you cooperate with the States? Are the States making any appropriations in this matter at all?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Not in cooperation with the Government.

Mr. FESS. It is exclusively a governmental function?

Mr. ALEXANDER. They have independent hatcheries under State supervision and control. This bill provides that these hatcheries shall not be established in the several States unless the States by legislation give to the Government exclusive control and the State laws are in harmony with the Federal laws and regulations.

Mr. FESS. Has there been an instance where the State has turned a hatchery over to the control of the Federal Government?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I have no knowledge of such a case. At the last session we passed a bill authorizing the Government to take over a private hatchery in Massachusetts as a gift to the Government. It is a fine, well-equipped plant.

Mr. FESS. The point I want to get at is this: Is this development, which I believe in—I agree with it now as I have before because I think the finding of new sources of food is important—but the question with me is whether it is altogether the burden of the General Government, or whether the States should be brought into cooperation with the General Government?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Well, the States have hatcheries and the Federal Government has hatcheries, and the General Government has encouraged the States to build State hatcheries and the States have been given every encouragement to cooperate with the Federal Government in the propagation of food fishes.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. If the gentleman will permit, I may say that all of the Western States maintain one, two, a half a dozen, or a dozen State hatcheries, and they spend a large amount of money and stock all the smaller streams, and the whole public is allowed to go there and fish——

Mr. FESS. I was about to say if the Government should cooperate in supporting and aiding the States' work I think it would be a fine thing——

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. The State of Colorado spends ten times as much as the Government, and we do not have enough to supply the demand.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. May I add a little to that? In Minnesota, for instance, there is one United States fish-cultural station that does nothing but provide a fish supply for Lake Superior—commercial work on the lake. The State of Minnesota, on the other hand, maintains four or five fish-cultural stations, providing the lakes and streams in the interior of the State. So the State of Minnesota, while it is providing generously for its waters, gets no benefit from this fish-cultural station at Duluth. This bill provides for the county of St. Louis, which contains more streams perhaps than any other county in America; and the tronble with that is that as it borders on Canadian waters it can not be stocked by the State.

Mr. FESS. Does the gentleman think this is a legitimate proposition?

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I think it is a legitimate one and most commendable. Certainly in my State it is taking care of the Federal features in restocking streams and lakes.

Mr. BENNET rose.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET].

Mr. BENNET. I wanted to ask the gentleman if the fish hatchery at Tupelo, Miss., was still being operated?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I do not know.

Mr. BENNET. Is the gentleman acquainted with that particular fish hatchery?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I am not.

Mr. BENNET. Then, I can not very well ask the question I intended to ask.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I notice that by the terms of this bill the location of these respective sites is left to the Department of Commerce.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Yes. Of course, many of the original bills asked for the location in some particular congressional district, but we could not consider that as a wise thing to do.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I will say frankly that the portion of the bill in which I am interested is that in a part of Minnesota. My colleague from Minnesota [Mr. VAN DYKE] introduced a bill establishing a fish-cultural station in St. Louis County, which received my cordial approval and what assistance I could give him. There is a definite Federal reason for the location of that station at that place. I can not conceive of any other place in the State where a Federal station could properly be involved.

Mr. ALEXANDER. That is a matter for the department to consider and ought to consider in establishing a hatchery.

Mr. LANGLEY. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Yes.

Mr. LANGLEY. I understood the gentleman to give as one reason for the urgency of this measure at this time the scarcity of the food supply. In the opinion of the gentleman how long will it require to increase the fish supply through the hatcheries provided for in this bill so as to relieve the food shortage? In other words, how many years will we have to wait until we get relief through the increase of fish through these proposed hatcheries, from the scarcity of food?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I can not tell, but I am sure the longer we put it off the longer it will be before that need is met.

Mr. LANGLEY. Will it not be until after the next presidential election, at least, after which we will not be afflicted with food shortage?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I can not tell what will happen after the next presidential election. I am not given to such speculation.

Mr. DIXON. I would like to ask the gentleman if the commissioner recommended the establishment of other hatcheries than those included in the bill?

Mr. ALEXANDER. He did not.

Mr. DIXON. So this was the extent of the recommendation?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Yes. So far as the committee is concerned we have no knowledge of others.

Mr. DIXON. I simply wanted to know the method of elimination the committee pursued in eliminating those in some States and favoring other States. I want to know the reason why.

Mr. ALEXANDER. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BURKE] was chairman of the subcommittee, and I was in touch with him all the while. I understand that this bill incorporates the projects that were recommended by the bureau.

Mr. DIXON. And includes all that they did recommend?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Yes; at the time this bill was reported to the House. Now, there is one bill, introduced by the gentleman from California, Judge RAKER, that we have reported out since, but it was not incorporated in the original bill because that bill had already been reported to the House.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. In regard to the bill for California, my recollection is that, in speaking to the chairman of the committee, I found that the bill had been filed and the report presented and that it was simply overlooked. When it was considered by the full committee, they reported out the bill for California, carrying only $16,000, with the understanding that when the bill came up, having been reported by the subcommittee to the full committee, it would go on the general bill.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Chairman, I wish to reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. OGLESBY. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Yes.

Mr. OGLESBY. I think on the answer to this question will depend my action on this bill. I would like to know what there is in this proposition that takes it out of the class of appropriations that should be made by the States themselves and makes it the duty of the Federal Government. It may be in some instances, as was indicated by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MILLER], that there is some reason for it, but I would like to know whether the matter has been considered by the committee from that standpoint and if these appropriations have been made because it was in the opinion of the committee a matter that should be appropriated for by the Federal Government?

Mr. ALEXANDER. The committee has followed a policy that has been followed by the Congress from time immemorial, and I do not know that the committee considered that question. The committee followed a long line of precedents.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. HULBERT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I regret I can not at this time. I should yield to my colleague from Massachusetts [Mr. GREENE] one-half of the time allotted to me.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I will yield for a question, if agreeable to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GREENE].

Mr. DIXON. Were the recommendations of the commissioner made in response to requests from the committee, or were they made voluntarily?

Mr. ALEXANDER. The bills were referred to the department for a report, with the request that the department consider the bills and recommend no bills except those having merit and in States where the hatcheries would be of benefit and are needed. I will say that every one of the bills was incorporated in the omnibus bill reported by the committee in the last Congress, with possibly one or two exceptions, which I do not now recall.

Mr. HULBERT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman accord me the same privilege that he accorded to the gentleman from Indiana?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I do not want longer to trespass upon the time that should be accorded to my colleague, Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts, or it would give me pleasure to do so. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GREENE] the balance of my time.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I would not have it understood that I represent the opposition to this bill. I do not know that there was any opposition to the bill in the committee when the bill was considered. These propositions that are included in the bill are made according to the usual custom, leaving the question of the selection of locations to the Department of Commerce, to the Bureau of Fisheries; and no attempt has been made, and there never has been, certainly in the last 10 years, an attempt to locate any fish hatcheries in a bill as presented to the House, although we have bills presented before the committee that do make the locations.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Chairman, does the gentleman say he is opposed to the bill?

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. No.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I understood the gentleman to say he was for it, and that is the reason why I offered the gentleman half of my time. The opposition will have their time later.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. I have no desire myself to occupy any time in the debate. If anybody on this side of the House would like to speak in favor of the bill I will yield him time now.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts yield?

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Yes.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I desire to ask if it is not a fact that all the different bills reported favorably here in behalf of different States have been first passed upon by the department and favorably recommended?

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. They have been.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Is it not a further fact that all the bills have been referred from the committee to which they were referred to the Secretary of Commerce for the purpose of reporting upon the bills, and they have all been favorably reported?

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Yes; by the Secretary of Commerce. They have all been favorably reported.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. And no bills outside of those have been reported?

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. All the pending bills have been recommended by the department.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I desire to state that there is a bill pending for northwestern Texas, and there is no place named in the bill for the location of this hatchery, but it is left to the department, at the request of the department; and for that reason I desire to know whether any places are found in this bill where the locations were not favorably acted upon by the department.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Every one of them was favorably acted upon by the department, they to make the selection of the location.

The CHAIRMAN. In order to set the Chair right, is the gentleman speaking for the bill or opposing the bill?

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. I am not opposing the bill, but I hold the time in opposition. If anyone wants to speak in opposition, he can come to me for time.

Mr. MANN. I understood the gentleman from Missouri to yield to the gentleman time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will not recognize the gentleman from Massachusetts unless he is opposed to the bill.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. I am not opposed to the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts is not opposed to the bill.

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri yielded time, as the Chair understands it, to the opposition to the bill. Is the Chair right?

Mr. ALEXANDER. No. My colleague, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GREENE]——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Missouri wish to proceed with his hour now?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I wanted to reserve the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. Then the gentleman from Massachusetts, the gentleman's colleague, can not reyield that time to some one else.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Then I will yield to him such time as he desires.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GREENE] is the ranking Member on the Republican side, is he not? It is proper that he should have time yielded to him.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Missouri yield to another inquiry?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri has control of only one hour.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts one-half of that hour.

The CHAIRMAN. Just how the gentleman from Missouri can reserve the balance of his time and then yield half of it to the gentleman from Massachusetts is what the Chair has not been able to understand. What the Chair has been trying to get at is to divide this time so as to properly distribute it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, before that question is determined, will the gentleman from Missouri yield for a question?

Mr. ALEXANDER. No; I can not yield at this time. I do not want to do my colleague from Massachusetts an injustice. I have yielded my time to the gentleman from Massachusetts, the ranking minority member of the committee. He is in favor of the bill. I understand those in favor of the bill have time coming to them, and those opposed have time. He can use it now or later.

The CHAIRMAN. That is what the Chair was trying to get at. But if the gentleman from Missouri yields some of his time to the gentleman from Massachusetts, the Chair doubts the propriety of the gentleman from Massachusetts yielding some of that time to some other gentleman.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. I will yield to those in favor of the bill.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I was not proceeding under the general rules of the House where, having control of the floor, I occupied half of that hour. I am proceeding under this special rule, as I understand it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GREENE] is recognized.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts yield to me now?

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. I will.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Pennsylvania rise?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I want to interrogate the gentleman from Massachusetts, and through him, if the gentleman cares to answer, the gentleman from Missouri. When I inquired about this bill a few moments ago I had not carefully read the report. I observe in the bill that provision was made for a hatchery for the State of Pennsylvania, Delaware, or New Jersey on the lower Delaware River. Now, the shad-fishing industry has been a very important one on the Delaware River. Owing to the increase of industrial establishments there has been a gradual decadence of the shad industry. The shad have been going away, but there is a very earnest movement in progress to reestablish the sturgeon industry on the Delaware River. From reading this bill I find that there is to be some discretion as to the location of a hatchery, whether for shad or for sturgeon I do not know; but in reading the report it appears that this hatchery is to be located in the State of Pennsylvania. The bill indicates that there is to be a choice as between three States. What we want is that there shall be a hatchery on the Delaware River, as there is none there now conducted by the Government. I would like to know who is to make the selection of the site of the hatchery if the bill passes?

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. I will answer the gentleman. The Bureau of Fisheries of the Department of Commerce will select the location.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The impression is given here in the letter of the Secretary of Commerce that the hatchery is to be assigned to the State of Pennsylvania.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. If the State of Pennsylvania has a suitable location, I presume it probably will get it. If it has not, it is limited to the Delaware River, and the bill would cover any one of these three States.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Then the introduction of the States of New Jersey and Delaware was an afterthought of the committee?

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. I can not say as to that.

Mr. HARDY. My recollection is that the whole matter was discussed by the representatives of the Bureau of Fisheries, who said they thought it desirable that there should be a hatchery somewhere in one of these three States, without designing to designate definitely which one.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Then the idea of the committee is that the hatchery will be located in one of the three States on the Delaware River?

Mr. HARDY. If it says on the Delaware River, then that is my understanding of it; but it is the wording desired by the Bureau of Fisheries. They wanted it that way so as to give them that discretion.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. In the report it is stated:

Under date of February 29, 1916, in a letter addressed to Hon. M. E. Burke, chairman Subcommittee on Fish and Fish Hatcheries, Hon. William C. Redfield, Secretary of Commerce, recommends a fish hatchery for the State of Pennsylvania.

Mr. HARDY. I suppose that was a slip of the pen on the part of the Secretary of Commerce. I suppose he was not as familiar with the details of the matter as are the Bureau of Fisheries and the committee.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I wish to say to the committee that there is need for a fish hatchery of some kind or other on the Delaware River. We have been under the impression that we were to get one in Pennsylvania. The bill evidently allows discretion to the Secretary of Commerce to locate the hatchery in either one of the States mentioned.

Mr. HARDY. That is my understanding.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. What we want is to have an impetus given to shad fishing, which is a very important industry, and to the sturgeon industry, which at this particular time, in view of the increased cost of living in the United States, would be mighty important to the people at large.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. I want to reply to the gentleman from Pennsylvania and to say that I have no doubt Pennsylvania will hold up her end of the line when it comes to locating this fish hatchery by the Bureau of Fisheries.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman may be assured of that.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. I have no fear on that score at all.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. RAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BURKE] was chairman of the subcommittee. Who was the ranking member of the subcommittee on the minority side?

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. The gentleman from Washington [Mr. HADLEY].

Mr. RAKER. The purpose of the committee was to take up all these bills that have been favorably recommended. I find that a bill introduced by myself—H. R. 11245—for a station in northern California was overlooked by the subcommittee; but afterwards the committee reported it favorably, and I understand that the intention is, in considering the omnibus bill, to include that bill with it, so as to save the consideration of a separate bill.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. The gentleman will have to consult the chairman of the committee about that. I do not undertake to make any statement about that part of it.

Mr. RAKER. One further question. As I understand it, the purpose of the subcommittee and the full committee, who have gone over it very carefully, is not to require the consideration of my bill as a separate bill, but to include it in the omnibus bill.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. I would not like to make any statement about that which would seem to commit the committee. We will try to consider that when the time comes. This bill is the one now under consideration. Any amendments to it will have to be considered on their own merits when the time comes.

Mr. LANGLEY. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Yes.

Mr. LANGLEY. I notice that this bill provides that there shall be a station in Oregon or Washington, South Carolina or North Carolina, Delaware or New Jersey. Now, why did the committee cover so much territory in that provision?

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. We acted very largely on the advice of the Bureau of Fisheries, so as to allow them to locate in one of the three places.

Mr. LANGLEY. Of course the committee did not have any idea of getting more votes for the bill by including all those States?

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. I will state for the information of the gentleman that for more than 10 years there has been no omnibus bill. This is an attempt to increase the food supply of fishes, and we have tried to cover as much ground as possible.

Mr. LANGLEY. I have no copy of the report before me. Was this report made before the election or after?

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. It was made before the election.

Mr. LANGLEY. Is the gentleman familiar with the different hatcheries now in operation, for instance at Louisville, Ky.?

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. No; I am not.

Mr. LANGLEY. The gentleman does not know then that that hatchery has not been a success?

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. No; I do not know anything about it.

Mr. LANGLEY. Well, I do.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Yes.

Mr. FESS. How much weight is given to the recommendation of the Bureau of Fisheries in the location of these various hatcheries?

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. It was determined more than 10 years ago to leave to the Bureau of Fisheries the location of the hatcheries in the various States, because if a bill fixed the location definitely it might be in a place entirely unsuitable for a fish hatchery, although the Member introducing the bill might get it through both Houses. So it was left to the discretion of the Bureau of Fisheries, and we have always prepared our bills in that way, both when I was chairman and since the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ALEXANDER] has become chairman of the committee. We have pursued the same course.

Mr. FESS. In other words, the recommendation of the Bureau of Fisheries, while it is not in the letter of the law as final, is actually the final decision and not the decision of the House.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. It is not the decision of the House; it is more the decision of the Bureau of Fisheries. They decide on the location and ask for an examination of all the circumstances surrounding the case. Instead of putting it into some city in Ohio, for instance, on a stream entirely unfit for a fish hatchery or for fish culture, it would be left to the department, after careful investigation, to locate it.

Mr. FESS. I think that is wisdom, because there will be the opposition cry that it is a pork-barrel measure and that particular locations are getting it, while if it is done by the Bureau of Fisheries it would seem to me to be an answer to that claim.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. I am not afraid of the pork-barrel talk.

Mr. SLOAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Yes.

Mr. SLOAN. I would like to ask the gentleman in how many States there are now fish hatcheries already established?

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. I do not know that I can give the gentleman the information, but there are quite a number.

Mr. SLOAN. I notice that in this bill States are favored where 13 members out of the 21 members of the committee reside. I was wondering how many States outside have been heretofore favored in this manner and what chance the other 420 Members have to have their States favored by the location of fish hatcheries.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. I can not tell the gentleman.

Mr. FOSS. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts yield?

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Yes.

Mr. FOSS. I want to ask whether it would not be wiser to strike out all of these States, inasmuch as it is a matter left entirely in the discretion of the Bureau of Fisheries to locate the hatcheries, and give them the whole United States. Would it not be better to provide a lump sum and give them the whole United States in which to select the location of these fish hatcheries?

Mr. LANGLEY. Yes; and not limit the department.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. We tried to locate what we thought, and the Bureau of Fisheries thought, the best location for fish hatcheries, considering the large number of bills.

Mr. FOSS. It seems to me that that is giving preference to these Members who have introduced bills upon which favorable reports have been made by the Fish Commissioner. Having made a favorable recommendation, which has been incorporated in the report to the House, that would necessarily bind him to that action.

Mr. LANGLEY. He would feel that he was bound in that way.

Mr. FOSS. I think the wisest thing to do is to throw it open to the whole United States and provide a lump-sum appropriation, with the further provision that no hatchery should exceed a cost of over $50,000.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Yes.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Let me supplement the remarks of the gentleman from Illinois. We had the same thing up in the Committee on Mines and Mining, of which the gentleman from Massachusetts was a member, trying to establish mine experiment stations, and we several times had it loaded down so that we got none. Why should not we provide in this bill for the establishment of 5 or 10 fish hatcheries in the whole United States, in the places most needed, to be determined at the discretion of the Department of Commerce? In that way we will get somewhere, but if we load the bill down with many more hatcheries, as it undoubtedly will be when it comes from the Senate, we will never pass it at all. It is a splendid measure and we ought not to overdo it. I think the suggestion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Foss] is eminently fit, and if we could limit it to 5 or 10 a year, or start with that number, and then let subsequent ones be provided for by subsequent Congresses and allow the Bureau of Fisheries to select them, it would be the wisest think to do, and we might be able to pass that kind of a bill.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. The gentleman is aware that there are two bodies, one at this end of the Capitol and one at the other end of the Capitol, and there may be a wide difference of opinion between the two.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. That is what I want, to do something practical and not attempt something that can not be accomplished.

Mr. ALEXANDER. The fish hatcheries we have already got have been provided for on the sundry civil appropriation bill.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Yes; and they have been put on there by ways that we do not approve of when there were more deserving places which were left out. We ought to adopt some rational system and economy in this matter and not an indiscriminate location of them. I am very much in favor of fish hatcheries, but they ought to be intelligently located.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. I will yield five minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MILLER].

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I would like the attention of the membership in the five minutes that I am going to talk. This is a matter of great importance. We are confronted in this country by the colossal high cost of living. It is not a matter of how it came about, it is here. Fish is one item in the great food supply of this Nation. If we had half as much sense as we think we have, we would have increased the food supply instead of decreased it. This bill provides for a fish-cultural station in the State of Minnesota. There is one now in the city of Duluth. I want to give you its condition. It supplies the whole of Lake Superior, which has been the fishing grounds for the Booth Packing Co., of Baltimore, Md., which company has sent its supplies throughout the United States for the past 20 years. They have actually exhausted all of the whitefish from Lake Superior, notwithstanding the fact that this one cultural station has been doing its best to keep a supply; and to-day, in restaurants, cafés, and on trains, when you are served with Lake Superior whitefish you are not getting it at all, you are simply getting lake trout. On the other hand, the lake-trout supply in Lake Superior has been rapidly declining in recent years, and why? Because fishing has been increasing both in Canada and in this country all along the shores of Lake Superior, because of the great demand for a cheaper food supply. But, Mr. Chairman, there has not been a corresponding increase in fish fry. That one station is obliged to fill the needs of a large area, and it is inadequate. It has not been able to take care of Lake Superior alone, and it needs assistance.

It is proposed by this bill to establish another cultural station, not exactly at that point but in the interior, and why? Along the northern boundary line of Minnesota are lakes that lie between Canada and the United States, and that form the boundary line outside of the Great Lakes. An important fishing industry has always existed there, and now it is more important than ever before. When you are served with caviar, which you are assured is Russian caviar in the restaurants of New York and Philadelphia, you may put it down that it is not Russian caviar, but that it comes from the sturgeon fished out of the Lake of the Woods in northern Minnesota. That has been a great and important industry, but has been rapidly declining, because the sturgeon is disappearing for the one reason that there exists no fish-cultural station whose duty it is to keep that lake supplied with sturgeon fry. Rainy Lake, along the northern shore, a very large body of water, has enjoyed a large fishing industry for three years. Prior to that there was none. The catch this last year amounted to about a million and a half. The industry there is capable of vast development. They are up against the fact that they can not get fish fry. The fishing industry of the United States is peculiar. It lives if you supply it with new, fresh fry; it dies if you do not. The one instrumentality which can supply fish fry is governmental. The State of Minnesota is taking care of its part on all of the waters within the boundaries of the State. It is the duty, certainly, of the Federal Government to furnish fish fry for the Great Lakes and for these boundary waters already described. In addition, there are thousands of streams and lakes whose waters flow into the boundary waters, offering unparalleled opportunity for extending the fishing industry. From these come an important element of food supply, and one which should be developed rather than permitted to decline. It is not the interest of my district, it is not the interest of my county, but it is the interest of the people of the United States, because they are the ones who are purchasing and receiving these fish in the nature of a food supply. So, Mr. Chairman, if I might be able to speak further, and I presume I have occupied already five minutes, I would say that I think the plan in this bill is eminently correct. There have been a few fish-cultural stations established during recent years, but how have they been selected and where have they been placed?

The committee which presents this bill to the House has been considering this subject for years. Are they not possessed of some skill, some knowledge of the subject about which they propose to legislate? They have sifted the merits of the various bills that have been presented to their committee during the past 10 years. They have conferred with the various Commissioners of Fisheries that we have had and as a result of their investigations, as a result of all of the proposals, as a result of these discussions with the scientific men in the Bureau of Fisheries they present this bill as the best solution of the problem. They have left great latitude to the scientific executive officers of the Government.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman one minute more.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, they have left great latitude by simply designating the States, the general area, where the stations should be located. I think we should go that far and no further. Let them place these stations where the region is best adapted for them, where they will serve the greatest good. If we pass this bill, we will do more, a thousandfold more, to solve the high cost of living than we will ever do by introducing resolutions calling for an embargo, calling for an investigation of warehouses, calling for investigations of this, that, and the other. This is practical and to the point. Let us act. [Applause.]

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, in a conversation with the gentleman from West Virginia, Mr. BOWERS, who for a number of years was the Fish Commissioner, he tells me that he believes this bill is correct and properly drawn and well guarded, and that it provides just exactly what we ought to have. Still, I do not object to the House doing whatever it pleases—it can do whatever it pleases, whatever it sees fit to do, and it may amend the bill and provide for a general lump sum, as it is in the power of the House to do; yet, as has been stated, the committee itself, all of the time that I have been a member of it, has tried to take care of these propositions, not for the purpose of providing fish hatcheries in the interest of members of the committee especially, but to provide some means of increasing the food supply through these fisheries; but we have had very little to do with it, because all that have been established in the last few years have been established by amendments made in the Senate and put on the sundry civil appropriation bill.

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Yes.

Mr. HARDY. Has not the committee been investigating this matter for at least four or five sessions, at each session, with a great deal of pains?

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Yes; with a great deal of care, both under the present control of the committee and when I was chairman of the committee, and even earlier than that. The committee has tried faithfully to get some kind of proposition that will provide us a better supply of fish for the use of the people of the United States; and we have not tried to locate, and in fact the Bureau of Fisheries has said that it could not indorse a proposition to have fish hatcheries located on certain rivers or in a certain place in a certain State, because it might be found that all of the legislation thus produced would be entirely lost because the location would be entirely unfit. The committee, while I was chairman of it and also while Judge ALEXANDER has been chairman of it, has tried to have the matter left to the bureau to settle the location.

Mr. LANGLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Certainly.

Mr. LANGLEY. If the committee has followed largely the advice of the experts of the Bureau of Fisheries and if their judgment and advice have largely controlled, what is the reason for placing any limitation upon that discretionary power by confining these stations to certain States? How does it happen that most of them will fall in the States some of which already have hatcheries, and again in the States where the members of the committee live? I think we are entitled to that information.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. It has been very kindly suggested by Mr. BOWERS here that the cost of transportation is very important, and it is. The cost of transportation is very important in the location of these stations.

Mr. LANGLEY. The gentleman means, then, that the members of the committee are so located that there will be a great saving in the cost of transportation, if this bill becomes a law.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I was going to suggest to my friend that we ought to reserve some time on our side.

Mr. TILSON. Will my friend permit one question?

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Certainly.

Mr. TILSON. I know of no fish-culture station provided for in any of the States east of the Delaware River. Is it a fact that all the country east of the Delaware River is so well taken care of by these stations that the waters are all stocked with fish?

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Massachusetts has two United States hatcheries and one hatchery that was given by a wealthy woman to the United States, so there are three in Massachusetts. There is one in Rhode Island, I do not know about Connecticut, and I am not sure whether it is supplied or not.

Mr. TILSON. How about the State of New York?

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. I will yield to the gentleman from West Virginia, who will make a statement in regard to the matter.

Mr. BOWERS. Mr. Chairman, this is a step in the right direction. For 10 years past there has been an effort on the part of the Bureau of Fisheries to have Congress pass an omnibus bill providing for proper locations for fish hatcheries in this country. Heretofore in the introduction of a bill the Member of Congress has endeavored to select the site. In the recommendation of this committee the selection of these sites is given to the Bureau of Fisheries, where each appropriation should be. There is not to my mind a single State—and I have gone over this measure carefully—that should not have a fish hatchery. The question was asked a few minutes ago as to the number of hatcheries east of the Delaware River. Maine has two hatcheries under governmental supervision. New Hampshire has a hatchery under governmental supervision. Vermont has a hatchery under governmental supervision. Massachusetts has two hatcheries where the marine species are propagated. New York has a hatchery under governmental supervision. The great State of Pennsylvania, I regret to say, has no hatchery under governmental supervision. The question of transportation is a very important item. There was a suggestion a few moments ago as to why there should be a hatchery in Oklahoma. There is not a State in the Southwest which makes greater demands upon the Bureau of Fisheries, with possibly the exception of Texas, than Oklahoma. In New Mexico and Arizona the water of those hatcheries can be supplied from artesian wells; in fact, some of the best and largest I have ever seen I saw in the vicinity of Roswell, N. Mex.—artesian wells, with a flow of 2,500 gallons a minute, sufficient to supply the wants of the best hatchery in America. There is no appropriation that can be made by this Government that will inure more greatly to the people than this. There is no appropriation that can be made in competition with the high cost of living whereby the people of this country can be more greatly benefited than by this small sum asked for by the Bureau of Fisheries. In going over this very carefully I find $890,000 is the total amount asked for. The distribution is properly made. In conjunction with the hatcheries this country now has, I believe for a period of years there will be no necessity for further appropriations for this bureau. I indorse and I want to cooperate with the men who are endeavoring to have this measure passed, and I ask the support of this body irrespective of party. [Applause.]

Mr. SLOAN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BOWERS. Yes.

Mr. SLOAN. The gentleman has stated some of the States in which hatcheries already exist. What, if any, hatcheries are in the interior of the continent—say, in the States of Iowa, South Dakota, Wyoming, Nebraska, Kansas?

Mr. BOWERS. Iowa has two hatcheries.

Mr. SLOAN. Governmental hatcheries?

Mr. BOWERS. Governmental hatcheries, near the Mississippi River—one at Manchester, Iowa, I think, and the other at Fairport.

Mr. LENROOT. How about Wisconsin?

Mr. BOWERS. Under governmental supervision, I regret to say, it has no hatchery. We have collection stations where the fish of the Mississippi River are collected. Whenever there is an overflow of this great stream we collect the fish from these bayous, and they are distributed throughout the United States, and there is no better work and no better service done by the Bureau of Fisheries than this collection from these bayous. We get the adults, we get the larger fish instead of the smaller fish, which would otherwise be distributed from other points.

Mr. SLOAN. I was endeavoring to ascertain, especially with reference to the States of Nebraska, the Dakotas, Kansas, Wyoming——

Mr. BOWERS. Wyoming has a hatchery.

Mr. SLOAN. Wyoming has one?

Mr. BOWERS. Yes. Iowa has two.

Mr. SLOAN. Has Kansas any?

Mr. BOWERS. No; neither Kansas nor Nebraska has a hatchery. We have one on the Great Lakes, but no inland hatchery.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman allow me?

Mr. BOWERS. Certainly.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman says that from the overflow of the Mississippi River to the bayous fish are captured of a little larger size and shipped all over——

Mr. BOWERS. All over the country.

Mr. CANNON. All over the country?

Mr. BOWERS. Yes, sir.

Mr. CANNON. Why not spend this money on the plants, make the fish hatcheries that we have better and larger, instead of blowing in money on plants, with employees duplicated here, there, and yonder, and distribute the fish as they are now distributed, all over the country, from the bayous?

Mr. BOWERS. Yes; but on the other hand you have but two or three specimens that are collected from those bayous. You have the basses, the bream, and the crappie, and occasionally some carp. The Mississippi River does not furnish salmon; it does not furnish trout. It furnishes three species.

Mr. CANNON. If you had one fish hatchery on the Lakes——

Mr. BOWERS. For the Great Lakes there should be——

Mr. CANNON. For the Great Lakes one of sufficient size to cut out the multitude of hatcheries, and one sufficient hatchery on the north Atlantic and one on the south Atlantic and one on the Gulf. Is not that all we have, and could not we save hundreds of thousands of dollars in that way?

Mr. BRUMBAUGH. I would like to ask the gentleman if there is a hatchery at Put in Bay, and is it a Government plant or a State plant?

Mr. BOWERS. It is under governmental supervision and a good plant.

Mr. BENNET. Ought there not to be a fish hatchery on Long Island to take care of the migratory cod?

Mr. BOWERS. There are a couple there under Government supervision, but——

Mr. BENNET. No national fishery?

Mr. BOWERS. No, sir.

Mr. BENNET. Where is the national hatchery located in New York State?

Mr. BOWERS. At Cape Vincent. Others are State hatcheries. The largest State hatchery is at Cold Spring Harbor.

Mr. BENNET. Is that a national hatchery?

Mr. BOWERS. It is a State hatchery.

Mr. BENNET. Is there any in the State of New York that is under national supervision?

Mr. BOWERS. Yes; at Cape Vincent, on Lake Ontario.

Mr. BENNET. In New York State?

Mr. BOWERS. In New York State.

Mr. DOWELL. As I understand the gentleman, two or three of these hatcheries provided for in the bill must be supplied by water from artesian wells?

Mr. BOWERS. It might suffice in several cases; yes.

Mr. DOWELL. Is it not preferable to put these hatcheries where there is plenty of water than to provide for furnishing water from artesian wells?

Mr. BOWERS. It might be, but the expense of transportation is simply enormous. For instance, Texas has one hatchery——

Mr. DOWELL. Will not the additional expense for furnishing the water——

Mr. BOWERS. I say that an inland hatchery, such a one as you have in contemplation in Arizona and New Mexico, could be operated at an expense that would not exceed $6,000 a year; that is, over and above the regular personnel appropriated for by Congress.

Mr. LANGLEY. The gentleman, I believe, is an expert on this question?

Mr. BOWERS. I would not say that.

Mr. LANGLEY. Well, the gentleman was Commissioner of Fisheries for many years, and I think he is an expert. I want to ask him a question. We have a fish hatchery located in Louisville, Ky. They have to pump water into it from the Ohio River. I am told—and I do not know whether it is true or not—that the land crabs bored holes into it so that the water ran out about as fast as they could pump it in. That was a good while ago. If it was true, it may have been remedied. I do not know. Does not the gentleman think that a fish hatchery located up in the Kentucky mountains, where the pure water gushes out of the sides of the hills and gets purer, if possible, as it ripples over the rocks and flows onward toward the sea, and where the force of gravitation would run the water right into the fish hatchery instead of having to pump it in, where it is necessarily more or less polluted, would be a good deal better for the propagation of fish?

Mr. BOWERS. In case of the location of the hatchery in Jefferson County, Ky., it is possible that the Congressman from that district looked better after its necessities than you did when the hatchery was located there.

Mr. LANGLEY. Will the gentleman permit me to say that the gentleman from Louisville [Mr. SHERLEY] was on the Committee on Appropriations, and he put in as a committee amendment a provision that the Kentucky hatchery must be located at Louisville, and I had no chance to change that. The gentleman from West Virginia, then Commissioner of Fisheries, first acquainted me with the fact that this had been done. I have done my best to get a hatchery located in the Kentucky mountains and have thus far failed, but I will get it yet. I am not going to offer an amendment now, because I know it would be a waste of time.

Mr. BOWERS. The site was stipulated by the bill. The bureau had nothing to do with it. I did not mean that my friend from Kentucky had neglected the matter in the slightest, because he never does that.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentleman have five minutes more.

Mr. MANN rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois desire to speak in opposition to the bill? However, before the gentleman proceeds, will some one in opposition to the bill take charge of the time?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask to be recognized in opposition to the bill.

This is an omnibus fish-hatchery bill providing for some 18 new fish hatcheries. There are now 41 or 42 fish hatcheries owned by the United States in the various States. This bill proposes an addition of nearly 50 per cent in the number of such hatcheries. It is what is ordinarily called a "pork-barrel" bill.

It is true, as gentlemen who are in favor of the bill have stated, that there have been but few fish hatcheries created or provided by the United States during the last 5 years, or the last 10 years, or, I may add, during the last 20 years—during my entire service in the House. Very few additional new fish hatcheries have been provided. At various times new bills have been reported to the House. I think at one session the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries reported favorably to the House about 50 bills providing for different fish hatcheries where any old man asked for it. The Commissioner of Fisheries in each case recommended the bill.

The committee has possibly wisely adopted a method which the committee thinks is more apt to pass the bills, by combining a large number of States in one bill than by depending upon the merits of the propositions; and without in any way whatever intending to reflect upon the committee, for which I have the highest respect, I do not think the report of the committee shows any great study by the committee of the subject. Doubtless they have given consideration to these fish-hatchery questions for a number of years, but all the items in this bill are recommended solely because the Commissioner of Fisheries recommended them, and because they belonged to certain States, most of which were represented on the committee. Now, I desire to say——

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Not right now; in a moment. It is easy to say we ought to increase the supply of fish, but after all, that has very little to do with the question of the establishment of a new fish hatchery. We now appropriate, or did year before last—I have not the figures for last year, but they are not very far away; yes, I have the figures for this fiscal year—we now appropriate for salaries in the Bureau of Fisheries $409,840. We appropriate under the item of propagation of food fishes, which is the main item connected with the fish hatcheries, $350,000. The main expense of a fish hatchery is the service, and the largest item at each fish hatchery is the superintendent. In most of the fish hatcheries the salary of the superintendent alone, which is not high, is at least one-third, or nearly one-third, the entire expense of service at the station; so that every time we create a new fish hatchery we are spending money at the top, where it is not needed, instead of spending money where it is needed, perhaps, in the propagation of fishes.

I do not wish to be exceptional; I simply have the appropriation bill before me. I read:

Baker Lake (Wash.) station: Superintendent, $1,500; fish culturist, $900; two laborers, at $600 each; in all, $3,600.
Bozeman (Mont.) station: Superintendent, $1,500; fish culturist, $900; two laborers, at $600 each; in all, $3,600.
Cold Springs (Ga.) station: Superintendent, $1,500; fish culturist, $900; two laborers, at $600 each; in all, $3,600.
Craig Brook, Me., Station: Superintendent, $1,500; foreman, $900; three laborers, at $600 each; in all, $4,200.

Whenever you establish a new fish hatchery you have to provide a new superintendent. He is not the one who actually does the work. He is not the one who really propagates the fish. He does his share of the work probably. We provide in addition a fish culturist and the laborers. They do the work. But the great increase in the expense comes through the additional superintendents.

Now, the original expense of a proposition is never the test by which you determine whether or not it is a good proposition. What is the after result? What is to be the expense of maintenance? These fish hatcheries will cost $10,000 less than $900,000, but the expense of maintenance each year when they are established continues indefinitely, and we ought to figure so that we can reduce as far as possible the maintenance expense from year to year. A fish hatchery when established is only the beginning. It does nothing except as it labors from year to year. It has the expense of maintenance. It has the expense of the propagation of the fish, and some expense of transportation, which, by the way, is not the main expense. Of course, the cost of transportation is considerable. It does not vary so very much, whether the shipment is for 50 miles or 150 miles. But the great cost of maintenance is the cost that bears down on the Government Treasury. With 41 or 42 fish hatcheries now in the United States, what is the need of creating new fish hatcheries almost side by side with those which now exist?

It is not a matter of transportation. That is not the reason. There might be a reason for creating new fish hatcheries in some of the new or Western States where there is no fish hatchery within a long distance. We recently provided one in Wyoming. We also provided one recently in South Carolina. We provided one recently in Louisville, on the Ohio River. It may be that there ought to be more. In some of the States they have their own fish hatcheries. Some of the States are more apt to beg of Congress than others. Possibly it is because they have Representatives on the committee to whose attention the matter is drawn. Some of the States provide their own fish hatcheries.

There may be a good reason for the National Government providing a fish hatchery on the sea, where the State may perhaps have no control of the fish in the water. But where streams are confined practically or wholly within the limits of a State, why should the National Government provide a fish hatchery? Why should not the States do something? Some of the States do. But if we are to provide additional service for the fish hatcheries at all, we ought to provide it in a sensible way, with economy in view. There is no economy in view in this bill. There is no economy in view in the Bureau of Fisheries; though doubtless if they were given $900,000 to expend on fish hatcheries, they could provide much better than they will provide under this bill. If they were given half a million dollars to expend on fish hatcheries, they could provide better than they will under the terms of this bill; or, if they were permitted to enlarge certain fish hatcheries which they now have, without much increase of expense, they would furnish better service than they will furnish under the terms of this bill.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. The statement has been made by the gentleman from Illinois and by several others that many of these fish hatcheries are proposed to be located in States represented by gentlemen on the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries. Is it not also fair to state that doubtless the membership of this committee is composed of men who come from States that naturally ought to have fish hatcheries in them, States that are interested in the subject, and that that is one reason why they are on the committee?

Mr. MANN. I think the question of the construction or maintenance of fish hatcheries has never received any consideration from anybody in the appointment of the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

Mr. MEEKER. Will the gentleman from Illinois yield?

Mr. MANN. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. MEEKER. I note here, for instance, that Alabama, Louisiana, and Florida each will have a hatchery. Could not one hatchery be located to serve those three States, without putting one in each State? Would it not be possible to propagate in one hatchery all the different kinds of fish that are needed in that part of the country? And is not the same true of Arizona, New Mexico, and so on?

Mr. MANN. Oh, I should think it would be quite possible to establish one fish hatchery that would take care of half a dozen States instead of three. I do not believe we ought to adopt the policy of starting omnibus bills just now, simply because the election is over. Pork barrels are what they are! They are not economical! It is not an economical method of government!

I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, with the permission of the gentleman from Illinois I wish to say only a few words.

Mr. MANN. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. As I indicated awhile ago, I do not question the merits of either of the items in the pending bill, but I do seriously question the urgency of this measure. I can readily understand that where it is proposed to make an appropriation or an authorization to meet an emergency, or to pass a bill of such wide importance and of such great benefits as to make its passage necessary and urgent, that is something to which we should give consideration. I can understand how the House at this time could afford to make appropriations for purposes of that character. But for a measure of this nature, carrying with it no urgency and no unusual importance—because there is only a very remote connection between this bill and the reduction of the high cost of living—I can see no necessity to tax the Treasury with appropriations of this character at this time. It is plainly evident that there are enough bills already pending which carry appropriations of equal importance and urgency with this, to make a new tax levy absolutely necessary.

Now, if gentlemen of the House are ready and willing to vote additional taxes to meet this class of appropriations, and therefore desire to establish at the beginning of this session the policy of making this character of authorizations, that is another question; but I do wish to emphasize before the House the fact that the Congress has been obliged heretofore, and will be obliged a little later on, to make a number of very large appropriations and authorizations to meet real emergencies and exigencies, and unless we expect to levy additional taxes, we will be unable at this time to take care of all that class of appropriations or authorizations which come within the category to which the pending bill belongs.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Will the gentleman yield for an inquiry?

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. The gentleman believes in making a very substantial appropriation to prevent the spread of the foot-and-mouth disease, does he not?

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. I prefer not to be diverted from this subject.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. The gentleman believes in making a substantial appropriation to fight the boll weevil, does he not?

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. Will the gentleman confine himself to this bill?

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. The fish supply of the country is relatively just as important as the hog supply and the cattle supply, and if something is necessary to be done for the fish supply ought we not to do it?

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. I do not desire to be diverted from the matter before the House. Those other matters will be up a little later, and then I shall be glad to discuss them with the gentleman.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. This matter is up now.

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. We will discuss them as we come to them.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I desire to ask the gentleman if the parity of reasoning would not require him to favor assistance to the fish industry, if that assistance is needed?

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. I have stated to the gentleman, and to the House, that I did not question the merits of any of these items.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. May I ask the gentleman another question?

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Can the gentleman advise us as to whether the total value of the fishing industry during the year just passed was greater or less than it was five years ago? In other words, is the fishing industry of the United States increasing or decreasing?

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. I do not know what the fact is about that.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I do not, either. I am asking for information. I was hoping some gentleman would tell us. My impression is that it is actually on the decline throughout the United States.

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. I am not familiar with that.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. If that is true, I should think that we need to do something to increase the fish supply, and there is no way in which we can do it better than by establishing fish-cultural stations and hatcheries to increase the quantity of fish in the waters of the country.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Illinois yield to me two or three minutes?

Mr. MANN. I will yield to the gentleman five minutes.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, it strikes me that this is a very inopportune time to pass a bill of this kind. I have heard on this floor bills characterized as pork-barrel bills for river and harbor improvement; I have heard public-building bills characterized as pork-barrel bills; but this is the first time in all of my 10 years' service in this House that I have seen a pork-barrel fish bill come on the floor. This bill directly and indirectly takes care of 24 States of the Union; at any rate, it gives 24 States of the Union a fighting chance to get a fish hatchery or a fish-cultural station. It makes an appropriation or authorization of $840,000. Everyone knows that this is but a beginning. When it leaves the Senate it will come back here with $840,000 more added to it.

I have listened very attentively to the gentleman from Missouri in regard to the bill, a gentleman for whom I have the profoundest regard and the greatest respect, and it struck me that the gentleman's presentation of his own bill was not very enthusiastic. I quite agree with him in his failure to be enthusiastic in the support of his own bill.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. Yes.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Let me say to the gentleman that there are eight Senate bills incorporated in this bill, and that those bills have already passed the Senate. So that we wanted to obviate the possibility of its being loaded down in the Senate.

Mr. COX. But under the rules of the Senate they will be entitled to amend it.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Undoubtedly.

Mr. COX. And that is what they will do. The estimates at this session call for $1,680,000,000 appropriation. The query with me and the query with us on this side of the House who are to be held responsible for this sum of money is, Where is that money coming from? Who is going to pay the bills?

We have got to devise some new system of taxation unles we begin somewhere to lop off appropriations. I have listened attentively for some sound argument, some logical reason, for some man interested in this bill to give to this House a reason why it should pass. One man bottoms the necessity of the bill upon the ground of the high cost of living, and yet it is conceded that it will be a year before a single fish hatchery is in operation, and it will be from three to five years before any of the fish are large enough to be fit for consumption.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. Yes.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Is it not a fact that the gentleman from Indiana is in favor of reducing as far as possible the cost of living in this country, and does he know of any better means of reducing the high cost of living than to increase the supply of food fish?

Mr. COX. Yes; I know of a hundred better ways. One way is to stop people from going to the cities and towns and let them go out and raise corn and wheat and cattle and things to sustain life.

Mr. HULBERT. Does not the gentleman from Indiana regard one of the elements that has added to the increased cost of living the failure of Congress years ago to do then what we are seeking to do now by legislation?

Mr. COX. No; I do not. We are everlastingly coming to Congress and piling burdens on Congress and asking Congress to do what the States ought to do. I have heard no proposition on the floor this morning, and I doubt if any will come, that the States pay any part of these expenditures. The bill ought not to pass, it ought to be defeated. [Applause.]

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BLACKMON].

Mr. BLACKMON. Mr. Chairman, I am not much of an alarmist. I can not agree that this bill is going to revolutionize the whole system of raising revenue. I do agree with the suggestion that this is a splendid step toward reducing the high cost of living, but the statement of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Cox] that we will not have any fish furnished by these hatcheries large enough to eat for a year or more does not appeal to me very strongly. If we do not start now or have some beginning point, we will never reap the benefits of this much-needed legislation. It does seem to me that the gentlemen here who oppose the bill and who undertake to defeat it, do so simply because they have no fish hatchery provided for in their States. I will be frank and say that I have a hatchery in this measure for my State, but I would not oppose it if I did not have one. Now, I know, and we all know, that where you are forced to send fish a long distance a great many die and that the transportation charges are tremendous. The fish commissioner knows more about the needs of this bill than do the gentlemen who are opposing it. They have not the facilities for knowing. All they know is what my friend from Indiana [Mr. Cox] knows—that it is going to cost a few dollars to do it, and that the States have not gone fifty-fifty with the Federal Government. That is all the objection he has to it. So I hope that in the interest of stocking the streams throughout this whole country you will vote for the bill. It ought to pass. It is meritorious, and it has been considered by those who know for years and years; and I would rather have the opinion of the fish commissioner than that of all of the guardians of the Treasury and the prophets in this whole Congress. [Applause.]

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER].

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I am heartily in favor of this bill with an amendment. Of course, the bill in the main provides for proper fish-cultural stations and fish hatcheries irrespective of whether the amendment goes on or not, and I am satisfied that the House will permit it to go on. It is cheaper in the long run to have fish stations, and better results are obtained than to have fish stations that are far apart, with the extra cost in transportation and the handling of fish and the number that die. I want to call the attention of the House particularly to the bill H. R. 11245, which is the same as the general bill, only it reports out a substation on the Klamath River in northern California in the sum of $15,000. The matter was taken up with the Bureau of Fisheries, and that bureau reported favorably upon it. In addition to California alone being interested in this, the States of Oregon and Washington are as vitally interested in the situation in northern California as California itself is. The station is on the Klamath River, near Hornbrook, in Siskiyou County, at the headwaters of the Klamath. The trout come from the ocean there and spawn in the upper reaches of the Klamath River and return then to the mouth of the Klamath and then into the ocean, and many of those go on into the northern streams. Men in Seattle and in other places who have given this subject attention say that it is one of the most valuable breeding grounds of the salmon in the United States to-day. It is not a local matter; it is not for any particular place in the State of California. We have a splendid fish hatchery south of this about 100 miles, maintained by the State, known as the Sisson fish hatchery, where millions of eggs and fry and fingerlings are distributed over the State. South of that about 70 miles is the Beard fish hatchery, maintained by the Government, on the upper waters of the Sacramento, from which millions of eggs and fry are distributed by the Government.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. So that the gentleman is willing to come before the House with the statement of the necessity for a new fish hatchery where there are two within 170 miles of the one proposed?

Mr. RAKER. The gentleman does not understand the topography of the country. There are large mountains between, and it is not a question of the mere fact of establishing hatcheries, but it is a question of where you can expend $15,000 and get $100,000 in return for the expenditure of that money, and that is what we want. Further, in the southern part of the State I had the pleasure of going over the ground this fall and seeing the work being done, where the State is establishing another large hatchery at the foot of Mount Whitney, in Inyo County. This particular one referred to upon the Klamath River has been reported favorably by the Bureau of Fisheries, and they say it is very necessary, and that it will enable them to have a substation there at a cost of $15,000 where millions of the fry may be propagated and returned to the river. See what it means—no hauling or handling or transporting—but the expenditure of that amount of money means ten or twenty or thirty fold increase in the amount expended, for you can hatch them or take care of them at the upper waters of the stream, turn them into the river where the young ones may go back, and then into the ocean, and afterwards come back into this river the next year following, and on north. It is one of the most valuable fish in the West.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. RAKER. I will ask the gentleman from Illinois to yield me one minute more.

Mr. MANN. I yield the gentleman one minute more.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. Yes.

Mr. GORDON. How many fish hatcheries does the State of California maintain out there on the coast?

Mr. RAKER. It maintains three, I think, altogether.

Mr. GORDON. How many does the Federal Government maintain?

Mr. RAKER. We have a fish hatchery at Beard, in Shasta County, and then there is a subhatchery, where they catch the fish and send them and breed and handle them at Battle Creek, and also one at Mill Creek; but this particular stream is known as the Klamath River, that flows into the Pacific Ocean, where these chinook salmon go up that stream and spawn, and because of the various conditions the spawn are lost, and if they established a branch hatchery right upon the banks of the river it would be the best investment the Government could make, because there they may take the fish out of the river, attend to the spawn, and rear them and take care of them and turn them back.

Mr. GORDON. How does it come that that investment never appealed to the State of California?

Mr. RAKER. Oh, well, the State of California is handling the rainbow trout, and many others, to put into the various streams. She is doing her part. This is the salmon that comes from the ocean, where it may go back to the ocean and repropagate and go through the other streams.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has again expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. HULBERT].

Mr. HULBERT. Mr. Chairman, when the chairman of the committee was in control of the time I rose several times for the purpose of submitting what I thought was a very proper and pertinent question, with a view to securing some necessary information. Inasmuch as I could not have the satisfaction of getting that information then I take this opportunity now of renewing the request. The bill under consideration was introduced on May 12, 1916. I find that on April 3, 1916, another bill very similar in terminology was introduced by my colleague, Mr. DALE of New York, who was called home this morning. The distinction is that the Dale bill provides for a hatchery in New York on Long Island and, also, for a hatchery in the State of Massachusetts, both of which have been eliminated from the bill subsequently introduced, and now reported by the committee, and in their place there are substituted hatcheries for the States of Michigan, Missouri, Pennsylvania, and Minnesota.

My purpose in rising to interrogate the chairman of the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries was to ascertain why the provision proposed in the Dale bill for a fish hatchery upon Long Island had been eliminated. In that connection I desire to call the attention of the committee to the fact that the State of New York has probably been the most progressive State in the Union in relation to the establishment of fish hatcheries. We had at the end of 1914 ten hatcheries in the State, maintained by the State at a cost of about $75,000 per annum, or half as much again as was proposed in the Dale bill for the hatchery to be located upon Long Island. I find from an examination of the report of the commissioner on fish, game, and forestry of the State of New York that more than a billion fish were let out of the hatcheries in the streams in 1913, and that, gentlemen, is the condition which obtains in the fresh waters of the State of New York.

The end has come for the wild cod and migratory fish in the waters about the port of New York due to the pollution of the streams, which up to this time have not been regulated by Federal action; to the tremendous increase in the manufacturing industries located upon the harbor of New York and its tributaries; and also to the tremendous water-borne commerce of the port of New York, which within the last year has increased more than 100 per cent in local commerce. These waters are the most extensive and the most bountiful feeding grounds for marine life in the United States. The food is there; the rocky, spongy, mussel-breeding bottoms are there; their home is there, but the inhabitants have been driven off. On Long Island, where formerly a few wild ducks lived, now they raise hundreds of thousands by cultivation in order to supply the metropolitan market; and so through cultivation New York and its adjacent waters could furnish many more fish than they originally did when they were able to supply all of the surrounding markets. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Cox] has denied that this question can have any material effect upon the reduction of the high cost of living, because, as he contends, the money that might be appropriated in this bill and expended thereunder for the establishment of these hatcheries would not be productive of results for a period of from three to five years from this time. But you will recall the question which I submitted to him and to which I do not feel I obtained any satisfactory answer. I believe the condition complained of now is largely due to the fact that Congress has not in the past looked at the situation which we are confronted with now and taken action with respect to it; and if the condition which we undertake to remedy at this time had been taken care of three or four or five years ago, we would not now be confronted with this condition at the present time. [Applause.]

But New York is a State of great wealth, and having blazed the way and demonstrated the success of State hatcheries and the benefits thereof the balance of the country will be provided with them at Federal expense, and New York, the great revenue producer, will contribute the largest share of the expense.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. MEEKER].

Mr. MEEKER. Mr. Chairman, it is exceedingly regrettable that this bill was not up before November, for this would have been a very profound line of argument as to the cause of the high cost of living. I fancy that the administration will discover what the cause is about as soon as we get this appropriation through and get the hatcheries, as far as that is concerned. The thing I wanted to know from the chairman of the committee was whether we are legislating for separate States or for sections, and if so, why it is necessary for a hatchery in northwestern Texas and in Oklahoma?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Does the gentleman want me to answer that question?

Mr. MEEKER. I would like to have an answer.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The place where this was desired to be located was at Canon City, near the head of the Red River, because there is not a fish hatchery within 500 miles of that place which would cover the eastern part of New Mexico. The fish escaping from the dam there could reach the Mississippi River after passing through five States, and it would be a great benefit to the people of all that vast section of country at the head of the Red River Valley.

Mr. MEEKER. Then it is understood that this point was fixed before this appropriation was made?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I say there is a demand there. You can not find in the United States where there is a greater demand for a fish hatchery than at the head of the Red River.

Mr. MEEKER. Well, that is located. Now, what in regard to Oklahoma?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Oklahoma has nothing in the bill, as I understand it.

Mr. MEEKER. Read the bill.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. What part?

Mr. MEEKER. I am asking the gentleman about that.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I am concerned only with the bill which I introduced myself.

Mr. MEEKER. I see.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. And which had a favorable report from the Fish Department.

Mr. MEEKER. Having obtained such a frank statement as to why it has been agreed this fish hatchery should be established——

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Chairman, I do not think it is understood that the gentleman from Texas has fixed the location in reference to the location of this hatchery or that it has been agreed upon between him and the department.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. No; my bill requested the department for a report upon the bill, and they reported it favorably.

Mr. ALEXANDER. As far as its location in this territory is concerned——

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I think it ought to be located at Canon City, at the head of the Red River——

Mr. ALEXANDER. The bill does not designate.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It designates northwestern Texas; but this is tributary to the whole northwestern section of Texas.

Mr. MEEKER. Will the gentleman kindly answer, if he can, why these two hatcheries are necessary in practically the same territory?

Mr. ALEXANDER. They are not in the same territory. If the gentleman knows anything about the State of Texas, he knows that it is a thousand miles across it.

Mr. MEEKER. It is in northwestern Texas.

Mr. ALEXANDER. The Panhandle of Texas is an immense territory itself and a good way from where the hatchery may be located in Oklahoma.

Mr. MEEKER. The gentleman from Texas has an idea as to where this will be located in Texas?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Very naturally.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It will be on the waters of the Red River, and will thereby benefit the whole country there.

Mr. MEEKER. How are the three States of Alabama, Louisiana, and Florida served now?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Florida has a biological laboratory at Key West.

Mr. MEEKER. What is so peculiarly different between the fish life of Louisiana and Alabama that they could not live in the same hatcheries?

Mr. ALEXANDER. They have no fish hatchery in the State of Florida. They have no fish hatchery in the State of Alabama. What other States did the gentleman inquire about?

Mr. MEEKER. Louisiana and Alabama and Florida are the ones about which I inquired.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I say there is none in Alabama, according to this map, and there is none in the State of Louisiana. Somewhere along the coast, between those two States, the department asked to locate one of these hatcheries.

Mr. MEEKER. Each of these States has a specific sum. Can not those two States be served with one?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I do not know. I am taking my information from the department.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the following sums, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and the same are hereby, authorized to be appropriated for the establishment of fish-hatching and fish-cultural stations in the States hereafter named at suitable points indicated hereafter, to be selected in the discretion of the Secretary of Commerce, including purchase of sites, construction of buildings, and equipment.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MANN. This bill contains one section and a large number of additional paragraphs. Will it be read for amendment by paragraph or as one section?

The CHAIRMAN. The usual custom is to read the bill by paragraphs for amendment.

Mr. MANN. I just asked that before we commence.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I understand that is true of an appropriation bill, but it is not true of a general bill of the character of this one. There is only one section in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The custom is that where a bill is divided into paragraphs to read it by paragraphs. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

State of Alabama, $50,000.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 3, at the end of the line, insert: "State of California, on the Klamath River, $15,000."

Mr. RAKER. Now, Mr. Chairman, I just want to say a word in addition to what I have already said. This amendment is in accordance with H. R. 11245, which was reported to the House under Report No. 1045. The bill had been introduced, but was overlooked in some way by the committee. After looking over the matter, I thought it was disposed of with the rest. I appeared before the subcommittee with the memoranda and data, and the subcommittee reported favorably, and the matter was then submitted to the full committee, when that committee reported the bill H. R. 11245, which contained a report from the Bureau of Fisheries. And among other things they state as follows:

When the bill was first introduced it was the opinion of the bureau that what was contemplated was the establishment of a station entirely independent of and apart from the Baird station, but since the receipt of further information showing that the appropriation of $15,000 is being sought for the construction of an auxiliary to the Baird station the bureau has been fully in accord with the plan formulated, as the work it has conducted during the past few years in this field has demonstrated beyond a doubt its great fish-cultural possibilities. The bureau will therefore be pleased to indorse a bill of this character either at this or the next session of Congress.

Until such time as a special appropriation is provided for an auxiliary station near Hornbrook the policy of the bureau will be to provide adequate facilities, so far as possible, for development in the immediate vicinity of the eggs and fry resulting from the Klamath River collections, liberating the young fish in that river direct, under the supervision of a proper official of the bureau.

Mr. BORLAND. I would like to ask the gentleman from California why he attempted in his amendment to designate the place where it is to be located, in view of the fact that the purpose of the bill is to give to the department the best possible facilities in locating these stations?

Mr. RAKER. This bill (H. R. 11245) says it is to be located on the Klamath River. That river is in Oregon and in California, and the purpose is to let them put it on the Klamath River wherever they please, a substation to be located right where they take the fish that come from the Pacific Ocean out of the Klamath River, and then they can return them after they have been properly cultivated.

Mr. BORLAND. As I understand, there are now two fish hatcheries on the Sacramento River?

Mr. RAKER. I do not know.

Mr. BORLAND. There is one fish hatchery with a branch? Is not that true?

Mr. RAKER. There is only one fish hatchery, and that is at Baird, which is at the headwaters of the Sacramento.

Mr. BORLAND. The fact is this, that the Baird hatchery is a substation of an older hatchery.

Mr. RAKER. No; the Baird hatchery is an independent station established by the Government.

Mr. BORLAND. There are two divisions there of one hatchery on the Sacramento River?

Mr. RAKER. At Battle Creek and Mill Creek, on the Sacramento River, they simply have stations without any buildings or anything, where they go and take the fish out, and then send them up to Baird or to other hatcheries for proper development.

Mr. BORLAND. Would it not be a whole lot better to leave this amendment, like the others, to the discretion of the department?

Mr. RAKER. I have no objection, only the department said they wanted it located on the Klamath River. That is the very purpose of it. It is cheaper. There is no transportation to it.

Now, I just want to say this to the House, in addition to what I said a moment ago, when some of the Members were not here: This fish hatchery is particularly advantageous to the Government to cover the fish coming from the Pacific Ocean up the Klamath River. Just above where the hatchery will be are the falls. Of course, many of the large fish whip themselves to death before they get there, and we do not get the benefit of them. The officials of the various fish institutions in Washington and Oregon have written to me letters on this matter—I am sorry I have not them before me—in which they say that the Klamath River produces principally the Chinook trout, which is one of the most valuable fishes yet in existence, and it is very necessary to propagate this species of fish.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I want two minutes longer, by unanimous consent.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes longer. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAKER. So that we may get the benefit of it. The buildings will be modest and up to date, and it requires little work of that kind. It is only to put up the places to provide for the fish, so that they may be handled.

The State of California itself this year is putting up a plant at the base of Mount Whitney at a cost of $175,000, a magnificent plant, and one of the most elaborate stations in the United States. They already have one at Sisson, erected with a large expenditure. That is principally for the mountain trout, so that we may stock the mountain streams with the mountain trout and provide food for the people.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from California yield to the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. RAKER. I yield for a question.

Mr. BORLAND. I notice on this map there is an auxiliary station at Hornbrook, on the Klamath River.

Mr. RAKER. Yes. That is the one I am talking about. They take the fish and transport them to the other hatcheries. But by putting the new station there they can maintain it and handle it with the appropriation and maintain the station for the purpose of properly propagating this most valuable fish.

Mr. BORLAND. Is the gentleman providing for an additional hatchery or providing for the enlargement of this one?

Mr. RAKER. It is the same one.

Mr. BORLAND. What facilities have they there now?

Mr. RAKER. Simply a few little buildings, where they go and catch the fish. But they have to transport them at large expense, with a great loss of fish.

Mr. BORLAND. When they transport them they transport them to Baird?

Mr. RAKER. Yes; but you must remember that is off the railroad.

Mr. BORLAND. And according to this map that is about 100 miles away.

Mr. RAKER. Yes; something like that.

Mr. BORLAND. That is pretty close for a fish hatchery.

Mr. RAKER. My dear friend from Missouri can not recognize the fact that there are mountains in that country, with a rise of 5,000 feet in 20 miles, and others with a rise of 7,000 feet. These streams are on different mountain spurs running from the Sierra Mountains west.

Mr. BORLAND. Do you have to have one every 100 miles in order to cover them?

Mr. RAKER. The streams are there. Why not provide for a fish supply by propagating them?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has again expired.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. GARRETT. I think the committee has heard this matter discussed until probably it is ready to vote on the direct issue of the passage of the bill. I think there ought to be a test of the matter now. I therefore withdraw the pro forma amendment and move to strike out the enacting clause.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee moves to strike out the enacting clause. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. GARRETT. I ask for a division, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. A division is demanded.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 47, noes 70.

So the motion was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, a point of order. Is not an amendment pending?

Mr. SLOAN. I have an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SLOAN] is recognized on the amendment.

Mr. SLOAN. I would like to have my amendment read.

Mr. RUSSELL of Missouri. There is an amendment pending now.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood the gentleman from Nebraska was rising to discuss the amendment offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER].

Mr. SLOAN. The Chair announced that the Clerk would read.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the "noes" seemed to have it.

Mr. RAKER. A division, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. A division is demanded.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 44, noes 33.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment at the desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nebraska offers the following amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SLOAN: Page 2, after line 3, insert: "The State of Nebraska, $50,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Chairman, this bill is drawn favoring 18 new fish hatcheries. I understand there are already established at different points throughout the United States 41 hatcheries. The apparent purpose of this bill is to distribute the fish hatcheries, rather than to increase the efficiency of the hatcheries already established. The question of transportation seems to have been the important consideration in drafting this bill.

Now, if that is true and the bill is passed, it ought to be passed in such a form as to carry out the important proposition involved in the bill. That is the distribution of the hatcheries for the purpose of meeting the factor of transportation. I call the attention of gentlemen of the committee to the fact that in the States of Nebraska and Kansas, which involve over 5 per cent of the area of this country, there is no national hatchery. There are numerous streams in both these States, and, taking into consideration the question of transportation, it seems to me that we are entitled to an amendment to this bill taking in that part of the continent.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SLOAN. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Has the gentleman introduced a bill providing for the establishment of a station in Nebraska, and has it been considered by the Bureau of Fisheries and reported favorably by the committee?

Mr. SLOAN. I have not introduced a bill, but I assume that the members of this committee have studied the geography of this country; and when I say the members of this committee, I include the gentleman from Duluth.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I beg the gentleman's pardon. I am not a member of the committee.

Mr. SLOAN. And having looked at the map of the United States, the gentleman will discover that there is a large section of the United States unprovided for, and I insist that if this is merely a matter of distribution, which it apparently is, that section of the United States should be given a hatchery. [Applause.]

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Chairman, the amendment just agreed to embodies the provisions of a bill favorably reported from the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries, which bill is on the calendar, providing for an appropriation of $15,000 for an auxiliary hatchery. The Commissioner of Fisheries informed me that that hatchery would only operate a part of the year, and would not require anything more than the transfer of a few men to that point to conduct the hatchery during that period. For that reason I voted for that amendment, because we had reported the bill, after the general bill was reported to the House.

Now the gentleman from Nebraska is offering an amendment to establish a fish hatchery in the State of Nebraska. No bill has been introduced for the establishment of a fish-cultural station or a fish hatchery in the State of Nebraska. It has not been considered by the committee, of course, nor by the department; and I sincerely hope that the friends of this legislation will vote down such an amendment as this. It may be that Nebraska has a meritorious case, but the Members from Nebraska should take enough interest in the subject to introduce a bill or bills, and let them go to the committee and to the department to be considered.

Mr. SLOAN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Yes.

Mr. SLOAN. Has not the gentleman stated in the hearing of this House that the whole country was considered? And is it necessary, parliamentarily or otherwise, in the consideration of an omnibus bill that there shall have been a special bill introduced, in order to receive the attention of this committee?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I do not think "the gentleman" made any such statement. The gentleman said that all bills introduced were referred to the department, with requests that such of them as they regarded of prime importance should be considered and reported back to the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SLOAN].

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. SLOAN) there were—ayes 46, noes 55.

Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LENROOT: Page 2, after line 3, insert: "State of Wisconsin, $50,000."

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, this amendment provides for the establishment of one of these stations in the State of Wisconsin. There have been some intimations that this is a pork-barrel bill. I do not know whether it is or not, but I propose to have a test of that question upon the vote upon this amendment.

Mr. GORDON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LENROOT. Yes.

Mr. GORDON. Will you vote for the bill if your amendment is adopted?

Mr. LENROOT. I will reach that later. I propose to have a test of that question upon this proposition: The State of Wisconsin is bounded upon the north by Lake Superior, upon the east by Lake Michigan, and upon the west by the Mississippi River. It has in its interior thousands of lakes and innumerable streams. It once had more fish within its lakes and streams than any other State in the Union. Its waters have been depleted because Wisconsin has become the Mecca of the sportsmen of the country. The State of Wisconsin has already provided nine of these stations at its own expense. It has not one Federal station. Yet those nine stations are not able to supply one-fourth of the demand for fish fry and fingerlings. The chairman of the committee [Mr. ALEXANDER] indicated a moment ago that if a bill was not introduced for a station within a State, that State had no right to consideration upon this question. Mr. Chairman, if that is so, then this is a "pork-barrel" bill and nothing else, because if the interest of the country is considered and the culture of fish is considered, the committee will not, either in this instance or any other, base its action upon the question whether some Member has introduced a bill or not. So, Mr. Chairman, if there is a single State in the Union that is entitled to a Federal fish-cultural station it is the State of Wisconsin, and I have a right to ask the chairman of this committee to explain why, if this is not a "pork-barrel" bill, the State of Wisconsin was not included and to give some reason other than the reason that he gave a moment ago, because, Mr. Chairman, if measures of this kind are to depend upon the insistence with which Members ask for them, the sooner we know it the better, and the sooner the country knows it the sooner it will condemn "pork barrels" of this character. [Applause.]

Mr. SAUNDERS. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call the attention of the committee to the fact that the chairman of the subcommittee that investigated this matter, and conducted all the inquiries, came from the State of Wisconsin. If this was a pork-barrel proposition, Wisconsin would have been included in this bill. I repeat that the chairman of that subcommittee came from the same State as the gentleman who has just spoken [Mr. LENROOT], but after investigating the merits of the whole situation it is manifest that he must have become thoroughly satisfied that the needs of Wisconsin were not urgent, since he failed to include that State in the bill reported.

Mr. LENROOT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAUNDERS. Certainly.

Mr. LENROOT. Did the chairman of the subcommittee make any statement to the committee with reference to the State of Wisconsin?

Mr. SAUNDERS. He was there to look after Wisconsin, as well as the other States.

Mr. LENROOT. Did he make any statement of the kind which the gentleman's remark would infer?

Mr. SAUNDERS. I do not know what kind of a statement he made before the subcommittee.

Mr. LENROOT. Then the gentleman ought not to make that statement.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I do not understand the gentleman. I am merely calling attention to the fact that the chairman of the subcommittee came from the gentleman's State, and that presumably he was as anxious to advance the interests of the State of Wisconsin, as the gentleman who has just spoken [Mr. LENROOT]. But the fact remains that with the whole situation before him, and after examination of all the measures under consideration the chairman of the subcommittee reported a measure which did not include the State of Wisconsin, though he was immediately concerned with the welfare of that State. Hence I repeat my statement that if this had been a pork-barrel bill, Chairman BURKE would have had something for Wisconsin included in his report.

Mr. LENROOT. Is it not a fact that the subcommittee only considered bills where Members had introduced bills from the States and had recommendations from the department, and that the committee did not consider the needs of the country?

Mr. SAUNDERS. That is not the fact. I will state that it was ascertained by inquiry that Wisconsin was so situated, with reference to certain fish hatcheries conveniently located in other States that its wants were reasonably supplied from these hatcheries. There are several stations and substations near the border line of that State.

Mr. MANN. I would like to inquire of the gentleman where those stations are. There is none in Illinois, none in Iowa convenient to Wisconsin, and not any in Lake Superior or Lake Michigan. There is one at Duluth, Minn., but it is a long way from furnishing what Wisconsin requires. The gentleman's information as to what the subcommittee had before it is erroneous.

Mr. SAUNDERS. That matter was considered. There is a station at Duluth.

Mr. MANN. That is the only one.

Mr. SAUNDERS. The gentleman is mistaken. There is one at a place called Homer, an auxiliary station at La Crosse, and another one at North McGregor, and another one at Bellevue, south of the Wisconsin line.

Mr. MANN. The subcommittee did not know what a fish-hatchery station was.

Mr. SAUNDERS. The subcommittee was very well advised in that respect. The conditions in Wisconsin are not like the conditions in California, where high mountain ranges intervene between stations. Hence Wisconsin can be adequately served from stations in contiguous States and there is no immediate urgent necessity for a new station in that State.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, it is very peculiar that it is said that the station at Duluth is able to supply the fish fry needed for Wisconsin, but that Minnesota must have a new station. [Laughter.] That is logic for you clear down. Here is Wisconsin that has no station that can supply it on the east, no station on the south, no station on the west, no station for the extreme point on the north. Minnesota has one that can supply them, and yet Minnesota needs an additional one. [Laughter.]

Mr. SAUNDERS. I wish to repeat that there are three fish-hatchery stations immediately contiguous to Wisconsin and three auxiliary fish hatcheries.

Mr. LENROOT. What are those three.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I have stated already. One at Duluth, one at Homer, one at Manchester, and three auxiliary fish hatcheries, one at La Crosse, one at North McGregor and one at Bellevue.

Mr. MANN. Those are not fish hatcheries.

Mr. SAUNDERS. They are auxiliary fish hatcheries operated in connection with the main hatcheries.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I wish to oppose the amendment. I hesitate to differ with the gentleman from Illinois on questions of this kind, but very often these questions are determined by whose ox is gored. Illinois has a provision in this bill for a $50,000 hatchery. My distinguished and venerable colleague from Illinois, the former Speaker of the House, is opposed to the bill, and the other gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is also, on the ground that it is a pork-barrel bill. In another place, at about this hour, there is a discussion going on in consequence of false information to the people of this country as to the alleged pork-barrel methods in the distribution of river and harbor appropriations, and those interested in the development of this country through the rivers and harbors are invited now to the Hotel Willard to express themselves whether or not the appropriations made by this Congress are falsely and wrongfully made, so that believers in the "pork barrel" have their inning now.

An appropriation is provided for in this bill of $50,000 for a hatchery somewhere along the Delaware River. In that I am interested. I think that a worthy project. Opposition comes up from other sections of the country to such appropriations, however, and most of it seems to come from those who have very small rivers in their States or no rivers at all. They want no appropriations made, unless they can be included in what they call the "pork-barrel" bill. I have said before, and I say again, that what seems to be "pork" in the minds of most people, is that which the other fellow gets and not what you get for yourself. [Laughter.]

Now, my distinguished friend from Illinois, Mr. CANNON, opposes this measure on the ground that it is a pork-barrel bill, and in the same breath indicates that if you can propagate fish in the mudpuddles behind the levees of the Mississippi, you ought to destroy all the fish hatcheries along the Atlantic seaboard and Great Lakes and raise all the fish along the banks of the Mississippi, because it would be easier to distribute them to all the small points of the United States from the region of the Mississippi. That is a home viewpoint for you. Is it not strange how we see these things from our own viewpoint, and is it not strange how, when we are not included in the bill, we want to oppose what some one else is trying to do? [Applause.]

We are now up against the question of the food supply for the people of this country, and the cheapest food we have had during the whole period of the high cost of living has been the food that we have acquired from the fish supply of the country. Some day that will run scarce out yonder along the Lakes and upon the Pacific coast, as it is running scarce now along the Atlantic seaboard. There is no earthly reason in justice or in common sense why we should abolish such existing hatcheries as we now have along the great water lines, except, perchance, that the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SLOAN] can not get in the bill the same provision for a fish hatchery upon the plains of Nebraska that we want for a fish hatchery along the shores of the Delaware River. [Applause.] I was amazed to find that while it is easy always to inveigh against great States like New York and Pennsylvania, which maintain fish hatcheries on their own account paid for by the people of those States—not a single dollar has been expended upon them by the Government of the United States, certainly not in Pennsylvania, for fish hatcheries within the boundaries of those States—out yonder the State of Iowa, due to the shrewd, careful, attentive representation of its Members of Congress, has already secured appropriations for two Government hatcheries within the confines of the State. It seems to me the cry of "pork barrel" in this instance is very far-fetched, and is unfairly applied. [Applause.]

Mr. BROWNE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I desire to say a word in regard to the location of a fish hatchery by the United States Government within the State of Wisconsin. My friend from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS] mentioned the fact that Wisconsin was already provided for. The hatcheries to which he referred are simply auxiliary hatcheries, and auxiliary hatcheries, as I understand it, do not distribute fish but simply send fish out to some other hatchery, and that other hatchery distributes the fish. There is not any national hatchery in the State of Wisconsin. We have nine State hatcheries. Let us take, for instance, the matter of whitefish alone.

The whitefish would have at this time become extinct if it had not been for the State of Wisconsin and its fish hatcheries. The State alone has expended hundreds of thousands of dollars in propagating whitefish. We put them into the Great Lakes at Superior and Ashland, and the fishermen at those points were skeptical at first as to the State stocking great bodies of water like the Great Lakes; but the whitefish that the State of Wisconsin planted in the Great Lakes at that time were of a different kind, the kind of whitefish known as the blue-fin whitefish, and to-day almost the only whitefish they are catching in the Great Lakes are the blue-fin whitefish. The State of Wisconsin has, I think, been the only State to propagate and plant whitefish, and, as I have said, if it had not been for the work of our State hatchery the whitefish, the best fish that swims, would have become extinct. I think that a State that is doing a great work like that and is unable to meet the demand that great bodies of water that touch the several different States like the Great Lakes make, together with the great Mississippi River on one side, ought to receive some consideration at the hands of the Government of the United States. In the Mississippi River millions and millions of bass fry go up into the sloughs every year, where they die. The State of Wisconsin alone appropriated thousands of dollars in saving this fry and planting it in the Mississippi River and other streams and lakes. The people of every State that the Mississippi River touches or border on the Great Lakes are directly benefited and as greatly benefited as the people of Wisconsin, who are being taxed to meet the demand that these navigable waters make upon the State fish hatchery. You can erect a hatchery in Wisconsin and propagate your whitefish and your lake trout for the Great Lakes, and you can also get your bass fry right from the Mississippi River without having to propagate it, and can send this fry out to all the States of the Union. We have fine railroad facilities and every natural advantage; we are right in the center of a great population, and I can not see for my part one feasible reason why we are not entitled to a Government hatchery in Wisconsin, unless you say that the chairman of that subcommittee, coming from the southern part of the State, far from Lake Superior, did not introduce a bill providing for a hatchery, and I do not think Wisconsin on any such ground is estopped at this time from presenting its claims; and if you can not answer the claims of Wisconsin for a hatchery you ought to grant at least some encouragement to a State that already is supporting nine State hatcheries, that has remarkable natural advantages for the culture of fish, and is doing wonderful work in the line of propagating and planting fish. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. ALEXANDER) there were—ayes 67, noes 64.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. ALEXANDER and Mr. LENROOT were appointed to act as tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 73, noes 73.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Chairman, it is a fact that there is at the present time a fish hatchery in the State of Tennessee, but it is in the extreme northeast corner of the State. It is on the east side of a large range of mountains, and those mountains lie between that fish hatchery and the remaining portion of Tennessee. When you come to establish hatcheries with a view to having facilities for properly distributing the products thereof this hatchery in Tennessee does not at all supply the demands of that State. It is further true that there is a hatchery in Kentucky which is at the extreme northern end of that State, and a hatchery in Arkansas, at the north middle boundary of that State and across the Mississippi River. When you consider it from that point you will see that middle Tennessee and west Tennessee are much farther removed from the supply of a fish hatchery than most of the States, even, that have none. The Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries in three former Congresses has reported a bill recommending the establishment of this hatchery in Tennessee. The committee of the present Congress reported a bill, leaving out the recommendation for the hatchery in Tennessee; but that fact was called to the attention of the Secretary of Commerce, and his attention was called to the geographical location of the present hatchery and the needs of the other portions of the State, whereupon he wrote a letter to the chairman of the subcommittee, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BURKE], strongly urging the establishment of a hatchery in Tennessee.

Now, this letter written to Mr. BURKE, unfortunately for me, I am not able to produce and present to the House, because it is with Mr. BURKE's papers; and I have asked the secretary of the committee to investigate, and he can not find it in the committee room. We are sure it is there, but at the present moment it is inaccessible. Now, there is no place anywhere that needs a fish hatchery more than Tennessee. The hatchery now located contiguous to Virginia and North Carolina supplies that portion of the country much more readily than it does middle Tennessee or west Tennessee. Now, Members of the House will remember the length of that State. It is a very long State, and this end is some 350 or 400 miles from the other border——

Mr. BLACKMON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOUSTON. I will.

Mr. BLACKMON. Did the gentleman vote to strike out the enacting clause of this bill?

Mr. HOUSTON. I did not. Now, the report of the Fish Commissioner states the fact that the hatcheries in the section of the country contiguous to middle Tennessee and west Tennessee are not sufficient to supply the demands made upon that part of the country. The need is apparent to the country, and the locality for establishing the fish hatchery can not be surpassed in this Union. The cold mountain springs, the cold water that runs out of these springs in middle Tennessee in the fifth district is equal, if not superior, to any in the Union for the purpose of fish culture. [Applause.]

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Chairman, this is another amendment that has not been considered by the committee in this Congress. This morning, in conversing with Dr. Smith, the Commissioner of Fisheries, I called his attention to this particular measure and to the fact, as I understood it, that the Secretary of Commerce had written a lettter to the chairman of the subcommittee, Mr. BURKE, recommending the establishing of this hatchery in Tennessee. The statement of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HOUSTON] is no doubt correct as to the recommendation made by the Secretary of Commerce, but, as I say, this bill was not considered by the subcommittee, nor was it considered by the committee. I assume that the report reached the chairman of the subcommittee after the pending bill had been reported to the House; otherwise it would have received careful consideration.

I do not want the committee to understand we reported to the House bills for all the States of the Union where hatcheries might be established with profit, but we have undertaken to follow the rule of reporting none except those which are regarded as of paramount importance under existing conditions. I assume that later on other hatcheries ought to be established in the States of Tennessee, as in Wisconsin, but if we undertake to meet all these demands in this bill we will not accomplish any part of the purpose, because the bill will fail to become a law. My hope is that this may be a substantial beginning to supply a need that has existed for years past, but which has not been met heretofore. Hence, I think it would be unfortunate at this time if we should load this bill down with amendments, because it would insure the ultimate defeat of the bill, and the friends of this class of legislation should face that proposition. If I were in a State that was not included in this bill, I would rather defer my chance to another Congress than to load this bill down and thereby insure the defeat of the whole project.

Mr. HOUSTON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I will.

Mr. HOUSTON. I desire to ask the gentleman if it was not a fact that this bill was reported favorably by three other Congresses. I believe the gentleman did not mention that fact.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I do not recall the fact.

Mr. HOUSTON. I am corroborated in that statement by my colleague [Mr. PADGETT], that the fact is true.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I would not state as to whether it was true or not. The gentleman's statement may be correct. I would not be understood as questioning its accuracy.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Mr. Chairman, I want to indorse all my colleague [Mr. HOUSTON] has said in reference to the location of the present hatchery in Tennessee and to appeal to this committee to support his amendment. I wish this bill could be opened up so we could all get a fish hatchery. [Applause.] We can not have too many. We have not had such a bill passed through Congress in the last eight years, and the demand for fish is growing all the time and the people are taking the fish out of the rivers faster than the Government fish hatcheries can restock them. I know from personal experience the single fish hatchery in eastern Tennessee is unable to supply the demand for fish in that State alone, not to take into account the neighboring States which need and ought to have fish. Now, we are in the midst of the high cost of living and here is a proposition which looks to the reduction in the cost of living by the restocking of the rivers and creeks and lakes of this country. What are 18 additional fish hatcheries in 48 States of the Union? There are 10 or 15 rivers in the State of Tennessee alone, 6 of them in the district I represent, and I have tried for eight years to have the Government of the United States to properly and adequately restock the rivers and creeks in my district, and I am far behind and I want to catch up, and the way to do it is to secure an additional fish hatchery in Tennessee. The fact that this Tennessee proposition has merit in it is made apparent by the action of the Fish Department of the Government, which indorsed it in a report to Congress, and the committee which submitted the pending bill went on record approving the report of the department by recommending a favorable report on a general bill in the last Congress carrying this Tennessee proposition for an additional hatchery in that State. Now, there is no finer sport in the world than fishing. We want and need cheap fish, and besides it is a fine brain food, and, according to the late election returns, we are badly in need of more brain food in this country. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced the noes seemed to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. AUSTIN), there were—ayes 54, noes 47.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Tellers, Mr. Chairman.

Tellers were ordered.

The committee again divided; and the tellers (Mr. ALEXANDER and Mr. HOUSTON) reported that there were—ayes 44, noes 54.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer the following amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 3, after line 3, insert "State of New York on Long Island, $50,000."

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Chairman, I offer that amendment, which is practically in the same form as the bill introduced by one of my colleagues. The situation of Long Island is peculiar. It is one of the best adapted sections of this country for the propagation of fish.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield at that point?

Mr. HICKS. I will gladly yield.

Mr. GORDON. Your colleague, the gentleman from New York [Mr. HULBERT], just stated that the water was so foul in that vicinity it had driven all the fish away.

Mr. HICKS. Not on the eastern end of Long Island.

Mr. GORDON. I so understood.

Mr. HICKS. That is in the harbor of New York, but this hatchery would be established on the eastern end of Long Island, or at least out of reach of the contaminated waters of New York City.

I want to say to my friend from Ohio that this hatchery will not be located anywhere near Cleveland.

Mr. Chairman, the location of the hatchery on Long Island would be especially appropriate. We have 250 miles of salt water inland—sounds and bays. We have the greatest shellfish industry in this whole country. The Blue Point, the Rockaway, and Peconic oysters are famous. Then we have the little-neck clam and scallops. We have the waters there that are especially well adapted not only to shellfish but to all varieties of other fish.

I remember as a boy that my father was in the habit of sending down to the bay near where I was born and obtaining scallops, which were shoveled up by the bushel to feed the chickens. The scallops have become exhausted by the constant digging of them, until none exist in that bay, and you can only find them far down on the eastern end of the island. They are so rare now that they are a great delicacy. I merely mention this to show the necessity of propagating our fishes. It is only by the means of these fish hatcheries that we can keep the waters of our harbors and our bays stocked with fish. We are far enough away from the great city of New York so that our waters are not made unfit for fish by the refuse that flows into that harbor from the city.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. HICKS. I will.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Since the scallops are all gone, what do they feed the chickens in New York now?

Mr. HICKS. We feed them on the poor oranges that come from Florida.

A hatchery established on Long Island would not only produce salt-water fish for our own immediate bodies of water but it would also furnish fresh-water fish for other sections of the State; and remember, gentlemen, salt-water fish add to the food supply of the Nation. Because New York State has been far-sighted enough in its policy and liberal in its appropriations in providing State fisheries are not valid reasons for denying us a Government hatchery, for remember we have 10,000,000 people who are entitled to recognition and that we pay the great bulk of the Federal taxes.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Mr. Chairman, it is not a very agreeable task for the members of this committee to oppose this and other amendments that have been submitted, because many of these propositions are meritorious. I do not know that there is a single proposition that has been offered this evening in the way of amendment that has not a certain measure of merit. The number of fish hatcheries in this country are plainly inadequate. We could provide in every State of the Union, for one, two, three, four or five additional hatcheries, and every one of them would serve a useful purpose.

But this body is a practical body, and we know how bills are made up. We worked out this bill with the aid of the Secretary of Commerce, and the Bureau of Fisheries, and have tried to report those propositions that seemed to be most urgent, necessary and meritorious. With respect to the particular proposition offered by the gentleman from New York, I may say that I have no doubt that it possesses real merit. So do many other like propositions. But I desire to call the attention of the committee to the fact that there are three Members from the State of New York on the committee that reported this bill. It is not likely therefore that the interests of the State of New York in the matter of hatcheries have been overlooked, or neglected.

Mr. HICKS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAUNDERS. With pleasure.

Mr. HICKS. Was not there a bill offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. DALE]?

Mr. SAUNDERS. I do not know of it.

Mr. HICKS. Yes; there was.

Mr. SAUNDERS. If the gentleman says that such a bill was introduced, I will not take issue with his statement, but this bill was certainly never pressed before our committee. The fact remains however that there are three Members from the State of New York on the committee, and when we were engaged in working out a bill which necessarily had to include a large number of States, we would have heard from these gentlemen, if they had not been satisfied that the need of other sections were more imperative at this time. These gentlemen from New York were active, vigilant, and capable—and the committee may feel well assured that the interests of this great State were not overlooked in the preparation of the bill under consideration.

My colleague calls my attention to the following fact which I put before the committee, namely that in the State of New York there are 10 auxiliary fish hatchery stations. These stations I understand are not Government stations, but they are serving precisely the same function that they would serve, if they were Government stations. The chairman of the committee further reminds me that there is one Government station there. I did not recall that this was the case. This station is in the northwestern portion of the State on the waters of Lake Ontario.

The amendment under consideration ought to be rejected, and I hope that the committee will so dispose of it.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. BENNET. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS] is quite correct about the one fish hatchery in the State of New York. It is located at Cape Vincent, on Lake Ontario, and is necessarily, of course, for the propagation of fresh-water fish.

The greatest single question before the people of the East, at least, is the high cost of living, and one of the best ways of solving that question is by increasing the supply of food fish. And I want to pay a tribute right here and now to the present head of the Bureau of Fisheries for what that bureau has done in the rediscovery, if I may use that expression, of the tilefish, a very edible fish which has materially added to our selection of food fishes along the Atlantic coast.

Now, the purpose of my colleague's amendment is this: On Long Island is the ideal place to establish a fish hatchery for the purpose of studying such fish as the cod and other migratory sea-food fishes, and those fishes are disappearing. The cost of meat to-day in the city of New York is almost prohibitive to any person of an ordinary income, whereas such fish as the hake, a fish which is not heard of very much, but which is nevertheless a very edible fish, although of somewhat coarse fiber, can be had at times for as little as 3 cents a pound.

I am not going to criticize any of the items of this bill. The chairman of the committee and the other members state that they are necessary. They have looked into them. But I do know that this particular item for the State of New York is necessary, and I do know that the delegation from the State of New York has not been negligent. Our colleague [Mr. DALE] introduced the bill H. R. 14120, but for some reason or other it has not yet been acted upon favorably by the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries. Think of it! There is but one fish hatchery run by the National Government in the State of New York, up on Lake Ontario, for a State of 10,000,000 people, a State which borders on both fresh and salt water; and in this bill—and I am not criticizing the wisdom of the committee in preparing it—two new fish hatcheries are recommended for the State of Texas, to say nothing of some which are located at other places where it does appear to me it would be somewhat hard for the Government to get the water necessary for conducting the fish hatcheries.

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENNET. Yes.

Mr. HARDY. Does the gentleman think that the population of a State or the size of the State ought to have something to do with a fish-hatchery proposition?

Mr. BENNET. I will call the gentleman's attention to the fact that we have a State 600 miles long, and with a population of 10,000,000, and that State certainly is entitled to such facilities as the gentleman recommends shall be provided for a State with the population of Texas.

Mr. HARDY. But your area is somewhat small as compared with that of the State of Texas.

Mr. BENNET. The length of our State is something between 500 and 600 miles.

Mr. HARDY. But the gentleman realizes that you have fish hatcheries and substations to the number of 10 already in New York.

Mr. BENNET. That is true; but, Mr. Chairman, that is the most ludicrous argument in opposition to this amendement that I have heard. Because we have had the public spirit to establish in the State of New York 10 State hatcheries of our own, because the Government has not given us any, then they say, "You ought not to have any Government fish hatcheries; you are paying for fish hatcheries yourselves. Why should the Government help you out?" That is certainly a great incentive to thrift on the part of a State.

Mr. HARDY. As I understand, the gentleman says because they have them already, they need them now. [Laughter.]

Mr. BENNET. I regret that every time anything is asked for by the State of New York, people take it lightly and make it matter of persiflage or jokes; but I notice that when it comes to raising an income tax, to provide money for running the Government, they take the State of New York pretty seriously.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENNET. Yes.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I wish to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that there is an auxiliary fish hatchery at St. Johnsbury, Vt., near the line between Vermont and New York, and one at Holden, also along the line between New York and Vermont; and it may be that, taking those two facts into consideration, in connection with the fact that there is a Government fish hatchery along the northern line of New York, the department was influenced in not recommending the establishment of an additional hatchery by the Federal Government in the State of New York.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, it is true that those hatcheries that the gentleman has alluded to do exist. They are necessary. But they are for the propagation of fresh-water fish. We have a tremendous problem in connection with our ocean coast, and that is to propagate the fry of fish that live in salt water.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that he may proceed for two minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BENNET. This fish station that my colleague asks for, and which is asked for by my colleague's bill, that of Mr. DALE, is a hatchery wherein salt-water fish may be propagated. Fresh fish, it is true, are very good and toothsome, but they are not especially numerous, while the boundless ocean may be made to teem with fish that are food for the millions, and which will be especially advantageous and useful for the large population which borders the Atlantic coast.

Many of us have voted for the amendments offered in behalf of other States because we believed they were entitled to them, basing our belief upon the statements made by their Representatives. It does seem to me that upon the statement I have made and by bringing ourselves within the rule, in the fact that our delegation introduced a bill and gave the committee a chance to vote upon it, if they would, there can be no question as to the facts, and having made out our case, I submit that the amendment of my colleague ought to be adopted. [Applause.]

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say but little in reference to this amendment, except to call attention again to the fact that this committee has struggled very hard to limit the number of recommendations that we make to those objects that are most needful and deserving.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARDY. Yes.

Mr. BENNET. How many fish hatcheries are recommended in this bill for the State of Texas?

Mr. HARDY. I shall expect to answer the gentleman's remarks along that line. There is one fish hatchery authorized along our coast. We have a long coast—the Gulf coast.

Mr. BENNET. Is it not a fact that the bill contains——

Mr. HARDY. If the gentleman will let me make this talk myself, I will do it. There is only one on the Gulf coast, for saltwater fish. Then, there is one in the State of Texas in this bill for fresh-water fish.

The State of Texas is bigger than any five New England States. If my recollection serves me it is five times bigger than the State which the gentleman represents. There is one little hatchery in the middle of the State. This fish hatchery down on the coast is intended to serve all the Gulf States as well as the State of Texas, and that will be the only sea-food hatchery on the Gulf coast, as I now remember. Yet the State of New York has in fact 10 fish hatcheries and fish stations. This is a question somewhat of need as well as of deserts, even though you deserve the credit of having furnished yourselves with State hatcheries. This committee was attempting to meet conditions and to supply fish hatcheries where they were needed.

A moment ago the gentleman had the temerity to urge that Oklahoma and Texas should be served by the same fish hatchery, although Oklahoma alone is perhaps twice the size of the gentleman's State.

Now, another thing before I conclude. You have on this committee three able Members from the State of New York, who are faithful and loyal to their State; one Republican [Mr. ROWE] and two Democrats, as I remember. In the discussion before the committee those gentlemen did not believe that they should make a claptrap appeal that New York either deserved or needed an additional Federal hatchery, and they did not ask it. In addition to that, you have the Secretary of Commerce, a citizen of New York, devoted to the interests of New York; and while you did have a little bill flung in, like a rotten grain of corn into the hopper, no attention was paid to it and nobody insisted upon it or asked for it, unless I am mistaken.

Mr. BENNET. Now, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARDY. In a moment I will yield. The Federal Government has a main station at Cape Vincent, N. Y. Is that on Lake Ontario?

Mr. BENNET. That is on Lake Ontario.

Mr. HARDY. That is in the northern part of the State. Then you have subsidiary stations at Amherst Island, Charity Shoals, Horseshoe Island, Ogdensburg, Old Forge, Pigeon Island, Pope Mills, Sodus Point, Stony Island, and Three Mile Bay. Are all those on Lake Erie?

Mr. BENNET. They are either on Lake Ontario or Lake Champlain.

Mr. HARDY. Are none of them on the eastern shore?

Mr. BENNET. They are all fresh-water stations.

Mr. HARDY. None of those are on the eastern shore?

Mr. BENNET. As I caught the reading, none of them are.

Mr. HARDY. At least, you have there 10 substations. Now, I would like to know why it is that if you needed any station your Representatives on the committee did not call upon us for it? I think possibly one of your Members from New York has explained the situation—that your tidal waters around New York are so foul that the fish-hatching business is not successful there.

Mr. BENNET. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARDY. Yes.

Mr. BENNET. The water at the east end of Long Island is just as clear as any in the world. Now, I want to ask the gentleman a question. These stations that he has named are largely stations supported by the State, are they not?

Mr. HARDY. They are all Government auxiliary stations.

Mr. BENNET. The statement was made by the chairman of the committee [Mr. ALEXANDER] that the New York stations, except at Cape Vincent, were State stations.

Mr. HARDY. They are stated in this report to be operated by the Government.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. BENNET. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time may be extended three minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Unanimous consent is asked that the time of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HARDY] be extended three minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Will the gentleman yield for a correction?

Mr. HARDY. I yield to the gentleman for a correction.

Mr. ALEXANDER. The chairman of the committee did not make the statement that those were State stations. They are auxiliaries of the principal station at Cape Vincent, and are Federal stations.

Mr. BENNET. Distributing points.

Mr. ALEXANDER. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS] made the statement to which the gentleman from New York refers, but he was in error about that.

Mr. MANN. What is an auxiliary station?

Mr. ALEXANDER. These are named here as auxiliary stations.

Mr. MANN. There is no authorization of law for an auxiliary station. What is an auxiliary station?

Mr. ALEXANDER. They are stations where fish are propagated. I do not know just what they are. I know they exist.

Mr. HARDY. The report says they are fish-cultural stations. The list is headed—

Fish-cultural stations operated during the fiscal year 1916.

The report of the Commissioner of Fisheries says that the station at Cape Vincent is operated the entire year, Amherst Island in October and November, Charity Shoals in October and November, Horseshoe Island in October and November, Ogdensburg in April and May, Old Forge in November, Pigeon Island in October and November, Pope Mills in April, Sodus Point in November and December, Stony Island in November, and Three Mile Bay in November and December. They have different kinds of fish that they propagate.

Mr. BENNET. Those stations are all on Lake Ontario, fresh-water stations.

Mr. HARDY. That is what I understood the gentleman.

Mr. BENNET. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HARDY. Yes.

Mr. BENNET. Some one on the committee made the statement that the State of New York supported some 10 State stations. That statement is correct. Now, I should like to ask the gentleman how many State stations does the State of Texas support?

Mr. HARDY. I do not think the State of Texas supports any, and I think the gentleman who said that the State of New York supported 10 stations was referring to these auxiliary stations which are really supported by the Federal Government.

Mr. PLATT. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. HARDY. I have only three minutes. I am yielding to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET].

Mr. SAUNDERS. I was the one who made the statement in relation to these stations being State stations. That was what I understood when the statement was handed to me, but I was in error. They are under Government control.

Mr. BENNET. The gentleman is partly correct——

Mr. SAUNDERS. I have no doubt that you have State stations, but the particular ones which have been mentioned by the gentleman from Texas are not State stations. I was in error about that.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I want to say that these auxiliary stations are stations where they collect the eggs; they strip the fish and then ship the eggs to another place. They have nothing to do with the distribution of fish whatever.

Mr. HICKS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PLATT. I will yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. HICKS. I want to make a statement in regard to the matter of the pollution of waters in Long Island Sound. I want to make a statement in regard to the flow of the waters from the city of New York. All the water that comes through Sandy Hook to the city of New York goes out again through the same channel; none of the water in Long Island Sound comes from the city of New York. There is what is called the tide rip, 8 miles east of the city. The water comes up to that tide rip and then flows back again, and all the water to the east comes in from the east and goes out the same way.

Mr. PLATT. That is true, and I know it to be true.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. In reply to the question as to what are subsidiary or auxiliary stations, here is what the commissioner in that connection says in his report:

The principal stations have a permanent personnel provided by law or are operated more or less independently, although the subsidiary establishments in some cases are fully equipped and quite as important as the head station to which they are attached for convenience of administration.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the motion of the gentleman from Virginia. Mr. Chairman, we have been told this afternoon that the proponents of this measure claim that it is in behalf of the necessity of reducing the cost of living. Here we have been in session on Monday and Tuesday and to-day. We had the honor of listening to the President of the United States yesterday deliver his annual address. The whole country is somewhat excited over the very rapid increase in the last few weeks or months of the cost of articles which go into the stomach, as well as many others which are needed for the convenience or comfort of the individual. The great Congress of the United States, said to be the greatest legislative body in the world—and it is never denied in this body that that is the case—has met. The President of the United States has delivered his opinion concerning the state of the Union. The great Democratic Party, unfortunately successful at the recent election, in control of the Government, in a majority on my right, has finally reached the point where it proposes to do something to reduce the cost of living. With the price of necessities of life soaring in the air, with the household expenses of men and women pressing down heavily upon them, our friends propose to authorize an appropriation, not make it, which may be appropriated within a year and a half to construct a fish hatchery which can not be built within three years, and then to turn out some small fish which will not be ready to be caught for several years to come. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.] That is the only response that either the President or the Congress has made to the demand of the people to know something about the reason for the high cost of living. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. HICKS].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. ALEXANDER) there were—ayes 50, noes 63.

Mr. HICKS. I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and the Chair appointed as tellers the gentleman from New York [Mr. HICKS] and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ALEXANDER].

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were 46 ayes and 56 noes.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as follows:

State of Arizona, $50,000.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, the State of Colorado has a fish hatchery, established at Leadville a number of years ago, but it has never been sufficient to supply the surrounding country nor even the State of Colorado. There are only three Government hatcheries in a territory of nearly 2,000 miles, between a short distance west of the Missouri River nearly to the Pacific Ocean—one recently established in Wyoming, one in Utah, and one in Colorado. The mountain ranges are such that they can not supply them north and south, and Colorado has needed another one for many years. While the Leadville hatchery is a good one, in fact a very good one for that altitude, yet there ought to be one lower down and in a somewhat warmer climate. That hatchery supplies, as far as any hatchery could at that altitude, trout to a great many of the mountain streams. Let me say to the House that nearly everybody in the United States comes or wants to come sometime out to the mountains in Colorado to spend the summer.

I have had pending before the House for five or six years bills to construct fish hatcheries at both Durango and Glenwood Springs. My bill H. R. 32, providing for a hatchery at Durango, and H. R., I think, 31, for Glenwood Springs, were introduced on the first day of the first session of this Congress, December 6, 1915, a year ago to-day; and this committee favorably reported my bill once; but for some reason Colorado is left out of this bill. I supposed that the committee, having once favorably recommended another hatchery for Colorado, would again favor it. I saw Mr. BURKE, the chairman of the subcommittee, and inferred that Colorado would of course be in this bill, especially when the Bureau of Fisheries has officially reported on page 4 of this report that the Colorado hatchery is not sufficient to supply that territory. Our game is largely destroyed throughout the mountains, and the main outdoor sport the people have left is to go trout fishing. It is not only a sport, but the question of the high cost of living is just as acute in the West as it is in the East, and we feel that if we are to maintain the mountain trout in this country we must have more hatcheries than we have now. I may say that the State of Colorado maintains something like half a dozen good State hatcheries itself and spends a large amount of money upon them every year, and I feel that the fish industry and the fish propagation ought to be encouraged very greatly by the Government.

As a matter of fact, I would like to see every State in the Union have at least one good fish hatchery, and there are some States that ought to have several of them. States like New York, Wisconsin, Colorado, and other States advantageously located for the propagation of certain kinds of fish ought to have several of them. I feel that some Members are taking this subject with entirely too much levity. I feel that the propagation of fish and the preservation of the fish of the country is one of the most important things that we could legislate upon. It is not a matter that ought to be treated as lightly as the distinguished leader on the other side [Mr. MANN] treated it in his remarks a few moments ago. I think the preservation of fish and the culture of fish is a serious matter, and it ought not to be brushed aside because of its not being any more far-reaching or immediate in its results than it is. All of those States ought to have a splendid, efficient fish hatchery, and if the ones they now have are not sufficient, they ought to have more. I hope my amendment will be adopted, so that Colorado may do her full share in preserving and propagating the mountain trout, which is certainly one of the finest and gamiest fish in the world.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Mr. Chairman, this amendment, like most of the amendments heretofore submitted, is not without a certain measure of merit, but Colorado is very well provided for in the matter of hatcheries. According to the statement of the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TAYLOR] there are half a dozen State stations in Colorado. In addition there is 1 main national station in that State, and 11 auxiliary stations, of which 7 are engaged in the business of handling brook trout, so that Colorado has not been overlooked, and her wants are better provided for than perhaps is the case in any other State in the Union.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I find here on page 4 of the report of this bill this statement:

Existing hatcheries in South Dakota, Colorado, southern Texas, and Missouri can not produce enough fish to supply the local demand and stock the intervening waters.

Mr. SAUNDERS. That may be true. No State in the Union has a sufficient number of hatcheries for existing needs, but Colorado with 1 main station, 11 substations, and a half dozen State stations certainly is in no immediate need of another station. Her needs are not so crying as those of other sections.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. This question of the distribution of fish hatcheries is not altogether a question of locality or a question of States. It is a question very largely of the needs of the country. I presume more fish hatcheries could be used in every State in the Union, especially in Colorado, but in the hearings held when we appropriated for these hatcheries that are now in existence we discovered that the Bureau of Fisheries in the Department of Commerce had a distinct policy on the subject. Their policy was to promote as far as possible the propagation of commercial fish, and not to be led any further than necessary into the propagation of fish for sport or pleasure. It seems that in Colorado they have a very important station that propagates mountain trout, and it has 11 auxiliary stations. As the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] pointed out, these auxiliary stations are established without definite authority of law, and yet in some cases they have grown to a considerable size. One in Colorado particularly serves a very large territory, and all of the territory of Colorado necessary to be served with mountain trout can be served, but the Secretary here says that his policy has been to promote and encourage and to ask Congress to encourage only the proposition of commercial fish useful for the food of a large part of the people of the country. I read from the hearings:

Secretary REDFIELD. I was coming to that, Mr. Chairman. The difficulty we are up against is always this: The pressure from the sportsmen and the private fishermen, which has resulted in establishing a number of hatcheries, and, on the other hand, the need of the great commercial fisheries adding to the food resources of the country. Now, we believe that the great commercial fisheries ought to have the preference everywhere. That is our definite policy. Now, all of these stations where the increases are made are those that deal with food supplies and the others are those which deal largely with the demands of sportsmen.

However desirable it might be to have more for the demand of sportsmen, I think the committee must have seen that 1 fish hatchery in Colorado with 11 auxiliaries was ample to supply the mountain territory of Colorado with a peculiar character of fish adapted to those streams, but that elsewhere in the United States there was a large opportunity for the development of food fish on a commercial basis that would really add to the food supply of the country. If this bill is drafted upon that plan, it does seem to me that we ought to follow as well as we can that definitely laid-out program of the Bureau of Fisheries of the Department of Commerce. We ought not simply to add these stations because they would be desirable or because they would serve some particular advantage in a particular locality. The great question is, Do they fit into the policy and recommendations of the Department of Commerce and the Bureau of Fisheries for increasing the commercial food supply of the country?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. I am inclined to support the amendment of the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TAYLOR], which, I think, goes along very well with some other portions of this bill, especially that portion which provides a fish hatchery in northwestern Texas. If there is any place in the world that needs fish it is northwestern Texas. A man was traveling down in northwestern Texas not long ago and came across another who was hauling water. He asked him how far he had been hauling it, and the man replied for 3 miles. The traveler then said, "Why do you not dig a well and get water in that way?" and the man replied, "Well, it is just about as far to water in that direction as it is in the other." [Laughter.]

Mr. SLOAN. But as I understand it, the purpose of this fish hatchery in northwestern Texas is to propagate flying fish.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. That would help some, for it would relieve the cowboys of the necessity of riding a thousand miles to the Gulf.

They can lariat these fish, I suppose, before breakfast, if there is only some water supplied. If there is any place that needs fish, I think, Mr. Chairman, it is northwest Texas, and they need water there also. I do not know whether there is any provision in this bill for supplying water. I have heard something about artesian wells in this connection. I hope they have some provision for water for northwestern Texas for the hatchery and also for Trinity River when we get on the river and harbor bill. This can easily be supplied by artesian wells at a trifling expense, but just what kind of fish——

Mr. HARDY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I will.

Mr. HARDY. Now that the gentleman is in a discursive humor, can the gentleman tell us whether he thinks Mars is inhabited?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman can answer that question for himself.

Mr. HARDY. I thought the gentleman wanted to give wide information.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman probably can represent Mars as well as he could some other portion of the country. If I described it he would want to put a fish hatchery there.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HILLIARD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last three words. Mr. Chairman, I should like to call the attention of the committee to the fact that all the world comes to Colorado to fish. In addition to producing the most gold of any other State and the best crops, the good people living in Colorado have invited the world to come out there and live during the summer and fish, and, happily, most of the people have accepted that invitation and have come. Especially have we been favored by the gentleman from New York, who spoke as rather against sportsmen, who had the pleasure of getting after the trout in our streams out there. We would like to have some more money appropriated in order that we may entertain the world when it comes there. Direct appropriations are made from time to time in Congress in order that we may entertain people who come from abroad and, it seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that it is only fair that in this distribution of appropriations, or authorizations for appropriations, that Colorado should receive some special attention. As the world war goes on there is nothing else left over there to see and Colorado alone possesses scenery which all the world is anxious to see and from time to time a large portion of it does see. We ask again serious consideration of the amendment offered by my colleague [Mr. TAYLOR]. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Colorado.

The question was taken and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

State of Pennsylvania, Delaware, or New Jersey, on the lower Delaware River, $50,000.

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 2, line 23, after the word "river," insert "or at the headwaters of the Delaware Bay," so that it will read "on the lower Delaware River or at the headwaters of the Delaware Bay, $50,000."

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is unique as compared with every other amendment offered here to-day, because it does not increase the appropriation in this bill. The language in the bill concerning this particular item reads as follows:

State of Pennsylvania, Delaware, or New Jersey, on the lower Delaware River, $50,000.

The amendment I have proposed, if adopted, will cause the language to read as follows:

State of Pennsylvania, Delaware, or New Jersey, on the lower Delaware River or at the headwaters of the Delaware Bay, $50,000.

I propose this amendment because I think that if this bill should become a law the Secretary of Commerce should be given more jurisdiction and wider power in deciding upon a site to establish this station.

Mr. BORLAND. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. I will not for the moment, if the gentleman will kindly excuse me.

At the headwaters of the Delaware Bay, which is a salt-water body, there is an ample supply of fresh water in various streams emptying into the bay and the Delaware River, which, as everyone knows, empties into the bay at its headwaters, and is a fresh-water stream. It is a well-known fact that in spawning the shad which come up the Delaware Bay and River in the spring of the year need fresh water, but it must be water that is unpolluted. The Delaware River a short distance above the headwaters of the bay is polluted by factory waste and other causes, thereby killing annually millions of young fish which are hatched from the spawning beds. This is particularly true of the shad. If the language in the bill is not changed, it will curtail the power of the Government authorities in establishing this station, should they find an advantageous site or a more advantageous locality along the shores of the Delaware Bay. I am not going to detain the House this afternoon with extensive remarks on the merits of this proposition except to say that the establishment of a fish hatchery is essential if the fishing industry, and particularly the shad industry, is to be encouraged. The shad haul, particularly in the last few seasons, has been steadily decreasing, and I could cite figures to show that the propagation of these fish at a fish-cultural station is necessary if the supply of this fish food is to be continued. I have proposed this amendment because I believe that its adoption is necessary in order to properly round out the bill. I understand that my colleague from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] is opposed to this amendment. I take it he is going to follow me and ask you to vote against it; but I submit that an amendment that perfects a bill which may become a law and which does not cause an increase in the appropriation is one with merit that the committee might well consider and place in this bill. I have proposed it with no intention of creating an undue advantage in favor of my State for the proposed site. That is all I have to say about it at present.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I do not object to the delegation from Delaware making this argument for home consumption, but I differ from the delegation from Delaware in this [laughter], that instead of giving the Commissioner of Fisheries "wider powers," as the gentleman says, the purpose of his amendment seems to be to limit the jurisdiction and the judgment of the Commissioner of Fisheries, so that instead of giving Pennsylvania or New Jersey a chance to get this hatchery it shall be located in the State of Delaware. No one can find fault with our brilliant colleague from the State of Delaware for what he is undertaking to do. His difficulty is akin to that which arises whenever we come to a bill of this kind. The selfishness of human nature will out. Instead of permitting the Commissioner of Fisheries to exercise his wise discretion in regard to fresh water or salt water in the location of this hatchery, the gentleman from Delaware desires that the Commissioner of Fisheries shall be given instructions to locate this hatchery in the State of Delaware.

Now, it has been indicated in the literature on this subject that Pennsylvania and New Jersey will have a chance before the Commissioner of Fisheries to obtain this hatchery if those States desire to enter the competition. Evidently the purpose of the gentleman from Delaware, after Pennsylvania has gone into the net with the vote of 36 Representatives and New Jersey has gone in with the vote of 12 Representatives, is to tie that vote onto the tail of the vote of the entire delegation from the State of Delaware and cinch the hatchery. I question whether the brilliant gentleman from Delaware will be able to get away with that trick if this House and the delegation from New Jersey and Pennsylvania know themselves. I think this amendment is vicious [laughter] and ought to be voted down.

Mr. OGLESBY. Mr. Chairman, I would just like to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield to the gentleman from New York?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If I have the time.

Mr. OGLESBY. As I understand the gentleman's position, it is that having a third of a chance in his State of having the fish hatchery there, it will get the entire delegation?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I would not object to the State of Delaware getting a fish hatchery, but when the committee comes into the House and suggests this hatchery should go into Pennsylvania, which has 36 votes here, or in New Jersey, which has 12 votes, it seems to me the State of Delaware, which has 1 vote, ought to play fair, powerful and potential as its delegation is in this House. The Delaware delegation should give the larger States at least a show for their white alley when the time comes to make the selection.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask to have the amendment again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will again report the amendment.

The amendment was again reported.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, when the amendment was first reported I thought I understood it, but when my distinguished friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] addressed the committee just now, I thought that I must have been mistaken as to what it provided. But on hearing the amendment read here, I think my first understanding was correct. I was led to believe by my friend from Pennsylvania that the amendment would require that this fish hatchery should be established in Delaware and that Pennsylvania was cut out, but I learn now from hearing the amendment read again that the gentleman only is afraid that Delaware will get it on its merits, and he is unwilling to have the matter disposed of on its merits because Pennsylvania has 36 votes in the House and Delaware has only 1. [Applause.] I protest in behalf of the delegation from Pennsylvania if they take such a view as that.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman is not objecting to Delaware presenting this on its merits, but the gentleman is objecting to the attitude of the delegation from the State of Delaware on this present amendment.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman does not understand the amendment.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman knows the geography of the country, which, evidently, the gentleman from Illinois does not.

Mr. MANN. I know some geography and I know the English language, and I am sure the gentleman knows both.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Does the gentleman——

Mr. MANN. I do not yield to the gentleman until I make a little statement. The language of the amendment is to make the fish-hatchery location on the lower Delaware River or on the upper Delaware Bay, whatever it is, including the State of Pennsylvania, Delaware, or New Jersey. It does not require the location of the fish hatchery in Delaware. It leaves it open for the proper place to be selected, and if it did require it I would not be in favor of the amendment. I think the gentleman has misunderstood the amendment.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield now?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The provision in the bill is sufficiently comprehensive to permit this hatchery to be located in the State of Pennsylvania on the Delaware River, in the State of New Jersey on the Delaware River, or in the State of Delaware, which is also on the Delaware River. But the gentleman from Delaware is endeavoring to limit the designation of the location of this hatchery to the headwaters of the Delaware Bay.

Mr. MANN. Not at all. The gentleman again misunderstands the amendment.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Then what is the purpose?

Mr. MANN. He is not endeavoring to limit it to the headwaters of the Delaware Bay. He is leaving it to be located on the headwaters of the Delaware Bay or the lower Delaware River.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. What is the necessity of the gentleman's amendment? The bill is sufficiently comprehensive to cover the State of Delaware. The gentleman does not deny that. He knows geography, as he has indicated.

Mr. MANN. I take it that the bill is not sufficiently comprehensive to locate this fish hatchery on the upper Delaware Bay. It must be on the river, under the bill. Now, it may be desirable to locate it on the bay.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. May I ask the gentleman why the State of Delaware is included in the three States if it is not to be considered whenever the time comes for locating this hatchery? Does the gentleman mean to say that the Department of Commerce would not have discretion to locate this hatchery in the State of Delaware under the language of the bill?

Mr. MANN. I do not know whether they would have the discretion or not, but the question has arisen as to whether they would have the discretion. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] says they would have it. Very well. Then the amendment of the gentleman from Delaware only carries out the impression the gentleman from Pennsylvania has. It does not change the situation at all.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Delaware [Mr. MILLER].

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. ALEXANDER and Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania demanded a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 56, noes 50.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Tellers, Mr. Chairman.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chairman appointed Mr. MILLER of Delaware and Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania to act as tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 51, noes 30.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

State of Texas, on or along the Gulf coast, for the propagation of sea fish, $50,000.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. FOSS: Strike out all of section 1, down to the proviso on page 3, and insert:

"That the sum of $500,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and the same is hereby, authorized to be appropriated for the establishment of fish-hatching and fish-cultural stations in the United States at suitable points to be selected, in the discretion of the Secretary of Commerce, including purchase of sites, construction of buildings, and equipment: Provided, That not more than $50,000 shall be expended in the establishment of each station."

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, this amendment does certain things. In the first place, it provides a lump sum for the establishment of fish-hatching and fish-cultural stations, in the discretion of the Secretary of Commerce, anywhere in the United States, and not alone in the particular States enumerated in this bill.

I, from the State standpoint, have no objection to this measure. Illinois is included in the list of favored States. But when the committee or when this House designates particular States and also particular rivers and particular lakes, it raises a question in the minds of persons even here on this floor, and certainly in the mind of the public at large, that possibly the sites may have been selected in advance.

Now, for my part I do not believe it. I would not for a moment impugn the motives of the committee. But nevertheless we ought, in passing legislation here of this character, which in some quarters is called "pork-barrel" legislation, to put it on a plane above public criticism and public suspicion. [Applause.] And the way to do it is to strike out every State and every river and every lake, and to say to the Secretary of Commerce and his assistants and his experts, "You select the sites, and the whole United States is open to you." [Applause.]

I have limited this lump sum to $500,000, which would allow the establishment of 18 stations at approximately $25,000 each or 10 at $50,000 each, and if any of those States which are enumerated have special advantages, why, of course, the Fish Commissioner and his experts, and the Secretary of Commerce, who is over them all, would select those sites which are especially adapted. And then in this provision I have placed the limitation upon the amount to be expended on each station at $50,000, which is the limitation placed upon each station in this measure.

I trust, Mr. Chairman, that this provision will be adopted, because it will eliminate all criticism and will place every Member on the floor of this House upon an equal standing with every other in the eyes of his constituents and in the eyes of the country. [Applause.]

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Chairman, every project recommended in this bill is the deliberate selection and choice of the Bureau of Fisheries; and, as I stated in my opening, every project included in this bill, with possibly one or two exceptions, was included in the omnibus bill reported in the last Congress. The Department has had these projects under consideration for years past. We have not passed any bills for years past, except those carried in the sundry civil appropriation bills, with possibly very few exceptions, and I think if the membership of this House favor this class of legislation, if they regard the establishment of fish hatcheries and fish-cultural stations as important to the conservation of food fishes, we should go forward now along the lines suggested by the committee who have given the question their best consideration. After having considered the needs of all the States in the Union whose claims have been presented to the committee, and acting on the advice of the Bureau of Fisheries of the Department of Commerce, we have included these projects in this bill that are regarded of the greatest present need. And I think it would be a mistake at this time for us to depart from this policy and throw the question back to the Bureau of Fisheries or to the Department of Commerce for further consideration and appropriate a lump sum for the establishment of fish hatcheries and fish-cultural stations and leave it to the department to say where they may be located. We have the best judgment of the department before us now, and should act on it. I assume that in the event the whole subject matter is again referred to the department the logrolling process will not stop; it will simply begin. [Applause.]

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, I have favored the proposition of either extending the fish hatcheries now existing or the creation of new ones by Federal aid if we could eliminate the idea that we are getting votes for personal or State reasons; in a word, if we could put it on a National rather than a State or sectional basis, and if we could put this under the control of those who know, from expert information, the needs of the country, we could certainly eliminate this unsavory element of pork which has crept into the discussion.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to an inquiry?

Mr. FESS. In a moment. Time and time again during the day there have been offered amendments increasing the number of stations, and we have voted against them because we are told, "If you admit that one, others will follow, and we will also have to admit them"; and when some Member stated that an important State had been omitted, the chairman replied that there had not been any bill providing for it. All of these things lead to—I do not want to use the word "suspicion"—the unsavory element or feeling that we are standing for locality. Each Member is voting from a selfish rather than a national viewpoint. I wish we could eliminate that, and I think we could do it if we would place the whole matter in the hands of the Secretary of Commerce to be determined instead of determining it by the vote of individual States here on the floor of the House. There is so much of that element, not in legislation but in what is said on the floor and carried in the press of the country, that it becomes to most of us an unsavory proposition. I would like to vote for a measure looking to find new sources of food or the increase of our known sources. I very much dislike to vote against any movement to find new foods or to increase the supply of old which would help to reduce the cost of living, but I can not get the consent of my mind to vote for a measure that seems to have been primarily arranged with the view of getting votes enough in the House to pass it rather than to put it on its merits. I notice that the chairman just now said that there is no item in the bill that has not been recommended by the Bureau of Fisheries. That ought to allay one's suspicion; but at the same time the Bureau of Fisheries, knowing the methods too often employed in omnibus legislation, might have recommended items with reference to the final vote in the House. I wish that we could eliminate that element of suspicion in toto. Why not pass this measure in the form of this amendment, placing the whole matter in the hands of the Bureau of Fisheries, and thereby eliminating the charge that it is a pork-barrel measure. The bureau is the best-informed group on the matters herein proposed and could insure both efficient and economic results in this Federal expenditure.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. Yes.

Mr. ALEXANDER. If it had had any of the features of a pork-barrel bill, we could have placed hatcheries enough in different States of the Union to have carried it against all possible opposition. There is no question about that. We could have included the State of New York and the State of Wisconsin; so there is no ground whatever for that suggestion.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, if there was one argument needed for the passage of this amendment, that argument is furnished by the statement of the chairman of the committee. [Applause on the Republican side.] I think we would have liked to establish the station in Wisconsin and the one on Long Island, and probably the one in Colorado, but the Members of the House are refusing to vote for these amendments, no matter how meritorious they may appear, because if you open up the bill in that way there is no limit at all, and it will be loaded down by every sort of proposal, and that is pork-barrel legislation with emphasis; for that reason it seems to me that we ought to adopt this amendment and thereby foreclose this unsavory element from the suspicion of which we can not otherwise get rid.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FESS. If I have time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio has one-half minute remaining.

Mr. FESS. I yield to my friend from Minnesota.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. Do you not think the only way in which we can abolish this unsavory element is to do away with State lines? Do you not think that so long as State lines exist we will be open to the charge of passing pork-barrel legislation?

Mr. BUTLER. How are we to get rid of State lines?

Mr. FESS. In the early part of the discussion I asked the question whether there was cooperation between the State and Federal Government. The solution, it seems to me, is for the States to meet the Federal Government at least half way. At least that would be one solution. If the States do not cooperate with the Federal Government, then let the Federal Government eliminate all the State lines, so far as this legislation goes, giving the proper bureau the authority to locate the stations with reference to National needs rather than State desires.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Foss] has suggested a very easy plan by which this House can evade its responsibilities, and escape a great deal of irksome and laborious work. This plan is to appropriate a lump sum in every case before us, and leave to some other body, or functionary the task of working out every detail in connection with its expenditure. How easy it would be, to make this plan apply to every department of Government. We could appropriate a lump sum for pensions, and leave the Pension Bureau to determine the beneficiaries of this appropriation and the amount proper to be paid to us. This would save us much trouble, and doubtless effect great economies. Again we could appropriate a lump sum for rivers and harbors, and turn over to some one functionary or board the task of determining the meritorious projects, thus relieving ourselves from the troubles and annoyances incident to the passage of a river and harbor bill. We could appropriate a lump sum for the Army, leaving the Secretary of War to work out a complete plan for its application, with authority to determine our entire military policy. By applying this method in other directions, we would be able to rid ourselves of an immense amount of work and responsibility that apparently the Constitution intended should be imposed upon this body, and executed in the due discharge of our duty. I think the time has come for this body to disregard these insulting intimations that it is incapable of discharging its constitutional functions in a decent and honorable fashion, and do our plain duty in the disposition of the business of this House. The suggestion that we should shunt our work upon some other body, on the ground that we can not dispose of the public business save by pork-barrel methods, is a reflection upon this House. [Applause.]

Should we pass this amendment it would be equivalent to saying to the country that we are unwilling to do our plain duty, or to dispose of a meritorious proposition upon its merits, for fear that some penny-a-liner might suggest that there was a taint of the pork barrel in our action. A body that is afraid to act, lest it may be criticized, or its motives be impugned, will never act. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I am astonished that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS] is willing to say that we should seek to escape and evade our responsibilities in the manner suggested. Let us go forward, and with the facts before us, dispose of this bill in the manner that seems just and fitting. In that way we will meet the just expectations of the public; and if in the discharge of our duty we enact a measure so plainly meritorious as the one under consideration, we need not be afraid of the intimation, from whatever quarter it may come that we have acted from unworthy, or with improper motives. [Applause.]

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I have only a word to say upon the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Foss]. In my judgment, to adopt it would be to take a distinct legislative step backward. We ought to do just as little of lump-sum appropriating in the House of Representatives and in the Senate as it is possible for us to do, consistently with the best public service. [Applause.] For, as has been suggested by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS] who has just spoken, if we wish to establish in this country a bureaucracy more powerful than we legislators ourselves are, all we need to do is to turn the millions of the national appropriations over to the unguided discretion of people in the executive offices. [Applause.] We abandon our duties as national legislators when we give to people in the departments the public moneys in lump sums to be expended at their discretion.

It was the duty of the committee which reported this bill to secure the opinion of the experts in the Department of Commerce and in the Bureau of Fisheries as to the merits of the respective propositions embodied in the pending bill; and that is exactly what that committee did. From reading the report of the committee I understand that the officers of that department and of that bureau gave their unqualified approval to every provision in this bill, with the possible exception of one. Yet, notwithstanding this approval, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Foss], by his amendment, proposes that we shall abandon the bill and instead give hundreds of thousands of dollars to that bureau to expend in its discretion. I am opposed to a lump-sum appropriation in this case and in all other cases, except the very few where there may exist a real public emergency. [Applause.]

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, with much of what my colleague [Mr. COOPER] has said I agree, but as between the expenditure of money through lump-sum appropriations by an administrative body that has information and facts and this Congress endeavoring to decide this question without information or facts, I am for the administrative body. [Applause.] In the public interest and in the interest of economy, in the interest of this country, rather than this body acting blindly we had better have an administrative body acting with information.

With reference to this matter I want to ask—and I assure him that I ask for information—the chairman of the committee or the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS] whether during the consideration of this bill they asked the Bureau of Fisheries or the Department of Commerce for a recommendation to that committee of where throughout the United States they believed the fish-hatchery stations should be located or whether they merely referred certain bills to the Department and asked for a report upon them?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I will state to the gentleman that on different occasions, in personal conversation with Dr. Smith, of the Bureau of Fisheries, I told him that I wanted him to report those States where they thought they ought to be established, without reference to the claims of the membership of the House. I have had that policy in mind all the while and have pursued no other.

Mr. LENROOT. I do not know whether the committee has gathered the substance of the gentleman's statement or not. I want to ask him to correct me if I am incorrect. He states that he has asked the department to recommend only such bills as the department believed were necessary. My question to the gentleman was whether they had asked the department to give this committee information as to where throughout the United States they believed that stations should be located. Evidently from the gentleman's answer they have not, but they have limited their inquiry to this bureau merely to bills that have been introduced in this House and asked the bureau to distinguish between bills without reference at all to the needs of the country concerning the establishment of stations.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Chairman, I want to say that there were two bills referred to the committee from the State of Wisconsin.

Mr. LENROOT. One.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Two; and they were among the bills referred to the Department of Commerce.

Mr. LENROOT. Did the department ever make a report on those bills?

Mr. ALEXANDER. It did not.

Mr. LENROOT. Were the bills actually referred to the department?

Mr. ALEXANDER. There were 66 bills referred to the department, and these for Wisconsin were among them.

Mr. LENROOT. What was the report?

Mr. ALEXANDER. They reported in favor of 15 bills, which are included in this omnibus bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LENROOT. Was there any report made on the Wisconsin bill?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I think not; but I assume that it was considered by the department.

Mr. LENROOT. I want to ask this further question: Is there any item in this omnibus bill that is not covered by some bill introduced by some Member? In other words, has the committee recommended a single station anywhere in the United States that was not covered by some special bill?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I think not; but I think if you will look you will see that the needs of the country are pretty well covered.

Mr. LENROOT. Did the committee consider the needs of the United States other than by bills introduced by individual Members?

Mr. ALEXANDER. It did not; we assumed that they were in a better position to know the needs of the country than the committee.

Mr. LENROOT. Now, we have the gentleman's answer, and that means, if it means anything, a pork barrel, because the gentleman admits that the committee did not consider the question on its merits, but considered the needs of the country on the proposition solely of what Members of the House wanted stations in their district.

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for one minute.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent for one minute. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say a word in reply to what was said by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT]. If the gentleman has demonstrated anything, it is his great ability for discovering a mare's nest. There is not a section of the United States that has not had some Member alert enough to introduce a bill for a fish hatchery if that State had any possible claim. So the committee has had the whole United States before it in its investigation and has reported this bill as the most deserving set of bills introduced before the committee and the most deserving that could have been introduced.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I understood the gentleman from Missouri to say that 66 different bills were introduced at the last session and that they were all referred to the Commissioner of Fisheries. Were they all reported upon?

Mr. ALEXANDER. This committee has reported——

Mr. MANN. No; did the Commissioner of Fisheries report back to the committee on these bills?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I assume that they were all considered, but he did not report upon all of them.

Mr. MANN. Since when does an executive officer of the Government, when bills are referred to him, determine whether to report upon them or not, as he thinks best?

Mr. ALEXANDER. We referred these bills to the department with the request that it make a selection and report the bills on their merit.

Mr. MANN. I think that is not the way that this omnibus bill was created. There was no general report upon all of these bills recommending the passage of a bill providing only for those 18 items. I think the gentleman will find that the Commissioner of Fisheries, properly fulfilling the functions of his office, made a report on all of these bills that were referred to him, and that the committee took up those that it happened to see lying before it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Foss].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. Foss) there were—ayes 42, noes 93.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee rise and report the bill to the House with the amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BARNHART, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 15617, and had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and amendments to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to demand a separate vote, I suggest to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ALEXANDER] that it is now almost 5 o'clock. The previous question has been ordered upon the bill, and as there will undoubtedly be a roll call upon the bill, I suggest that it go over until to-morrow.

Mr. ALEXANDER. That will be satisfactory, but I desire to call up for consideration the Alaska fisheries bill.

Mr. MANN. That can be arranged. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to pass over temporarily the consideration of the present bill, the previous question having been ordered upon the amendments and bill to final passage.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I have no objection to that.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois that this bill be temporarily passed over until to-morrow, the previous question having been ordered?

There was no objection.

ALASKA FISHERIES.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill H. R. 17499, for the protection, regulation, and conservation of the fisheries of Alaska, and for other purposes, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk reported the bill by title.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, under the rules of the House, this bill being upon the Union Calendar, I understand that the House automatically resolves itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule the House automatically resolves itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] in the chair.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. RAKER in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering the bill H. R. 17499, the title of which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 17499) for the protection, regulation, and conservation of the fisheries of Alaska, and for other purposes.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Unanimous consent has been requested that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now arise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. RAKER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 17499, the Alaska fisheries bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

By unanimous consent, Mr. STERLING was granted leave to withdraw from the files, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of Martha O. Balch, H. R. 4613, no adverse report having been made thereon.

LEAVES OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leaves of absence were granted as follows:

To Mr. FINLEY (on request of Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina), indefinitely, on account of sickness.

To Mr. WILSON of Florida (on request of Mr. CLARK of Florida), indefinitely, on account of important business.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 58 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned to meet to-morrow, Thursday, December 7, 1916, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, submitting detailed estimates of additional expenditures made necessary under provisions of an act making appropriations for the naval service approved August 29, 1916, and of an act to establish a Coast Guard station on the coast of Louisiana, approved June 28, 1916 (H. Doc. No. 1413); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

2. A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a communication from the Director of the Mint, submitting urgent estimates of deficiencies in appropriations for the service of the current fiscal year (H. Doc. No. 1414); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

3. A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of a communication from the Chief of Division of Printing and Stationery of this office, submitting urgent estimate of deficiency in the appropriation for "Contingent expenses, Treasury Department, stationery," for the current fiscal year (H. Doc. No. 1415); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

4. A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of a communication from the Secretary of War, submitting supplemental estimates of appropriations for contingent expenses, War Department, and stationery, War Department (H. Doc. No. 1416); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

5. A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, submitting an estimate of deficiency in the appropriation, "Distinctive paper for United States securities," for the fiscal year 1917 (H. Doc. No. 1417); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

6. A letter from the Postmaster General, transmitting a statement showing the required information regarding typewriting machines purchased and exchanged by the Post Office Department during the fiscal year 1916 (H. Doc. No. 1418); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

7. A letter from the Acting Attorney General, transmitting a statement of expenditures of the appropriations for the United States Court of Customs Appeals for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1916 (H. Doc. No. 1419); to the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department and ordered to be printed.

8. A letter from the Secretary of Agriculture, transmitting a detailed statement showing the place, quantity, and price of seeds purchased and the dates of purchase, as required by the Agricultural appropriation act, approved March 4, 1916 (H. Doc. No. 1420); to the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Agriculture and ordered to be printed.

9. A letter from the Secretary of Agriculture, transmitting a statement showing the sums paid from the funds allotted to the Bureau of Chemistry for compensation of or payment to officers or other persons employed by State, county, or municipal governments during the fiscal year 1916 (H. Doc. No. 1421); to the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Agriculture and ordered to be printed.

10. A letter from the president of the United States Civil Service Commission, transmitting a statement showing in detail what officers and employees of the commission have traveled on official business from Washington to points outside of the District of Columbia during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1916 (H. Doc. No. 1422); to the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service and ordered to be printed.

11. A letter from the Superintendent of Library Building and Grounds, transmitting information required by section 5 of the deficiency act approved March 4, 1915, regarding purchases of typewriting machines and exchanges made in part payment therefor by the Library of Congress during the fiscal year 1916 (H. Doc. No. 1423); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

12. A letter from the secretary of the Excise Board for the District of Columbia, transmitting annual report for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916 (H. Doc. No. 1424); to the Committee on the District of Columbia and ordered to be printed.

13. A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, submitting deficiency estimates for wages and contingent expenses of the United States mint at Philadelphia (H. Doc. No. 1425); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

14. A letter from the Secretary of Agriculture, transmitting a statement showing the exchange of typewriters, adding machines, and other similar labor-saving devices in the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year 1916 (H. Doc. No. 1426); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

15. A letter from the Secretary of Agriculture, transmitting a statement showing, for the fiscal year 1916, the motor-propelled and horse-drawn passenger-carrying vehicles and motor boats purchased by the Department of Agriculture for use outside of the District of Columbia, and the cost of maintenance thereof (H. Doc. No. 1427); to the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Agriculture and ordered to be printed.

16. A letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting copy of letter from Messrs. Daly, Hoyt & Mason, counselors at law, of New York, N. Y., inclosing a report of the operations of the Maritime Canal Co., of Nicaragua, in accordance with section 6 of the act of Congress approved February 20, 1889 (H. Doc. No. 1428); to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce and ordered to be printed.

17. A letter from the Assistant Secretary of Labor, transmitting a statement of typewriters, adding machines, and other labor-saving devices exchanged in part payment for new machines during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1916 (H. Doc. No. 1429); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

18. A letter from the Assistant Secretary of Labor, transmitting detailed statements of expenditures from the appropriations "Contingent expenses, Department of Labor, 1914," for the period from December 1, 1915, to June 30, 1916; "Contingent expenses, Department of Labor, 1915," for the period from December 1, 1915, to November 22, 1916; and "Contingent expenses, Department of Labor, 1916," for the period from July 1, 1915, to November 22, 1916 (H. Doc. No. 1430); to the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Labor and ordered to be printed.

19. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting the annual report of the Secretary of the Treasury on the state of the finances for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1916 (H. Doc. No. 1431); to the Committee on Ways and Means and ordered to be printed.

20. A letter from the Assistant Secretary of Labor, transmitting statement of travel performed during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1916, by officers and employees of the Department of Labor on official business from Washington, D. C., to the points outside of the District of Columbia (H. Doc. No. 1432); to the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Labor and ordered to be printed.

21. A letter from the Postmaster General, transmitting annual report of the operations of the Postal Savings System for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1916 (H. Doc. No. 1433); to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads and ordered to be printed.

22. A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a report of the contingent expenses of the Treasury Department for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1916 (H. Doc. No. 1434); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

23. A letter from the Secretary of Agriculture, transmitting a detailed statement of the manner in which the appropriation "Miscellaneous expenses, Department of Agriculture, 1916," has been expended (H. Doc. No. 1435); to the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Agriculture and ordered to be printed.

24. A letter from the Public Printer, transmitting a statement relative to purchase, exchange, and repair of typewriting machines in the Government Printing Office, covering the period from July 1, 1915, to June 30, 1916 (H. Doc. No. 1436); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

25. A letter from the Secretary of Commerce, transmitting a complete set of general rules and regulations prescribed by the Board of Supervising Inspectors, Steamboat-Inspection Service, and a copy of circular letter containing amendments of the regulations adopted by the executive committee of the Board of Supervising Inspectors (H. Doc. No. 1437); to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries and ordered to be printed.

26. A letter from the Secretary of Agriculture, transmitting a detailed report of the publications received and distributed by that department during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1916 (H. Doc. No. 1438); to the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Agriculture and ordered to be printed.

27. A letter from the Secretary of Agriculture, transmitting a detailed statement of expenditures of the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1916 (H. Doc. No. 1439); to the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Agriculture and ordered to be printed.

28. A letter from the Secretary of Agriculture, transmitting a statement showing in detail the travel from Washington to points outside of the District of Columbia performed by officers and employees of the Department of Agriculture during the fiscal year 1916 (H. Doc. No. 1440); to the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Agriculture and ordered to be printed.

29. A letter from the Assistant Secretary of Labor, transmitting an itemized report of the actual expenditures during the fiscal year 1916, from the appropriations, "Miscellaneous expenses, Bureau of Naturalization, 1914," "Miscellaneous expenses, Bureau of Naturalization, 1915," and "Miscellaneous expenses, Bureau of Naturalization, 1916" (H. Doc. No. 1441); to the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Labor and ordered to be printed.

30. A letter from the Secretary of Commerce, transmitting a petition from the employees of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce and also the employees of the Coast and Geodetic Survey, both of this department, requesting an increase in salaries of the classified employees in the Government service (H. Doc. No. 1442); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

31. A letter from the president of the United States Civil Service Commission, transmitting a statement showing, typewriters, adding machines, and other similar labor-saving devices purchased during the fiscal year 1916 (H. Doc. No. 1443); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

32. A letter from the acting chairman of the Federal Trade Commission, transmitting report of typewriters, adding machines, and other similar labor-saving devices exchanged during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1916 (H. Doc. No. 1444); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

33. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting information as to number of members of the National Guard taken into the service of the United States, who are recruits without previous military service, as requested in House resolution 326, Sixty-fourth Congress, first session (H. Doc. No. 1445); to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed.

34. A letter from the Secretary of Commerce, calling attention to certain items in estimates of appropriations for the Lighthouse Service for the fiscal year 1918 which have not been authorized by Congress, and requesting that the necessary authority be enacted into law (H. Doc. No. 1446); to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. LA FOLLETTE, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to which was referred the bill (S. 1792) for the relief of settlers on unsurveyed railroad lands, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1207), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. SHERWOOD, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 18181) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the civil war and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1206), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. CARLIN: A bill (H. R. 18182) to authorize the Secretary of State to enter into negotiations with the Republic of Chile for the purpose of entering into a convention for the settlement of all claims owned by citizens of the United States against the Republic of Chile and by citizens of the Republic of Chile against the United States of America; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. RAKER: A bill (H. R. 18183) for the support and education of the Indian pupils at the Fort Bidwell Indian School, Cal.; for repairs and improvements, erecting new buildings and furnishing the same, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. CARLIN: A bill (H. SENATE.

THURSDAY, December 7, 1916.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we come to Thee at the beginning of a new legislative day and lift our hearts to Thee for guidance and blessing. May we begin the duties of this day with a consciousness of the Divine presence. We thank Thee for the spirit of prayer that has been among the people, and for the spirit of men and women who have ever kept in touch with God and kept alive a sense of the Divine providence and leadership with us as a people. We pray that in a spirit of reverence and godly fear we may perform the duties of this day. For Christ's sake. Amen.

THE JOURNAL.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings.

Mr. THOMPSON. I ask unanimous consent that the further reading of the Journal be dispensed with.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to have the Journal read this morning.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is objection. The reading will be proceeded with.

The Secretary resumed and concluded the reading of the Journal, and it was approved.

SENATOR FROM CONNECTICUT.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the certificate of the governor of Connecticut certifying to the election of GEORGE P. MCLEAN as a Senator from that State for the term beginning March 4, 1917, which will be read.

The certificate was read and ordered to be placed on the files of the Senate, as follows:

STATE OF CONNECTICUT,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY.

TO THE PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES:

This is to certify that on the 7th day of November, 1916, GEORGE P. MCLEAN was duly chosen by the qualified electors of the State of Connecticut a Senator from said State to represent said State in the Senate of the United States for the term of six years, beginning on the 4th day of March, 1917.

Witness: His excellency our governor, Marcus H. Holcomb, and our seal hereto affixed at Hartford, this 6th day of December, in the year of our Lord 1916.

By the governor:

[SEAL.] MARCUS H. HOLCOMB,
Governor.

By his excellency's command:

CHARLES D. BURNES, Secretary of State.

REPORT OF INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the thirtieth annual report of the Interstate Commerce Commission, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce and ordered to be printed.

MANUFACTURE AND SALE OF LIQUOR.

Mr. OVERMAN. I present a petition signed by William L. Sherrill, secretary for the Western North Carolina Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, assembled in convention at Gastonia, N. C., in November of this year, praying for the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution to prohibit the manufacture and sale of alcoholic liquor. I ask that the petition be printed in the RECORD and be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

There being no objection, the petition was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

To the Senate of the United States
(Care Hon. LEE S. OVERMAN, Washington, D. C.):

The Western North Carolina Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, assembled in Gastonia, N. C., November, 1916, do respectfully memorialize your body to submit to the States an amendment to the Constitution prohibiting the sale and the manufacture for sale of liquor for beverage purposes, to prohibit the manufacture and sale of liquor in Washington, D. C., and to prohibit the use of the mails for liquor advertising purposes.

WILLIAM L. SHERRILL,
Secretary for the Conference.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Mr. FLETCHER. I introduced on the 5th instant the bill (S. 7029) to appropriate $95,000 for the relief of Henry W. Cook, Arthur G. Cummer, and Waldo E. Cummer, trading as Cook-Cummer Steamship Co., copartnership, for the loss of schooner barges South West and North West, and it was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. I thought that was the proper committee at the time, but on reflection I think the bill ought to go to the Committee on Claims. I ask that the Committee on the Judiciary be discharged from the further consideration of the bill and that it be referred to the Committee on Claims.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED.

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. KENYON:

A bill (S. 7184) authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to William Welch, of Council Bluffs, Iowa, for the storage of post-office furniture while the post office at that place was being remodeled the sum of $460 out of the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated; to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

By Mr. WARREN:

A bill (S. 7185) granting an increase of pension to William H. Cranston; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. JONES:

A bill (S. 7186) granting an increase of pension to Green B. Riggs (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 7187) granting a pension to Alice Gunn (with accompanying papers); and

A bill (S. 7188) granting an increase of pension to John Stevens (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. THOMPSON:

A bill (S. 7189) granting an increase of pension to Rachel A. Layman (with accompanying papers); and

A bill (S. 7190) granting an increase of pension to John W. Stokes (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. DILLINGHAM:

A bill (S. 7191) granting an increase of pension to Bradford P. Sparrow (with accompanying papers); and

A bill (S. 7192) granting an increase of pension to Aaron Rowell (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. LANE:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 180) relative to the disposition of lands of the Blackfeet Reservation under the act of March 1, 1907; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

REGULATION OF IMMIGRATION.

On motion of Mr. SMITH of South Carolina, it was Ordered, That H. R. 10384 entitled "An act to regulate the immigration of aliens to and the residence of aliens in the United States," together with the report (No. 352) thereon, be reprinted.

REPORT OF GOVERNOR OF PANAMA CANAL (H. DOC. NO. 1498).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Interoceanic Canals and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith, for the information of the Congress, the Annual Report of the Governor of the Panama Canal for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1916.

WOODROW WILSON.

THE WHITE HOUSE, December 7, 1916.

CIRCUIT AND DISTRICT JUDGES.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The morning business is closed.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 706.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 706) to amend section 260 of an act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The pending amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. The pending amendment is on page 2, offered by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH], and is as follows:

Strike out in lines 10 and 11 the words "if in his opinion the public good so requires, may," and insert in lieu thereof "if in his opinion the efficient conduct of the business of the court so requires shall," so that if amended it will read:

In the event of any circuit judge, having so held a commission or commissions at least 10 years continuously, and having attained the age of 70 years as aforesaid, shall nevertheless remain in office, the President, if in his opinion the efficient administration of the business of the court so requires, shall appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, an additional circuit judge of said circuit, and so forth.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I know the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT] is very anxious to be present when this bill is being considered. He is not here, and I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Borah	Hardwick	Overman	Smith, S. C.
Brandegee	James	Owen	Smoot
Bryan	Johnson, Me.	Page	Sterling
Chamberlain	Johnson, S. Dak.	Penrose	Stone
Chilton	Jones	Phelan	Sutherland
Clapp	Kenyon	Pittman	Swanson
Clark	Kern	Pomerene	Thomas
Culberson	Kirby	Reed	Thompson
Cummins	La Follette	Robinson	Tillman
Curtis	Lane	Saulsbury	Townsend
Dillingham	Lee, Md.	Shafroth	Vardaman
Fernald	Lodge	Sheppard	Wadsworth
Fletcher	McLean	Sherman	Warren
Gallinger	Martin, Va.	Simmons	Watson
Gore	Martine, N. J.	Smith, Ariz.	Williams
Gronna	Nelson	Smith, Ga.	Works
Harding	Norris	Smith, Mich.

Mr. FLETCHER. I was requested to announce that the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BROUSSARD] is absent by reason of illness. He is confined to his room. I desire this announcement to stand for the day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty-seven Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present. The pending question is on the amendment of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I desire to submit some observations upon Senate bill 706. The amendment does not practically change the effect of the bill. It merely changes from the discretion of the President in regard to the public good in the original bill and makes it for the proper dispatch of judicial business in the amendment. In effect it is the same thing. The public concern is wholly that of the judicial business. It refers to the administration of public justice. So the public good and the dispatch of judicial business are one and the same thing.

I presume whatever expense is made by the operation of the bill would not be regarded as an argument. The 1914 appropriation for the pay of the retired Federal judges was $122,838.90. The 1915 appropriations for a like purpose were $147,741.67; the 1916 appropriations for a like purpose aggregate about $150,000, in round figures. The 1917 appropriations provided for by the first session of the Sixty-fourth Congress will aggregate as much, if not more. After the passage of this bill the appropriations for the fiscal year of 1918 would be very materially increased.

I have not accurate figures of the number of judges who would be involuntarily relieved of official duties under the provisions of this bill. I have heard it estimated all the way from 17 to 27 judges who would be retired between now, say, and the 4th of March, 1917, but it will be a very great increase in the items of appropriations for those purposes. For the 34 United States circuit judges in 1915 and 1916 there was appropriated $238,000 for their salary account; for the 94 district judges in 1915 and 1916 there was appropriated $564,000 in each of those years. The estimates for 33 circuit judges in 1917—1 less than the number of the previous year—are $231,000, and adding the 95 United States district judges in 1917, costing $570,000, will make an aggregate of $801,000. There is an increase of one United States district judge in the year 1917 and a decrease of one circuit judge for the fiscal year 1917.

While these are not large sums of money, they are perpetual in their operation. This bill once passed, unless it should be repealed, adds permanently to the retired list of judges the salaries necessary upon that retirement at 70 years of age, and so long as such retired judges shall live it is a material increase in appropriations.

It might be well enough to remember that the United States Treasury is not now possessed of unlimited funds. Whatever the bookkeeping may show as to a nominal balance in the United States Treasury, there is, as a matter of fact, but little available cash at this time, if there is any. Appropriations have constantly increased; the sources of taxation remain the same; but the methods of taxation have increased year after year.

During the last days of the first session of this Congress a revenue bill was passed and was approved which sought out new places for the levy of taxes; it added new burdens upon the business of the country. While it relieved us of one or two items of obnoxious taxes, it did not in the main relieve the general business interests of the country from additional burdens. So while this is a comparatively small item it is perpetual in its character unless the law should be repealed at some subsequent session of Congress. Once a precedent of this kind is made for the retirement of judges it is very unlikely that a majority could be mustered in both branches of Congress for its repeal.

If there is any reason why the bill should be enacted, it would be the increase in the efficiency or in the fitness of the judges in the transaction of the business incident to the Department of Justice. If mere age is to be taken as a test, it would be as sensible to apply it to some other departments of the Government. I have an idea, Mr. President, that a fair test would be the Senate and the House of Representatives, where the life is just as industrious, the difficulties of biennial election or of six-year periods are as great, and the character of the service rendered by a Member of Congress is just as exhausting on the physical nature or on the mental ability of the occupant of the office as that in the judicial department, especially as to the district and circuit judges. Federal judges have a life tenure and are relieved of the constantly recurring elections. I wonder how this Senate would view a bill to retire every Senator at the age of 70 years, or how the House of Representatives would look upon such a bill.

I have here some figures of the ages of United States Senators. It may not be in the aggregate that the Senate appreciates the fact that there are 11 Senators now sitting, or who are entitled to seats in this body, who have passed 70 years of age. I shall not make a list of them and insert it in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, but I would be entirely within bounds in saying that the 11 Senators who have passed 70 years of age, some of whom have run as high as 79 years, 74 years, 73 years, 71 years, 72 years, and the like, are among the best informed and the most useful Members of this body. Alabama has a Senator who has passed this age who is at the head of one of the most important committees, where there is at times a strenuous difference of opinion not only between Senators who are members of that committee but outside on the reports that are made by the committee. Every once in awhile a very decided objection is made to some ruling or recommendation of the department having charge of post office matters. There is no abatement of that Senator's understanding nor of that of other Senators who have reached the age of 70 years. The number of Senators who have reached from 67 to 69 years of age in this body is eight, and before the next Senate shall convene, after the 4th of March, three of these Senators will have reached the age of 70 years.

If I recur to the number of Members of the other House who have passed the age which is supposed to be the end of usefulness, I find House Members running from 67 years of age to 80. Those who have passed 70, and one who has reached his eightieth year, show no abatement in their usefulness or in their powers of understanding.

An interesting article on the mortality of public men has been prepared by Mr. Irving Fisher, a professor of political economy of Yale University. If mere longevity is to be taken as a test of fitness for the public service, it seems to me that the 70-year test ought to apply to Members of Congress in view of the facts presented in this article. This paper is primarily a study of the mortality of Senators and Representatives of the United States. Preliminary to that examination Mr. Fisher records the facts as to the longevity of the Presidents of the United States. He divides them into two groups, and, taking all of the Presidents from George Washington to the present incumbent, President Wilson, with their ages at the time they were inaugurated, he gives the entire number of years of their lives. Washington died at 68; John Adams died at the age of 90, and long after he was 80 years of age his biographer records that he could be found any cold, frosty morning taking a swim in the Potomac River; Jefferson, who was 58 years of age when he was inaugurated for his first term as President, died at 83; Madison died at 85 years of age; Monroe died at 73; John Quincy Adams at 71; Jackson, the patron saint of the Democratic Party, died at the age of 78. He would have been ineligible either for advice, as a candidate, or an occupant of public office under this bill in any of the departments of the Government if the reason applied. Van Buren died at 77; William Henry Harrison died at sixty-nine and a half; Tyler at 72; Polk at 53; Taylor at 65; Fillmore at 75; Pierce at 64; Buchanan at 77; Lincoln at 56. He was the first President assassinated. Johnson died at 66; Grant at 63; Hayes at 70; Garfield at 49—another assassination; Arthur at 56; Cleveland at 71; Benjamin Harrison at 68; McKinley at 56—a third assassination. Roosevelt is still living, Taft is still living, and Wilson is still living. It will be observed that——

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, while I approach the question with a good deal of trepidation, I will ask the learned Senator from Illinois if the rule that is invoked in this bill might not well be applied to the Members of the two Houses of Congress?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, sir. If there is any argument in the underlying spirit of this bill, then at least 14 Members of the Senate ought to be furnished with an assistant Senator, to relieve them of their active duties, except when they may be called upon by the real Senator to advise or sit in concurrence of judgment.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. PENROSE. I call attention to the fact that the distinguished Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER], who has just interrupted the Senator from Illinois, approaches 80 years of age. I have known him for 25 years, and he looks to me to-day to be younger than he did 25 years ago. He is certainly the most diligent Senator in this body in devotion to his duties and in regularity of attendance.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have observed that, Mr. President, in the three years that I have been blessed with a membership here.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator from Illinois if any reason occurs to him why this rule should apply to district or circuit judges and not apply to justices of the Supreme Court of the United States?

Mr. SHERMAN. None whatever. The judges of the Supreme Court have more burdensome duties than have the other judges.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. SHERMAN. I do.

Mr. PENROSE. I do not pretend to be an expert on life insurance or longevity, but I call the attention of the Senator from Illinois to the fact that the late Senator Pettus, according to common report, when he was 77 years of age, or thereabout, came to Washington to get the indorsement of one of the Senators from the State of Alabama for a judicial appointment. He was informed that he was too old to discharge the judicial functions; but he turned around and became a candidate for the Senate against the gentleman who declined to indorse him, and defeated him. Mr. Pettus was elected and served some 10 years in this body, one of the most vigorous and useful Members of the Senate.

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, sir. That was a most conclusive argument. Those are well-authenticated cases, Mr. President. The junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS] has asked why the rule should not be applied to the Supreme Court. The volume of business and the insistence of prompt judicial decision on questions of an urgent national character make the duties of the judges of that court more burdensome than those of judges of the trial courts. A district judge soldiers along pretty well; there is no great hurry about many things that he does. He is a kind of a Federal justice of the peace. He is in session all the time, and goes along in a way that does not exhaust his physical capacities or abate his mental understanding. If there are some of them who have passed the age of usefulness and their vacancies are desirable, having passed the age of 70 years, I think it would be better to argue with the brethren, to use moral suasion, than to legislate a bad precedent at this time. It seems to me that the same reason would apply to circuit judges. Here and there are judges that probably ought in justice to retire. Many of them are above the age of 70 years. Most of them are somewhere in the sixties, but to leave them on the pay roll as sort of superannuated pensioners upon the Government merely to meet an exigency in possibly one or two circuits in the United States is making the remedy out of all proportion to the disease.

Let us take the Supreme Court judges, for instance, and I do not think it will be at all reflecting upon those judges to mention them by name. Finally we must have recourse to facts, anyhow, in this body.

Edward D. White, Chief Justice of the Supreme Court, was born in November, 1845. He is now in his seventy-second year.

It might be well enough to take some of the earlier experiences of these judges who are on the Supreme Bench to find out how they have finally reached that degree of official usefulness that makes them, at threescore and ten, probably more capable than in younger years.

Chief Justice White, for instance, was admitted to the bar in 1868. He was elected State senator in 1874. He was appointed associate justice of the Supreme Court of the State of Louisiana in 1878. He was elected United States Senator in 1891. He was appointed to the Supreme Court of the United States while he was a Senator of the United States in 1894. So that he has served in a judicial capacity in his own State, in a legislative capacity as State senator, has served nationally in a legislative body, this Senate, and then, with this judicial experience on his own State supreme court bench and his legislative qualifications, has been translated while he was a Senator of this body to the Supreme Court, and is now serving in that body in his seventy-second year.

To take yet another Justice of the Supreme Court, an Associate Justice, Joseph McKenna, his birthplace was Pennsylvania, where he was born August 10, 1843. He is now past 73 years of age, putting him in his seventy-fourth year. He had a similar experience before reaching the Federal Supreme Bench, the varied experience that has been the common lot of all the successful judges, either the sitting judges or those of years past.

Justice Oliver Wendell Holmes, an Associate Justice of the Supreme Court, was born March 8, 1841, in Massachusetts. He is now in his seventy-fifth year. He has had a most arduous experience in civil and military life.

No one notices in the opinions written by any of these judges any diminution of their powers.

I might remark incidentally that William R. Day, of Ohio, born April 17, 1849, is in his sixty-eighth year. No one notices that his opinions, or the Chief Justice's opinions, or those of the other three Justices named, show any abatement of their understanding or their grasp of judicial questions in the administration of public justice.

So the reason would be as applicable to the judges of the Supreme Court as to the trial judges. At what place are the records made, Mr. President? Where are questions of fact decided? It is in the nisi prius courts, in the circuit or district courts of the United States, in both the civil and criminal jurisdictions. These courts are of general jurisdiction, unlimited in amount, and unlimited as to the character of questions that may be submitted. Constitutional questions of all characters come before them. They pass in the first instance upon the constitutionality of measures coming from this Congress, upon questions of great public interest, upon the great police powers of the Government. The police powers, like equitable powers, are undefined in their character. They are powers that the courts themselves refuse to define, and no legislative body ever undertook to define equity or the police powers by hard and fast rules or in express terms. Judicial opinions confine themselves to general expressions applied to the immediate case that is before them for adjudication or action.

I referred very briefly to the House Members. I wish to speak of Representative CANNON, who is in his eighty-first year, still serving in the House. I could speak of Mr. HILL, of Connecticut, an active, able, and energetic Representative, who was born August 4, 1845, and is now in his seventy-second year; of Mr. D. M. HUGHES, a Member of the House, who has reached his sixty-ninth year; of Mr. TALBOTT, of Maryland, who has reached his seventy-third year, his birthday being the 29th day of July, 1843.

In this connection I wish to refer to a matter not connected strictly with the legislative branch of this Government—the record of Judge Murray F. Tuley, who was nominated and elected on the Democratic ticket for many years in the city of Chicago. Mr. Tuley died on the bench. He presided in the chancery side of the Chicago courts for many years. While he ran on a political ticket, he was universally elected by all, without regard to political ties. He died at 80 years of age, still a member of the bench, and in the full command, unimpaired, of all of his faculties. On the bench in Chicago at the same time, serving with him—both of them rendering service, by the way, in the appellate branch of the court in Chicago, which is next to the supreme court in State jurisdiction, passing upon questions of fact—was Judge Joseph E. Gary. Judge Gary remained upon the bench for many years in Chicago. He died in his eighty-first year. His understanding was as vigorous and his powers of endurance and his professional acumen as strong the last day that he held court in Chicago before he went to his last illness as at any time in his long, varied, and useful public life.

Gladstone, the English member of Parliament and prime minister, died at an advanced age; and in his older days not only was his physical vigor unimpaired but his understanding was as powerful as in his younger years, if not more so.

Another great Englishman, who served in a diplomatic capacity in this country, is an instance. James Bryce honored Great Britain's diplomatic service. His books written and the long journeys he has taken bear eloquent testimony to the unimpaired powers he still possesses. Mr. Bryce wrote some very incisive comments in the form of a two-volume work on the American democracy. He was threescore and ten years of age at the time he entered upon this service. His American Commonwealth is a production ranking with anything of that character written. Two and a half or three years ago he made a tour of South America. He traveled not only through the tablelands of that country but in the extreme elevation of the Andes. That is a test for younger men. I remember when Dr. Nicholas Senn, of Chicago, went south. He was a noted surgeon and physician of Chicago. His death was brought about by his scientific researches in South America, and especially in the elevated plateaus of the Andes Mountains. He died prematurely, and the world lost his professional services.

James Bryce traced all of the steps in the territory of South America where younger and more vigorous men have gone. He went amid the ancient ruins of the prehistoric races, examined minutely all of the buildings that showed the development of an ancient civilization before Pizarro and Cortes came in the wake of Columbus to conquer and lay waste Central and South America. He went to all those points, and in a book that he published a year and a half ago he not only gives an account of the places he visited, but he gives a detailed and at times a scientific account of the discoveries and observations that he made. It shows that at an age verging on 80 years James Bryce is still in the full maturity of his powers, his mental ability unimpaired, his observation, and the body in which the mind dwells and which it uses as an instrument, still fit; that he himself is just as capable of rendering service in public or private as he was before he passed the prohibited age of 70 years.

Again, in our own country, for instance, Benjamin Franklin was a member of the Constitutional Convention that framed the document under which this Senate is operating. Benjamin Franklin was 82 years old at the time he sat in the Constitutional Convention at Philadelphia.

Chief Justice Taney, who rendered the Dred Scott decision that afterwards became a matter of angry political contention, was appointed when he was 59 years of age, and served twenty-eight and a half years on the Federal bench. He died at the age of 87 years. If the volumes of the Supreme Court Reports are searched, it will be found that his opinions in later years, after he had passed the 70-year point, show no diminution in his judicial power or in the penetrative character and the incisive force of the opinions he wrote.

I am disposed, although I did not at first entirely desire to do so, in order to make it a matter of record—because it is all here as a matter of record anyhow in other places, but not so accessible as this would be—to give the list of Senators here who are past the 70-year point. I have 11 years yet to go.

Senator BANKHEAD, of Alabama, was born September 13, 1842.

THOMAS B. CATRON, whose term expires in 1917, has reached the threescore-and-ten point.

Senator COLT, of Rhode Island, who was born June 25, 1846, has reached the age of 70 years.

Senator DILLINGHAM, of Vermont, whose birth occurred on December 12, 1843, has reached his seventy-third year.

Senator DU PONT, born July 30, 1838, has reached his seventy-ninth year.

Senator NATHAN GOFF has reached his seventy-fourth year, having been born in February, 1843.

My esteemed friend the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER], whose birth occurred March 28, 1837, is in his eightieth year. When the shipping bill was up here some time ago it became largely a question of physical endurance, toward the close of the session in March, of how long Senators could hold the floor. This is something of a physical test. I do not regard it essentially as a mental test, Mr. President, because it might result in a very great draft upon the mental ability, with consequent invidious comparisons, if that were made the test; but at least it can fairly be said, in justice, that it is a physical test. The Senator from New Hampshire met that test. He has met the test of a strenuous attendance; and if the roll calls were searched, either on the passage of bills or upon the quorum calls, they would show that the senior Senator from New Hampshire has as good a record, if not the best record, of any Senator sitting in this body. On the occasion to which I referred, after an all-night session, he was able to discharge his official duties equally well with those who are younger in years, although he might reasonably, upon the reasons assigned in such a bill as this, be considered as waning in his physical powers. He stood the test, and was in better condition than some of us who are many years his junior after we had gone through exactly the same test.

If we look over the character of the address made by the senior Senator from New Hampshire on that occasion, it will suffer nothing by comparison with shorter addresses made at about the same time. As a matter of curiosity in the beginning, and as a matter of information and entertainment later, I read the entire address he made on the night referred to. The address has a beginning and an ending; it has a coherence and a continuity of thought all the way through that would do credit to any half-hour address ever made on the floor of this body.

There is no perceptible diminution by reason of the mere lapse of years. I know men 30 years of age, under modern methods of living, with habits somewhat reprehensible, who have exhausted their vitality long ago. Men become prematurely aged by a lack of proper conduct. I can find men who were matured at 18 years of age; at 25 they are either gray or entirely bereft of any hirsute attachment; at 30 they are old, toothless, and senile. It is not a matter of years. The Almighty has so arranged the vital forces in these bodies of ours, Mr. President, that it is not a matter of years. It is a matter of behavior, a matter of good living, a matter of vital force inherited from sound parents and a proper husbanding of that vital force; and along with it goes, if at the beginning there was a fair mind, a good understanding, the preservation of that mind that uses the body only as a dwelling place. Mere years are no sign either of physical or of mental diminution.

Here is the senior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON], whose birth occurred February 2, 1843, so that he is in his seventy-fourth year. A more vigorous, sturdy mind is not now in this Senate.

Here is the esteemed junior Senator from Vermont [Mr. PAGE], recently reelected, whose birth occurred January 10, 1843. His constituents evidently reject the reasoning of this bill.

The senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH], who was born February 5, 1845, and is in his seventy-second year.

The junior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN], who was born June 20, 1844.

We are so situated here, Mr. President, that we are not like the judges and clerks of an election in a suffrage State, where they gallantly waive the preliminary question on legislative day, "How old are you?" when a woman applies. They simply ask the question, "Are you above the age of 21 years?" and permit them to satisfy the demands of the law by a general expression. Now, there is no such false modesty—and I call it that—among Members of the Senate or upon the part of any male in public life.

I am willing to concede that much to our lady friends, and even if they hereafter become Senators under the advanced thought and sit in this body, if they do not want to give their age I would never go out of my way to ascertain it. It is enough for me that they have reached the age of 30 years, making them eligible to sit here in the mere matter of lapse of years.

Here are Senators running from 66 to 69 years of age. Technically they are just on this side of the 70-year line. As a matter of fact there is no distinguishing the ability of men from 66 to 69 and those who are 70 and past. Neither is there in the occupancy of these offices by the judges. No distinction can justly be made between the service to be rendered.

I was referring a while ago to Franklin. Franklin served in the Constitutional Convention with John Marshall. Franklin was 82 years of age at the time the Constitutional Convention discharged its duties. He sat constantly. He lent of his ability and of his long experience to the perfecting of many of its articles. His wisdom averted, along with Washington, the chairman of the convention, many times friction that would have possibly broken up its deliberations. With Franklin's long experience, his philosophic observation of the actions of men, his kindly good nature, his ability to reconcile differences, along with the patriotism of Washington, they averted the conflicts between the States. Throughout the entire record of that convention, published in Elliott's Debates in the Federalist, in the minutes of the Constitutional Convention prepared by James Madison, appear constantly the wisdom of Franklin and his contemporaries and the very great service they rendered long after they had passed the age of 70 years.

One of the great judges who sat on the Federal Supreme Bench was John Marshall. He was Chief Justice for many years. He was born in Virginia, September 24, 1755. He died July 6, 1835. He was a member of the court at the time of his death. He was appointed Chief Justice January 31, 1801, and has, I believe, the longest record of continuous service on the Supreme Bench of any of the justices.

If it is an argument for the circuit and district judges, it is an argument equally applicable to the Supreme Bench. If it had been applied to John Marshall, it would have deprived this Government of some of the epochal and elemental decisions that mark great chapters in the development of national power.

Here are some of the principal opinions in what are leading cases:

The opinion written by Justice Marshall in the Dartmouth College case in Fourth Wheaton was written in 1819, when John Marshall was 64 years of age. He had long passed the time that the present Chief Executive of this country marks as the limit of the appointment of judges of the Federal courts.

McCulloch against Maryland was written in 1819, in his sixty-fourth year.

The case of Gibbons against Ogden in Ninth Wheaton was written when Justice Marshall was 69 years of age. This is one of the epochal cases. On the reasoning in Justice Marshall's opinion is the basis on which rises all the mighty superstructure of the control of interstate commerce in this country. All of the great powers of the Interstate Commerce Commission, all of the legislation in this body for the years past have been founded upon the reasoning found in this opinion.

At the last session a child-labor bill was enacted. There is some controversy about its constitutionality. Whether merchandise being the product of child labor can constitutionally be excluded from the interstate commerce of the country is a mooted question. It will not be definitely settled until the Supreme Court has decided it. I could base, outside the merits of the case, the support of child labor on the ground that a matter of great public concern in the working of immature persons has reached that point where a Supreme Court decision is necessary. It is rightful to the interests involved that Congress legislate in order that the Supreme Court may finally decide, and it takes both legislation and judicial decision to put beyond a question of doubt the powers of Congress in the regulation of interstate commerce by such methods, thereby making the child labor a national law instead of a local one, such as many of the States now have.

Our right to pass this law is based upon the reasoning adopted by Justice Marshall in his opinion when he was 69 years of age, and this is the foundation, the apparently simple clause easily understood, that—

> Congress shall have power to regulate commerce among the several States, with foreign countries, and with the Indian tribes.

With that apparently simple power vested in Congress came a long train of judicial decisions, and the first time a great illuminating judicial mind shed its light upon the beneficent powers of interstate commerce in a way that laid the foundation broad enough and deep enough to bear the weight of the great superstructure builded on it, the opinion was written by a man who was then reaching nearly the 70-year point. He had reached his sixty-ninth year at the time he built the corner stone on which this great power is developed, both in legislation, judicial decision, and executive administration.

In this opinion the exclusive right of Congress to regulate interstate commerce was developed. It arose in this way: The State of New York required a $50 license from the vessels navigating waters within that State. A vessel carrying a license from the United States was denied the right to navigate New York waters except on taking out a State license. This opinion therefore became a pioneer case. When it is read in the light of all the judicial decisions and the great volume of legislation builded up since 1887, when the Interstate Commerce Commission had its birth in Congress; when it is read in the light of all that has occurred since that time, the power of decision, the great originality of thought, the great scope of John Marshall's understanding, the great public service he rendered by the decision in building up the salutary powers of Congress over interstate commerce can be appreciated at this time more even than the day it was rendered.

Again, the Ohio Tax case in Ninth Wheaton was decided when John Marshall was 69 years old past. This, too, was an elemental decision. It required original powers of thought. It required reasoning. It was a pioneer investigation. At that time the United States Bank had created branches. Among other States there was a branch in the State of Ohio. The State authorities, acting through the legislature, levied a State tax upon the property and the instrumentalities of the United States Bank. It was a question of the power of the State to tax the instrumentalities of the Federal Government or the right of Congress to exempt certain instruments from the taxing power of the State.

In pursuance of an Ohio statute a sheriff took out a distress for taxes, acting under the commands of the auditor of the State, and levied upon the property of a branch bank. A restraining order was had and it brought directly in question the right of a sovereign State to tax an instrumentality of the Federal Government created under an act of Congress. These opinions like that of the one referred to above show the power of Justice Marshall when he was verging on 70 years of age.

In an opinion that is luminous with sound reasoning he built up the doctrine that the instruments of the Federal Government can not be taxed by a sovereign State, placing it on the unassailable ground that the power to tax involves the power to destroy, that not only may a moderate tax be levied, reasonable in its terms, but that an immoderate and an unreasonable tax may be levied, and that finally the taxing power may be used to destroy the thing taxed. There is no limitation on the taxing power where it is once conceded to exist. This Government on an income-tax amendment could take every dollar of your income or mine if the purposes of the Government would justify such an extreme exercise of power.

So based upon that reasoning, with a wealth of illustration and with a solidity of logic that has never been overturned, is the opinion Justice Marshall built up, a decision that has been a pioneer case and a lamp to all who gave advice upon that question, from 1824 down to the present time, soon to be 100 years.

Again in Brown v. Maryland, in 12 Wheaton, the court set aside an act of the Maryland Legislature as conflicting with the Federal Constitution. This, too, is a far-reaching opinion full of powerful reasoning. It was filed in 1827. At the time it was filed, showing the opinion to have been written by Justice Marshall, he was then 72 years of age.

Both the cases last referred to were controversies over the validity of acts of State legislatures. It was said that the State was sovereign within such an exercise of its power, and it was only on an order from a United States court attacking the validity of such legislation that the issue was joined and an opinion was had.

It might be well to note that after the Ohio decision was rendered by Justice Marshall the Ohio Legislature passed a resolution which in substance is like the celebrated Kentucky and Virginia resolutions, that the Federal authority had invaded the right of a sovereign State, and expressing their belief that the Ohio public officers ought not to pay any attention to the opinion of the Supreme Court. They were almost as bad as some of the States were in 1861, almost as bad as what we hear not so much about of late years, the celebrated Hartford convention at the time the embargo laws were laid in 1809 and 1810 and along there.

The questioning by a sovereign State of the acts of Congress, of the decisions of courts, of Executive orders and proclamations was not originally confined to any one section of the Union. If the whole truth be told, States North as well as South have adopted at times the spirit of the Virginia and Kentucky resolutions, which had in them the germ of secession. It was only the growth of a strong Union sentiment by attachment to the whole country, making it a Nation in its power, that in later years sustained the powers of the Union and made it live by force of arms. If the whole truth be told, there was always a lingering doubt until it was settled either by judicial decision or by civil war as to the right of a State to deny the powers of the General Government in matters wherein differences arose.

So, John Marshall, in writing the Ohio opinion, as well as in the case of Brown against Maryland, setting aside the acts of the Maryland State Legislature, had in mind the powers of the General Government and the limitations that were placed upon the sovereign States by the adoption of the present form of Government under the Constitution of 1787.

Again, in the Cherokee Nation case, reported in Fifth Peters, the opinion was filed in 1831, and Justice Marshall was then in his seventy-sixth year. The opinion when read shows no failing of his understanding. It is replete with sound reasoning. He adverts to the fact that it calls strongly upon human sympathy, that it removes a race of people, the Cherokees, from the land that their tribe and their ancestors had inhabited, and had hunted upon for centuries; that it appeals very strongly to that human sympathy; but in spite of that he writes the opinion upon the legal question involved only. He shows no trace of mental weakness or lack of sound judicial understanding of the great questions involved.

Here are some other duties given to the public by this distinguished character. The Virginia constitutional convention met October 5, 1829. Marshall was a member of that convention. He took an active part in framing the Virginia constitution. His accustomed vigor and mental power showed no decrease. The records of the Virginia State convention when they met to frame the constitution bear the amplest evidence of the activity and understanding of Marshall at this time.

Bear in mind, Mr. President, that when the Virginia convention met to write their constitution John Marshall was 74 years of age. Send to the library and obtain a copy of the printed report of the Virginia constitutional convention. Scattered throughout that report is the conclusive evidence that John Marshall's powers were unimpaired. The solidity of his reasoning, the long experience from which he draws, the breadth and application of historical questions reaching back to classical days, the understanding in applying general principles to the local conditions in the State of Virginia and adapting them to the genius of the American Government in our country, all show that at 74 years of age John Marshall was more capable than he was when he was 34 years of age.

He served with Madison and Monroe. He served with many a historic name in the annals of the State of Virginia. He suffered, by comparison with them, nothing. He bore his part and with distinguished names in history, not only of Virginia but of the Republic. John Marshall showed at 70 years of age a vigor and understanding that does him credit and does the people of Virginia credit for sending him at that age to the convention that they might have the benefit of his unrivaled powers.

Before I finish Justice Marshall, as in the case of Chief Justice White, I wish to allude to a varied experience of Justice Marshall. He was a member at various times of the Virginia State Legislature and a member, as already stated, of the Virginia State convention. He was also a member of the convention called in the State of Virginia to ratify the United States Constitution, which had been prepared at Philadelphia and submitted to the various States for their ratification. In 1797 he was envoy extraordinary to France, representing this Republic; in 1800 he was Secretary of State; in 1801 he was appointed Chief Justice of the United States and served, as already stated, for many years.

Here is something that is more modern, Mr. President; it is a press report by a staff correspondent of the Chicago Tribune, dated April 1, 1916. That was a short time after a city in New Mexico had been somewhat grievously mauled by a gentleman from Mexico. We were then entertained with the spectacle of a number of United States soldiers across the border denied the use of a railroad, transporting men, supplies, provisions, and the like, by automobile over alkali deserts, with instructions to get Villa dead or alive. Col. George A. Dodd was an officer in this expeditionary excursion to Mexico. I read from the press report, as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 1.

The exploit of Col. George A. Dodd and his flying column in routing the band of Villistas after a dash of 55 miles made in 17 hours never has been equaled in the history of warfare, according to officers of the General Staff and the Army War College.

Neither of those are in the habit of paying empty compliments—neither the General Staff nor the Army War College.

The achievement is regarded as all the more remarkable in view of the fact that the dash was made through a mountainous territory and that Col. Dodd himself is the veteran Cavalry officer of the Army.

Under the statutory requirement Col. Dodd will be retired by reason of age on July 26 next, when he will reach his sixty-fourth birthday.

Now he is past that period; he is eligible to be retired.

The officers of the Army to-night insisted that the veteran colonel had set up two records which it will take many years to surpass.

GREAT TEST OF LONG CAREER.

When Dodd carried his command into Mexico in pursuit of Villa, his lifelong friends in service knew that he was facing the greatest test of a long career. He was given the business of chasing down one of the wiliest bandits in the world, who was also one of the most capable horsemen. Dodd at 64 had all of the odds against him when he went after Villa, a man in the early thirties.

From the day he left West Point in 1876 Col. Dodd has been astride a horse in the Army. As a second lieutenant he was noted as a cavalry genius, and when a captain he organized the crack troop of the Army and revolutionized the entire American system of Cavalry fighting. Officers to-day assert that Dodd is the father of the American cavalry style, and that the remarkable dash and victory he has just attained in Mexico is as great a personal as a military triumph.

Under the Dodd system both man and horse were trained for every sort of fighting they might encounter. Col. Dodd always put his men through the severest physical exercises and treated his horses likewise. Man or beast who could not stand up went by the way. As a result of this system, when he was ordered into Mexico he had both his men and his horses ready for the work before them.

HELD FAITH IN DODD.

Although few officers here cared to predict openly on the outcome of the expedition, many of them, when they learned Dodd was in command of the flying column, asserted that not only would he outfight Villa if they met in an engagement, but that he would outmaneuver him and outrun him if the contest became a long, drawn-out one.

Retired Army officers to-night were exceedingly jubilant over Dodd's victory.

Here is a man who is now in his sixty-sixth year, enduring the greatest physical test that could be put upon a man. Anybody who has ever hiked over an alkali desert under the burning sun down in that country knows what it is. There is no greater physical test that could be put upon a man, whether in youth, in mature age, or in old age, than an accomplishment of this kind.

The retirement of the Army officer, while it is in a different branch of the service, comes at a little earlier age—at 64 years. In civil life the retirement of an occupant of the bench or a member of the Senate might be put at a much later period. The 70-year period has been made the one at which judges may voluntarily retire, so that they may not be put to the necessity of keeping in the service if they wish to retire after that period. The 64 years, which is the age for retirement in the military service, is only out of deference to the more exhausting calls upon the physical capacity of the officers or members of that service.

I referred awhile ago to the article by Prof. Fisher, and was then deflected from the line of observation by some inquiries very properly propounded by certain of the Senators. I now wish to return to this article on the mortality of public men, Mr. President, written by Prof. Fisher, of Yale University. I had read the part referring to the longevity of Presidents.

The longevity of each President is reckoned from the date of inauguration—that is, from the date of his first being President. Thus Washington became President at 57 years of age, when the "expectation of life," according to the American Experience Tables, was 16 years. He actually lived, however, only 11 years instead of the 16. That is, he lived only eleven-sixteenths, or 69 per cent, of his expectation. John Adams, on the other hand, lived after inauguration for 29 years, which was two and twenty-three one-hundredths times his expectation of 13 years.

The men of greatest longevity were John Adams, Madison, Jefferson, John Quincy Adams, Van Buren, Jackson, and Fillmore, and those of the least longevity were the first Harrison, Garfield, Taylor, Polk, Lincoln, McKinley, and Arthur. Of course, in the least-longevity list read, three of them came to violent deaths and could not be charged up properly on expectation under the mortality table.

The long-lived Presidents all belonged to the first half of the list and the majority of the short-lived ones belonged to the second half. * * * If we group these deceased Presidents under four successive periods approximately equal, we have the following table—

Which is very instructive—

in which the Vice Presidents are also included.

The insured lives of to-day on which these tests are made are those of men engaged in private occupations.

We note also that the longevity of our Presidents seems to be diminishing with the increasing complexity of modern life in Washington. Their average longevity in the four successive periods was 156, 84, 75, and 45 per cent, respectively, or, omitting the assassinated Presidents, 156, 84, 84, and 68 per cent. We find the same apparent tendency among the Vice Presidents. It is also interesting to note that the Vice Presidents seem to live out a smaller fraction of their expectations than the Presidents, excluding the influence of assassinations. This fact (if it be a significant fact rather than an accidental incident in so small a number of lives) would suggest that the official social and convivial life at Washington is a greater life-shortener than the heavier responsibilities of office.

The old saying that "men dig their graves with their teeth" is illustrated by the lives of public men in Washington. The lack of exercise, the change from the habits that have become settled in middle or in later years, the entire change of surroundings consequent upon many of the indispensable activities of public life, the anxieties that result—all of those seem to have a determining influence in shortening the period of the lives of those in the public service.

The five presidents of Yale University, for substantially the same period as that of the above table, show a longevity equal to 137 per cent of their expectations. The consistent conformity of all the results to the hypothesis that a "simple" life is a long life and that a "complex" life is a short one is at least striking.

But as already emphasized, the number of lives in all three lists (only 50 in all, excluding duplications) is so small that any statistical conclusions whatever, without confirmatory evidence, would be dangerous.

We turn now from these preliminary remarks on presidential and vice presidential lives to the lives of our Congressmen—Senators and Representatives. Here, fortunately, we have enough lives, about 7,500, to make the results of undoubted significance.

In this study Mr. Fisher had access to the records of the New York Life Insurance Co., to which he extends his thanks for the courtesy, and also to Arthur Hunter, the actuary of the New York Life Insurance Co., for his assistance and criticism in the preparation of this paper.

I should like to say he continues, in connection with this matter, outside of the article, that the life led by the average Senator or Representative is much more exhausting than that led by any incumbent of the bench. No United States district or circuit judge and no justice of the Supreme Court has the manifold anxieties of a Member of Congress.

If Representatives be considered, Mr. President, every two years they are obliged to submit themselves to their constituents in their respective districts for election. Under our form of government the 435 Representatives approach the end of their terms every two years. In the multiplicity of State laws governing elections, including corrupt-practices acts within State jurisdictions, direct primaries have come on apace; they have grown in popular favor and probably never will wholly exclude elective officers from their operation. In time I believe primaries will be simplified. It is reaching that point now where the most radical of the reformers favor the simplification of primary laws, and the simplification of the ballot will necessarily follow; but, as things go now and as the reasons are urged, the Member of Congress, either of the House or of the Senate, must submit himself to a direct primary.

As I suggested yesterday very briefly in some short observations on another bill in this body, the constantly recurring primaries in the larger States have become serious drafts upon the physical energies, upon the financial resources, and upon the limits set to human endurance.

I wish to insert here again the prediction that I made yesterday, Mr. President—not quoting from myself, but putting it here as a paragraph in my remarks upon this bill—that in all the larger States where the vote runs up to 400,000 or a half million votes in primary contests, where strenuous factional disturbances always enter into the selection of candidates, both Senators and Representatives are required to meet that character of service which ultimately in the years to come will break them down before they reach middle age or before they reach threescore and ten. The smaller States have an advantage, and the Southern States have a marked advantage. They send their Representatives here and keep them here in larger number and for a greater number of years than any other geographical subdivision of our country. In the great States of New York, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Illinois, and Iowa the contest is becoming so strenuous, especially in the three largest States in the Union, that it is doubtful whether a candidate can long stand the strain; and even if he can, whether it is worth while and whether he is justified in risking the destruction of his life, his necessary withdrawal from public business, and the expenditure of a private fortune upon the contests that are inevitable in order to hold a seat in the Senate. I have gone through primary and election contests for 20 years and I know what they are in a State where there is polled from 320,000 to 500,000 votes in a single primary. The soberest question that confronts us in American politics to-day is how long this can continue without breaking down the electoral system of the country. It is now beginning to show its results. Some of the Senators from the larger States cease to be candidates in the primaries. Political organizations are powerful, it is true, but they do not always control; administrations are powerful, but neither do they always control; pay rolls are powerful, but still the opposition engendered by those off the pay roll and by disappointed applicants is also powerful, and pay rolls themselves are of doubtful use in all of these family disturbances. Then after the primary comes the election, there now being a direct election of Senators. No longer is a Senator relegated to the legislature of his State to obtain title to his seat. For various reasons a change has occurred. I favored the amendment for some years before it was adopted—for at least four years. I am in favor of this method and am only alluding to it to show that, with other burdens, the direct election of Senators adds to the burdens that will inevitably tend to exhaust the physical energies and impair the ability of a Senator to remain in this body.

A Member of the House of Representatives goes through the same difficulties. In the larger States there are always ambitious men in every district. It means for the Representative the same struggle, and in these struggles now and in the years to come, in the change of habits due to the transplanting of men in middle age to new surroundings and imposing upon them new duties and fresh anxieties, is perhaps found the reason for some of the figures contained in this remarkable article from which I am reading.

The method employed has not been that of expected longevity used above, but that of expected mortality. This makes it possible to include the influence of the several thousand lives of the Congressmen still living. The mortality of the American experience table was used here also as a standard of comparison, or measuring rod. Although, as already stated, this early table does not agree with the mortality experienced at present, either by the insurance companies of to-day or among the general public, it still serves as a convenient basis in terms of which any actual mortality may be expressed in percentages.

Except for the cases mentioned below, where the record was not complete, the investigation covered the entire history from the date of entering Congress until death, or until March 3, 1912. The date of birth was required in order to determine the age on first entering Congress. For some Congressmen this information was not given in the Directory. The number of such cases was small (785) and sufficient accuracy was obtained by assuming that they entered at an average age. In other cases the Directory did not place the history of the Congressman after his retirement from Congress. These cases were not large in number and were included in the investigation from the date of first entering Congress to the date of last retirement from Congress.

There is a table showing the mortality soon after entering Congress and later, divided in all into five periods of life—namely, a period of two years covering the first congressional term, a period of eight years, the second decade after entering, the third decade, and the remainder of the Congressman's life. These are embodied in a table on page 39, Mr. President, which will be found in the article of Prof. Fisher, appended to my remarks.

The observations that are made and the conclusions drawn from this table show strikingly—that Congressmen had a low mortality immediately after entering Congress, but a greatly increased mortality as the years passed by, reaching the maximum in the second decade after entering Congress, after which there was a decrease. In the first period of two years the mortality is only a little over half of the expected by the American experience table, and somewhat less than the expected if more modern tables had been used. After two years (or one congressional term) it almost reaches, and during substantially the next three decades exceeds, the expected, and after that time it falls back to three-fourths of the expected.

These figures of themselves give no proof, of course, of what causes are at work. They, however, fit into the following hypotheses.

The reasons that are applied here, Mr. President, to Members of Congress, Representatives and Senators, would, if the argument of this bill is sound, withdraw from their seats in both branches of Congress a considerable number of men who are now serving. The mortality is greater here, the absence because of illness is greater, the fitness for service on the Supreme Bench or the inferior United States courts is greater here. More drafts are made upon the vitality, more physical exhaustion comes from service in either branch of Congress than in the case of the judicial department of the Government. There business can proceed orderly, with fixed hours, with no particular draft upon the physical energies of the public officials. But the man in Congress, whether during the session of Congress or in a campaign, has no regular hours, either for rest, for meals, or for the ordinary recreation that belongs to the unoccupied moments of life. These calls upon the ability of a Member of Congress would make a bill retiring us at 70 years of age far more necessary than that relieving the judges of judicial duties after 70 years.

The bill is a subterfuge. If I were an occupant of the Federal bench affected by this bill, and did not care to be shouldered off the woolsack by a judge appointed in my place under the provisions of this bill, Mr. President, I would contest the right of Congress to withdraw from an acting judge his duties under the constitutional power inherent in courts in this country. I would contest the right of Congress to make such a regulation as that proposed in this bill. You withdraw from the judge all active participation, leaving naught but a judicial shell. The only active principle there is is the continuation on the pay roll.

These hypotheses named in the article are interesting, and they are fitly applied to the reasons upon which this bill is sought to be enacted.

He continues:

(1) Congressmen are a select group having unusual vitality, and therefore a low mortality at the outset.

Generally that is true. The Members of the Senate that have sat here in years past, beginning with the first Senate that ever assembled, as a rule have been men of vigorous physical build. There have been notable exceptions. Alexander H. Stephens was long of limited physical capacity, practically an invalid. Certain others who have sat here in years past, of marked mental power, have been in failing physical health, especially the last years of their lives. But these are only exceptions to the general rule announced, and Mr. Fisher is entirely within the facts when he states that the average Member of Congress is found to have unusual vitality.

Then he continues:

(2) Congressional life with its responsibilities, heckling, excitements, worries, indoor and sedentary life, late hours, dining, wining, and other hygienic conditions makes a severe drain on this vitality, showing itself in a gradually increasing mortality.

Mr. President, if you and I accepted all of the invitations issued to the average Senator, ate all of the dinners that are set before us, and drank of all of the various compounds, simple, mixed, and otherwise, that are poured out in front of us, we would be gathered home to our fathers even with the time of service that we have been here. It is an impossibility. Men do not work themselves to death in Congress. They do themselves to death in some other way. That is what happens to them. The professor is right. I do not always agree with the professors, but once in a while they get at the truth.

(3) Some Congressmen contrive to avoid or to correct these unhygienic conditions and cause a partial return toward the original low mortality, after their less careful colleauges have died. At any rate the cardinal fact is clear that some cause or causes connected with entering Congress tends to kill Congressmen.

Those are the tables. Why, the average life insurance company that is writing insurance for a level-rate premium, and issuing a contract with a guaranteed reserve to protect it would be justified in raising the rates to Congressmen as an extra-hazardous occupation on the table presented here of the mortality and the expectation of life of 7,500 Congressmen. We need this bill, Mr. President, more than the Federal judges need it. Why, some of the Members of the House would retire if you would pension them. They might sit as advisers; they might be called in; but there seems to be a constitutional aversion to the House or the Senate being advised. Even if we make mistakes, we like to become responsible ourselves for what we do.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey in the chair). Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. SHERMAN. Certainly.

Mr. POMERENE. Assuming, for the sake of the argument, that there are a number of judges who have become incapacitated by reason of age or other disability, what remedy would the Senator suggest for the Government and for litigants under those circumstances?

Mr. SHERMAN. Call in the circuit or district judge from outside. They are interchangeable.

Mr. POMERENE. But in many of these instances those judges are already overcrowded by their own dockets.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think there is an abundance of judicial material. I think Chicago has more judicial material than it really needs. I know that for a long time there were two vacancies in Chicago, and the President did not fill them. The judges that were assigned to the Commerce Court were appointed, and of course are life judges. They are active. One of them, Judge Mack, was from Chicago. He is still a United States judge. He is a preacher without a congregation. If somebody would give some of these judges something to do, I have an idea that all those judges would rise up and call him blessed.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. I simply wanted to suggest to the Senator that many times in the past Congress has appointed judges in cases such as those referred to by the Senator from Ohio. This bill takes that power out of the hands of Congress and places it in the hands of the President of the United States. There have been in the past very few cases such as he has referred to, and it seems to me that the proper way to do it would be for Congress to act in every case when it becomes necessary. There are not so many of them but that we can do it very easily.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Illinois further yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. SHERMAN. Certainly.

Mr. POMERENE. There are certain instances, as I understand, in which the judges simply arbitrarily refuse to retire—though they could retire under the statute—or to hold court. Now, is the public to suffer from a condition such as that?

Mr. SHERMAN. That is a case for legislative action, as the Senator from Utah suggests. Whenever the facts are shown in this body or to a committee a proper bill will be reported out and an additional judge appointed for that district. But in this case the remedy is applied to every district, whether the condition suggested, which calls for the relief mentioned by the Senator from Ohio, is present or not.

Mr. POMERENE. I want it understood that what I have said does not apply to any of the United States judges in Ohio. We have four United States district judges, and they are all of them very busy all of the time.

Mr. SHERMAN. In such a case I do not apprehend that there would be any difficulty in enacting proper legislation here to relieve such a condition on the facts shown. That would require the appointment of a single judge. It would be better and much easier than the method proposed in this bill.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. SHERMAN. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Is it not true that there have been cases in which for years the judge has not been holding court, and bills to remedy the situation have been presented repeatedly and have not been passed?

Mr. SHERMAN. But if a judge refuses to hold court or is disabled so that he can not properly perform his judicial duties, would it not be better to meet that particular instance by the enactment of proper legislation to relieve the condition in that district than to make an omnibus law that retires involuntarily every judge reaching the age of 70 years?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Have we not had the experience of the pendency of such a condition and the pendency of legislation without its passing for years? And is not that the reason, in part, why the Department of Justice believed it was wise to pass a general bill and not to make this a political issue before Congress in each particular instance?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator from Georgia that since I have been in the Senate there have been a number of bills passed relieving the judges of certain districts. I do not know of a case that has come before Congress, or I will say before the Senate—I have not followed it up in the House—but that, if it has been shown that it was necessary, Congress has acted and the bill has been passed. I have not any doubt now in my mind but that if the Senator from Georgia had such a case in his district, or such a condition existed in any other district in the United States, Congress would relieve the situation by the passage of a bill.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me——

Mr. SHERMAN. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I will state that a bill was pending to relieve the fifth circuit, and it had been pending practically ever since I have been here, for five years, and it has never gotten through. It applied to the case of a judge who was bedridden, who had not been on the bench in a number of years, and who finally reached the age of 82. Since the last session of Congress he has died. He had not been on the bench in six years, and the presiding judge simply would name some district court judge to sit on the circuit court bench. We have not had a full circuit court in five years. The bill was here and it was pressed, but it got sidetracked first in the Senate and then in the House.

I simply mention this case to illustrate the fact that the relief has not come always through Congress; and our view was that if we established a proper basis for action, it would be better to relieve Congress of the investigation of each particular case and insure to the circuits and to the districts not the change of a judge simply because he was 70—the Judiciary Committee did not agree to that view of the Department of Justice—but if the judge, on account of his age, could not discharge all of the duties efficiently, then the President could name a new judge without retiring the old judge, leaving him eligible for service. That is the plan of this bill—to leave him eligible for service, and for special service.

Mr. SMOOT. Do I understand the Senator to say that in the case referred to by him the bill failed of passage in the Senate?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do.

Mr. SMOOT. In the Senate of the United States?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I think we got it through at one session and it was lost in the House; and it may have passed once through the House and been lost here. For five years a bill on that subject has been pending.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that within the time mentioned by him bills have been passed through the Senate in cases that were not nearly so meritorious as the case he has just described. I have always felt that whenever a situation of that kind arose both sides of the Senate, no matter what political faith the judge might belong to, would act without hesitation; and I am quite surprised to hear the Senator say that in a case of that kind there was a bill that failed of passage in the Senate.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I state positively that one of the circuit court judges of the fifth circuit, living in Texas, Judge McCormick, was off the bench for five years on account of ill health; that for four or five years before he had been able to sit only part of the time on account of ill health; that he had not been on the bench for a number of years when he died, and he died since we adjourned last September; bill after bill had been introduced and never got through. I think we passed it once in the Senate, and it was lost in the House. I do not know that there was opposition to it. I think everybody agreed that it ought to go through, but it just did not get through.

Mr. SMOOT. Was there any objection to the bill itself, or was it claimed that there were plenty of district judges in that district?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. No. We all knew that it was not desirable to have the presiding circuit judge designate a district court judge to sit in the circuit court of appeals. We all knew that it was very much better for the circuit to have the three full circuit court judges of appeal, and not have a district trial judge sitting in the circuit court of appeals. I know now of other circuits in the United States where the judge, on account of his old age, is not rendering efficient service. I do not like to name them. That statement does not apply to my circuit any more. The Almighty has relieved the circuit in which I live since we adjourned last summer by the death of Judge McCormick. All hope of his ever serving again had ended years before his death, and his associates desired him to retire and let them have another circuit judge. The extra work and the extra responsibility almost broke down the presiding judge. The view of the Department of Justice was that where a man had reached the age of 70 the average allotment of physical strength was exhausted, and that in all of those cases it would be wise to have the President designate an additional judge and not retire the old judge but leave him subject to special assignments. Senator Root, of New York, served on the Subcommittee of the Judiciary and cordially supported the bill. If the Senator from Illinois will study the calendars, he will find that New Jersey has been away behind in its work. Four thousand cases have accumulated there, as the Senator from New Jersey suggests.

It is a denial of justice to leave circuits or districts without efficient and vigorous judges. It is impossible to properly conduct the business depending upon assignments of judges from other circuits and districts.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 15842) to revise, amend, and codify the laws relating to publicity of contributions and expenditures made for the purpose of influencing the nomination and election of candidates for the offices of Senator and Representative in the Congress of the United States, extending the same to candidates for nomination and election to the offices of President and Vice President of the United States, limiting the amount which may be expended, providing for the publicity of campaign expenses, and for other purposes.

Mr. OWEN. There are a number of Senators who are engaged now in working on this bill with a view to making certain amendments to it and in reconciling certain differences with regard to the bill. I think that better progress will be made for the present to have the bill temporarily laid aside. I ask that that be done.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, that course will be pursued.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. SHERMAN. I do.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 706, which has just been before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there any objection?

Mr. SMOOT. I am not going to object; of course I would have no right to object to the motion; but I do want to have a quorum present, because many Senators may have left thinking that the unfinished business would be taken up at 2 o'clock. Therefore, Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah having suggested the absence of a quorum, the Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Bankhead	Husting	Oliver	Smith, S. C.
Beckham	James	Overman	Smoot
Chamberlain	Johnson, S. Dak.	Owen	Sterling
Clapp	Jones	Page	Stone
Clark	Kenyon	Penrose	Sutherland
Cummins	Kern	Pittman	Thomas
Curtis	La Follette	Pomerene	Thompson
Dillingham	Lane	Reed	Tillman
Fletcher	Lea, Tenn.	Saulsbury	Underwood
Gallinger	Lee, Md.	Shafroth	Wadsworth
Gore	Lippitt	Sheppard	Walsh
Gronna	McCumber	Sherman	Watson
Harding	Martine, N. J.	Shields	Williams
Hardwick	Nelson	Simmons	Works
Hollis	Newlands	Smith, Ariz.
Hughes	Norris	Smith, Ga.

Mr. CURTIS. I desire to announce the necessary absence of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCLEAN]. He is paired with the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS]. The Senator from Idaho [Mr. BRADY] is also necessarily absent. He is paired with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. VARDAMAN]. The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] is necessarily absent and is paired with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN].

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SHEPPARD in the chair). Sixty-two Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Georgia to proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 706.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 706) to amend section 260 of an act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending amendment is the amendment of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. CUMMINS. I offer as a substitute for the amendment proposed by the Senator from Georgia the following.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The proposed amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. In lieu of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Georgia, after the words "the President," insert:

If he finds that any such judge is unable to discharge the duties of his office by reason of mental or physical ailments of permanent character, shall.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I should like to suggest to the Senator from Iowa——

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I suggest an amendment to his substitute by adding after the word "discharge" the words "efficiently all."

Mr. SMOOT. So as to read?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. So as to read:

The President, if he finds that any such judge is unable to discharge efficiently all the duties of his office by reason of mental or physical ailments of permanent character, shall.

Mr. CUMMINS. In so far as I can accept it, I am willing to accept it, for it does not change the thought I have in mind in presenting the amendment.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I want to say, Mr. President, with that accepted, I am disposed to accept the amendment of the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. CUMMINS. Before that is done I want——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa accept the amendment?

Mr. CUMMINS. I accept the suggestion of the Senator from Georgia, and ask that my amendment be modified accordingly.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment will be modified as suggested by the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. PENROSE. I should like to address an inquiry to the Senator from Georgia and incidentally to the Senator from Iowa.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield.

Mr. PENROSE. I think the amendment is an admirable one. I asked the Senator from Iowa in a personal conversation lately, and now ask him on the floor of the Senate, what procedure is contemplated to ascertain these facts? Is the President to appoint a commission, one of whom perchance will be a physician, or what kind of testimony will he take? What is the machinery? I think that is a very important feature of the amendment.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, the inquiry of the Senator from Pennsylvania is a very proper and pertinent one. The amendment I have offered, as it now is, provides for no machinery for the ascertainment of the fact. I think it would be very wise if proper machinery were provided in the bill for the ascertainment of the fact or for advising the President before he finds the fact.

But I desired in my amendment to present clearly in the briefest possible way the difference between the authority granted to the President under my amendment and the authority granted to the President under the amendment of the Senator from Georgia. In the latter amendment, in my opinion, we would attempt to clothe the President with authority to retire a Federal judge for any reason that seemed to the President sufficient to remove him from public office. Under my proposal, and it is now accepted, as I understand it, the President can only appoint the new judge whose appointment in fact retires the old judge in the case of mental or physical ailments which disqualify the judge from the performance substantially of his duties.

I believe that any Federal judge of the country ought to be removed whenever physical or mental infirmities appear which prevent him from fairly and substantially executing the duties of his office. I think that is true without respect to either the age or the service of the judge.

As I remarked before when I had occasion to make some observations upon this bill in a former session, I believe it is within the power of Congress to provide a plan or process for the removal of Federal judges who have thus become incapacitated for the work for which they were appointed.

The amendment which I have proposed would be very greatly improved if the Senator from Pennsylvania or any other Senator were to offer an amendment creating some machinery or process for the ascertainment of this fact and for advice to the President, and I shall very gladly support such an amendment if it is offered.

Mr. PENROSE. One more inquiry and I will not interrupt the Senator any further. Would not the ascertainment of mental incapacity or physical incapacity be largely a matter for the medical profession to pass upon? A layman would hardly be able to determine a question which might confuse the alienists of the country.

Mr. CUMMINS. Sometimes mental incapacity or mental ailment is so obvious that the advice of an expert is not required. Sometimes it is so obscure and mysterious that it must be ascertained by one especially trained to that inquiry.

Mr. PENROSE. It would be well to have the illumination of the medical profession.

Mr. CUMMINS. I would be glad to see that added to the bill, but I am so anxious to rid the bill of its original fault, namely, an attempt to give a President the authority to retire a judge because the President did not like the judge, did not like the character of his opinions or the general tendency of his mind, that I have offered the amendment as it now appears.

I am quite willing to accept the correction or addition proposed by the Senator from Georgia. I think, however, it is only fair, Mr. President, to say that there is very grave question about the constitutionality of the bill even with this amendment. I repeat that I have no doubt about the power of Congress to prepare a procedure and enact a procedur that will remove without the intervention of an impeachment a judge who has become unable to perform judicial duties; but I doubt—and I expressed this doubt to the Senator from Georgia—I doubt very much whether we can commit the decision of that question to the President as an administrative or executive act. I suggest that to the Senator from Georgia for his consideration and for the consideration of other Members of the Senate.

Assuming that the amendment I have offered shall be adopted, we authorize the President to determine whether a given judge, by reason of physical or mental ailment, is unable to efficiently discharge the duties of his office. That we can create a tribunal for the decision of that fact I have no doubt, but I hesitate to affirm that we can authorize the Executive Officer of the Government to make that inquiry and reach that conclusion, and especially without providing any process through which the person who is accused or charged with either mental or physical ailment so as to disqualify him for the discharge of his duties shall be given a hearing.

It seems to me that before any tribunal, whether legislative or executive, can reach a conclusion of that sort so as to warrant the removal of a judge who has been appointed, during good behavior, there must be an opportunity for the person whose good behavior is questioned to be heard; and we have to assume that mental or physical incapacity falls within the term "good behavior," or is the equivalent of it at any rate. I believe that the person who is to be removed has a right to be heard before a judgment of that kind is entered against him, and that is the weakness of the bill as it is now.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Will the Senator allow me? This bill does not proceed at all upon the idea of judges being removed. It is based upon the theory that the judge is not removed, that it is a classification of work between the judges. If the judge was being removed, he would be left with no duties; he could not be assigned to work, and he would not draw his pay.

Mr. CUMMINS. I am aware of the view held by the Senator from Georgia with respect to that subject, but I am bound to conclude that it is an unsound view. I think the bill in substance removes the judge from office. I think it in substance denies him the right which he had when he received his commission to perform the ordinary customary duties of a judge, and that we can no more deprive him of that right than we could remove him entirely from his office. The Senator from Georgia and myself differ with regard to that particular phase of the matter. Apparently he does not agree with me that it is within the competency of Congress to remove or provide a plan for the removal of a Federal judge who has, by reason of mental or physical ailment, become incapacitated for the discharge of his duties without impeachment. I know that is a new field, but I have no question in my own mind respecting our power in that regard.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. If the Senator will allow me, I do agree with the Senator from Iowa. I think that the failure to discharge their duties could be considered judicial lack of good behavior, and that Congress would have the right, without impeachment, to provide a tribunal for such a hearing and remove the judge for failure properly to perform his duties and leave him without any compensation and without his office for the balance of his life. But I think that would be a harsh course. I prefer the kindlier course of not removing them, but of leaving them, after they have given a long service, their salaries the balance of their lives and using them to the extent of their retained capacity in the service of the Government.

Mr. CUMMINS. I am not proposing any drastic plan for the removal of judges who have become unable to do the work, although I have no hesitation in saying that I think the interests of the people and the welfare of the people require that all such judges shall be removed, whether they have been in office 10 years or no or whether they have passed 70 years or no. I think the people of this country are entitled to faithful, competent service from men who are appointed to judicial office precisely as they are entitled to such service from men who are appointed or selected for legislative or executive service; and I have hope that before long Congress will find time and inclination to take up that subject and provide some rational, reasonable, and just way of eliminating from our judicial system those judges, if there be any, who by misfortune or by fault have become unable to serve the people, but whose misfortune or fault is not sufficient to warrant an impeachment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment is adopted without objection.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, just a moment. I should like to ask the Senator from Iowa if he has looked up the definition of the word "ailment," and why he does not use the term "disability"?

Mr. CUMMINS. I rather think, Mr. President, that the Senator from Oregon has chosen a much better word than I did. The word "ailment" came to me instinctively, I know not why, but I would be very glad, if the Senator from Georgia and other Senators will consent——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I will be glad to join with the Senator.

Mr. CUMMINS. To use the word "disability" instead of "ailments."

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state his inquiry.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. What is the amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read it.

The SECRETARY. As now modified and accepted by the Senator from Georgia, strike out the words "if in his opinion the public good so requires, may," and after the words "the President" insert "if he finds that any such judge is unable to discharge efficiently all the duties of his office by reason of mental or physical disability of permanent character, shall," and so forth.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. That amendment is still pending, I understand.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment is still pending.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I desire to offer an amendment to it.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa will state it.

Mr. CUMMINS. I offered the amendment and accepted a suggestion from the Senator from Georgia. I do not understand that the Senator from Georgia has accepted the amendment; that is to say, it is the amendment which I have proposed, and not the amendment which the Senator from Georgia has proposed.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I stated that I was prepared to accept the amendment of the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. SMOOT. In lieu of the amendment offered by you?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. In lieu of the amendment which I offered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment as modified is now pending.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I offer the following amendment: I move to strike out the words "if he finds" and to insert in lieu of those words "whenever the Chief Justice of the United States shall certify."

Mr. SMOOT. Let it be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the amendment to the amendment.

The SECRETARY. In the proposed amendment strike out the words "if he finds," and, after the words "the President," insert "whenever the Chief Justice of the United States shall certify," so as to read:

Whenever the Chief Justice of the United States shall certify that any such judge is unable to discharge efficiently all the duties of the office by reason of mental or physical disability of permanent character, shall appoint—

And so forth.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, the purpose of the amendment is obvious. I think that this is a power that ought not to be vested at all, but certainly not entirely, in the executive branch of the Government. It is quite likely to be exercised in many cases from political motives. I do not mean by that to say that the President may consciously do that, but we all know that pressure will be brought to bear upon the President of the United States to make these appointments; and I am fearful that they may be made in many cases where they ought not to be made. Certainly there should be no objection to providing for a certification of this character, which will safeguard appointments against an abuse of the nature that I have indicated.

The Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States is in touch with all the business of the country; it is his duty sometimes to designate a judge to hold court temporarily where the business of the circuit requires it, so that he is obliged to know, and he does know as a matter of fact, far better than does the President the condition of business in the various circuits. I think certainly no harm can result, and a great deal of good is likely to result, if we provide, as a preliminary prerequisite to action of the President, that the Chief Justice of the United States shall certify to the condition of affairs. I do not think that would obviate the objections that I have heretofore urged to the bill, but I think it would modify the practical objections which I have made.

I doubt very much the validity of the provision, either in the form I have suggested it or in the form which it now takes in the bill. The Constitution of the United States provides in Article III:

The judicial power of the United States shall be vested in one Supreme Court and in such inferior courts as the Congress may from time to time ordain and establish. The judges, both of the supreme and inferior courts, shall hold their offices during good behavior, and shall, at stated times, receive for their services a compensation which shall not be diminished during their continuance in office.

The portion of that article that I call attention to particularly is the first sentence:

The judicial power of the United States shall be vested in one Supreme Court and in such inferior courts as the Congress may from time to time ordain and establish.

The power is expressly conferred by the Constitution of the United States upon Congress to "ordain and establish" these courts. It is, therefore, a legislative power and not an executive power to do that thing. The further provision that I have already read is that—

The judges, both of the supreme and inferior courts, shall hold their offices during good behavior—

And so on.

The Constitution of the United States, therefore, recognizes that the judge holds an office, and in the absence of a constitutional provision it is well established that the creation of an office is a legislative power and not an executive or a judicial power. But the Constitution itself confers in express terms that power upon Congress, and Congress, of course, has no power to delegate the authority which is vested in it by the Constitution.

I am aware of the fact that a good deal may be said, and a good deal has been said, in favor of the proposition that this does not constitute a delegation of the power, because, as it is urged, the law simply provides that upon the happening of an event the law itself goes into operation, and the President proceeds to fill the office. Nevertheless, what this bill does is, first, to authorize the President to create an office, because to provide for the appointment of a judge is to create an office. The President of the United States is authorized, first of all, to create an office, which is purely a legislative act and a legislative function, and then to proceed to fill it by appointment.

Heretofore Congress, whenever a condition of affairs has arisen such as is contemplated by this bill, has itself provided for the additional judgeship. We provided for it in the case that I have called attention to before, which arose in Maryland, where the judge of the district court of Maryland had reached the age of 70 years and past and was unable to discharge effectively the duties of the office. He himself requested that he might have additional help. He said that he was quite willing to do all that he was able to do, but that he was not able to discharge all of the duties of the office; that he was not able to hold court and to try all the cases that were brought in his court for trial. So he asked that another judgeship might be created, and expressed his willingness then to do all he could to assist, so long as he lived, in the trial of cases and in the discharge of his judicial functions. The Judiciary Committee of the Senate inquired into it and concluded that the situation was such as to warrant the passage of a law. It reported to the Senate a bill for that purpose, and the bill was passed by the Senate. By that bill the appointment of an additional judge was provided for, and the President was authorized to make the appointment.

Exactly the same thing was done in a case arising in the State of Georgia, when the distinguished Senator from that State, who is sponsor for this bill, introduced a bill providing for an additional judge in one of the districts there. The Judiciary Committee inquired into that case and concluded that we were warranted in creating that additional judgeship, and we created it. I undertake to say that whenever a proper case can be presented to Congress there never will be the slightest trouble in persuading Congress to pass similar legislation in the future.

Whether this legislation can be supported as constitutional or not, it amounts, in my judgment, to an abdication of the power of Congress; the devolving of a function which Congress ought itself to exercise upon the executive branch of the Government. In my judgment, Congress ought not to do that. Congress itself should maintain control of the situation. The responsible committees of Congress are quite as capable of determining whether or not in a given case the efficient administration of the business of the court requires an additional judge as is the President. We ought to maintain control of it, because it is a function that has been vested in us by the people of the United States.

We are creating altogether too many commissions and too many administrative bodies to carry out the powers of this body. We are getting lazy about our duties; we are devolving our responsibilities upon others, when we ought to discharge them ourselves. Hardly a session of Congress passes that we do not provide for one or more administrative bodies upon whom we devolve functions that we ourselves ought to discharge.

I think that there is grave doubt as to the validity of this provision even as it has now been amended. I call attention to what is said by Mr. Tucker in his work on the Constitution of the United States, volume 2, at page 736. He says:

The power to appoint to an office is executive; the power to create the office as the necessary and proper means for carrying into execution executive functions is a legislative power and clearly vested in Congress, in the coefficient clause so often referred to.

It is said that this bill lays down a standard; that it merely provides that upon the existence of a certain condition of affairs the President is then called upon to act; that the President does not make the law, but that he executes the law. It will be observed that the bill does not provide that when a state of facts exists this shall be done, but it provides that it shall be done when in the opinion of the President of the United States these facts exist. So, after all, whether the office is to be created or not depends upon a state of mind of the President; his mere opinion about the situation. No provision is made for an ascertainment of the facts.

I think it is preferable, if we are going to abdicate our power at all, to provide that some responsible judicial officer, like the Chief Justice, shall certify the facts, and that upon such certification the President shall act, than to allow it to be done upon the mere opinion of the President, which, as we all know, will not mean his individual opinion, but the opinion of some subordinate officer, like the Attorney General, or some Senator who may be interested in having an additional judge appointed.

Mr. President, I think this legislation is bad from a practical point of view, and I think it is of very doubtful constitutional validity. On both those grounds I intend to vote against it. So far as I am concerned, I do not intend to delay the action of the Senate any further, but I submit my amendment for the action of the Senate.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, I am opposed to the passage of this bill principally because, in effect, it is a surrender and an abandonment of one of the most important prerogatives of Congress and an attempt to impose upon the President of the United States duties and obligations that belong alone to Congress. This is, in effect, an attempt to create additional offices, a power that does not belong to the executive department of the Government, but one which rests entirely in the hands of the legislative department.

It is said by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] that it does not amount to the removal of a judge, but it is at least an enforced retirement from the duties of the office, which is, in effect, a removal.

I object to the legislation not only because of what I have already said but because, as a matter of policy, as a matter of wisdom, I think it is exceedingly inadvisable to vest in the executive department of the Government the power that is now proposed to be transferred to it. This is not an attempt, as I understand the bill, to act by Congress upon the happening of any particular event that may be specified in the bill itself, but it transfers absolutely to the President the right not only to investigate and determine the facts but to act in the matter upon his own opinion without any further action by Congress. I think that is exceedingly inadvisable, laying aside any question of constitutionality that may be involved in it.

For myself I believe that a provision of this kind is unconstitutional. I do not think Congress can abandon this duty that is imposed upon it by the Constitution and vest it in another department of the Government.

I have not been greatly impressed, Mr. President, by what has been so ably said by Senators about the ability of men who have passed the age of 70 years to perform the duties of a judge or of a United States Senator. We elderly gentlemen may flatter ourselves that we are just as able to perform duties of that kind now as we were 20 years ago, but I think most of us must admit that we have lost some of our vigor and our energy and our ability to prosecute continuously the work that is imposed upon us. There are exceptions. A few of the great men of this country have shown their ability to transact business and perform great mental feats after they have passed the age of 70 or even 80 years, and that is to some of us an astonishing fact; but, taking men on the average, a very great proportion of them have at the age of 70 years lost much of their vigor, physical and mental, much of their energy, and a great part of their ability to perform duties of that kind. We must all accept that fact.

In my judgment the best way to reach this question is to so amend the Constitution of the United States as to make the retirement of judges at 70 compulsory, and I believe that should be done. We would no doubt in that case lose the valuable services of some men who have passed that age, and who are competent to perform the services as ably and as energetically perhaps as they did in former years, but we would at the same time terminate the services of men who have ceased to be able to perform their duties as they should and relieve ourselves of the question that is now presenting itself to the Senate.

I have been of the opinion for a long time that retirement at 70 should be made compulsory. I said to one of the judges of the Federal court in my State who wrote me upon the subject that I did not believe in this kind of legislation, and I said to him, as I am saying to the Senate now, that I felt that judges should be compelled to retire at the age of 70, rather than to leave it to them to do so or not, as they pleased. There seems to be a sort of pride on the part of judges nowadays to hold on to the office as long as it is possible for them to do so. They are striving to make a record for a longer term of service than somebody who has gone before them has made. That is not a very excellent reason for a judge remaining in office.

I am not saying this because of conditions that exist in my own State. We have there two judges, and perhaps more, who have passed the retiring age, but, so far as those two are concerned, I have heard no complaint that they are not performing their duties satisfactorily. They are men of the highest ability and, I think, are still performing the duties of their office promptly and ably. So it is not a personal matter with me at all, and not a matter that I am interested in any more than anyone else; but on general principles I think it would be to the interest of the public that these retirements were made compulsory at the age of 70 rather than voluntary.

So far as this attempt to meet that situation is concerned, I deplore it. I think it is an unfortunate kind of legislation. I might go a little further and say that I think it is vicious legislation to attempt to remove judges from their positions in this way. There should be some other matter taken into consideration in determining whether a district judge should be displaced and a new judge appointed besides that of his disability. There are districts in this country where there is very little work to be done by the Federal judge. We have provisions of law now by which one judge may be transferred to another district and perform the duties there and the work that the resident judge is unable to do, whereby his work may be performed by some other judge who is, so to speak, detailed for that purpose. Wherever that condition exists certainly the President ought not to remove the judge and create an additional office at the expense of the people, because under present provisions of law his place can be supplied and his work can be done without an additional judge being appointed. I apprehend that that is so in most cases where disability exists on the part of resident judges. The provisions that are now in existence would enable the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court or other authorities provided for to supply these places without additional judges being appointed. In addition to that, the power rests in Congress at any time in any given case to provide for the appointment of an additional judge if that is necessary.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, in line with what the Senator is saying, is it not a fact that there are now five circuit judges heretofore appointed members of the Court of Commerce who, that court having been abolished, are not assigned to any circuit, but may be assigned from time to time as the business may require to any particular circuit?

Mr. WORKS. I am not able to say now just what the conditions are respecting those judges. Of course, when the Commerce Court was abolished they were left without any assignments. Whether they have been assigned since that time or not I am not able to say.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. They have been assigned and are doing the work of the court and are holding court, but they may be assigned to other circuits as the need arises.

Mr. WORKS. Oh, certainly, that may be done.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. They are not permanently assigned.

Mr. WORKS. Therefore we have five additional judges who may now be used to supply the places of judges who may be laboring under disabilities. I am not going to take up the time of the Senate in discussing this matter at any length. The legal features of it have been very thoroughly discussed, and I only rose for the purpose of giving my own reasons for opposing the enactment of the bill.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, it seems to me not only that this proposed legislation is in opposition to the letter and spirit of the Constitution, but that it is a very dangerous and, if I may use the term, vicious effort to evade the Constitution. I will not discuss the constitutionality of it, for that has been discussed, except as to one thought which has not yet been touched upon.

The Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] contends that under this bill judges are not removed. In the last analysis the logic of his position is that the President is authorized under this bill to designate the jurisdiction of judges who still hold office and draw the salary of the office; that he can determine what kind of business shall be performed by such judges. That determination is just as absolutely a legislative question as is the creation of the office in the first instance. So, whether it be termed the termination of the office or merely vesting the President with the power to say what class of business shall be transacted by a judge, one is just as objectionable under the Constitution as the other.

My next objection to the measure is this: Ordinarily if we pass an act which violates the spirit and letter of the Constitution, it is a very easy matter to test that question in the courts, but it is a well-settled rule of law that the act of an officer exercising the functions of an office, claiming to hold office, and being de facto the officer, can not be questioned collaterally, and it would necessitate a direct proceeding by the Attorney General against the man who was appointed under this law. Of course no Attorney General, at least none in harmony with the administration in power, would ever bring quo warranto proceedings against a man appointed by his superior, the Executive. So, in this instance, in my opinion, we are violating the Constitution in such a way that the question can not fairly be tested; and for the Congress of the United States to set the example of evading not only the letter but the spirit of the Constitution, it seems to me is violative of the very spirit of our oaths and the spirit of our function here as legislators.

The remedy for the situation complained of is simple, and has been applied here time and time again. I am inclined to think we have been swift to create new judgeships rather than subject to the criticism that we have been slow to supply deficiencies where it was necessary to supply them; and, while I am not going to try to debate the bill in any sense or take up the time of the Senate, it seems to me it is one of those cases where there is a more far-reaching violation of the letter and spirit of the Constitution than in much of the legislation which we may enact where we are somewhat in doubt as to its ultimate validity.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I will not take up as much time as I originally intended. The amendment offered by the senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] improves the bill, and, if the Senator from Georgia would feel constrained to accept the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND], I would announce that I would vote for the bill.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I will not accept that amendment. I think that it would utterly destroy the value of the bill. I do not think it is the business of the Chief Justice. I am opposed to that amendment.

Mr. SHERMAN. That amendment keeps the judiciary and judicial assignments within the power of its own members. The criticism offered by the Senator——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. If the Senator will pardon me, the Chief Justice has no machinery to make investigations of this subject. Of course, the President would get his information largely from the Department of Justice, which has the machinery for gathering the information. I do not think it is within the proper province of the Chief Justice, and I shall hope that the amendment of the Senator from Utah will be defeated.

Mr. SHERMAN. The proposal embodied in the amendment of the Senator from Utah so nearly follows the existing practice in providing for the emergencies mentioned by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] and others, that there is no dislocation of the judicial procedure. If the volume of business in a circuit can not be adequately cared for by the occupants of the judicial office in that circuit, help is assigned. A judge of some one of the nine circuits, which the Supreme Court Justices habitually attend, the assignment being made by the Supreme Court, is designated for the purpose of relieving the absence of judicial talent.

I do not want at any great length to follow out the argument in which I was engaged at the expiration of the morning hour.

I want to add that in one of the several constitutions of the French Republic, framed, I think, in 1848, provision was made for two bodies in their legislative assembly. One is the Chamber of Deputies, which corresponds to the lower House of Congress, and the other, which more nearly corresponds to our Senate, is referred to as the "Council of the Ancients." That is almost a literal translation from the French, according to the inquiries I have made of those who understand that tongue. The disposition of the Federal judges to adhere to office is not peculiar to them. I have discovered traces of that in other occupants of public office. There are lingering vestiges in this body, Mr. President, of a studied purpose deliberately to hold office just as long as constituencies will permit.

Now, I have no ambition myself to emulate my predecessor, who sat in this Chamber 30 years. I hope that my Creator will deliver me from any such prolonged labor if for any reason my life should be prolonged to 86 years. I do not want to serve that long in any public office. But it is no peculiarity of circuit and district judges that they hold on and try to perform judicial service. They are appointed for life, or during good behavior. They are appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate. Ordinarily they can only be removed upon charges—impeachment—tried in the Senate. That is the method of removal. I wish it were practicable to adopt some amendment to the Constitution by which judges could be removed a little more expeditiously than they are now. If they could be removed by an address passed by a mere majority of both the House and the Senate, I think no injustice would be done. We pass upon questions of much greater moment than the removal of a district judge here every day, and do it by a mere majority of a quorum of 49 Senators or more. Where 25 Senators can pass upon matters of national gravity simply by the action of a mere majority of a quorum, it seems to me that there could be no serious objection to permitting the removal of a judge by an address, something like the method that, as I now remember, can be pursued in the State of Massachusetts. There judicial officers can be removed upon a majority vote by the passage of a joint resolution of the house and the senate. The governor may then remove, within his jurisdiction, certain officers enumerated, so that a majority is able to obtain action very expeditiously.

The criticism offered by the Senator from Utah appeals very strongly to my understanding of the conditions. It puts it in the power of the President to act on his opinion, limited only by the dispatch of the judicial business, or, in the first wording of the bill, as originally introduced, "as the public good may require." That leaves it to his opinion. He is not required even to make an investigation so as to produce evidence in the ordinary acceptation of the term. He may act upon correspondence, upon telegrams, upon unsworn statements of persons who purport to have knowledge of the conditions attending the judicial service in the district in question. The opinion of the President is a mutable thing. It is repeatedly illustrated in the lives of all Executives how frequently they change their opinions. The present occupant of the office of Chief Executive has no preeminent distinction in that line, because other Presidents have changed their minds, and I am making no invidious comparison in that regard; but it is an unwise delegation of congressional authority into the hands of the Chief Magistrate to permit him to remove a judge when in his opinion the public good requires, or when the dispatch of judicial business requires.

In no distant day, Mr. President, no far-away age, I remember that a court presided over by an impartial and learned Federal judge in the city of Indianapolis, Ind., tried a case. I remember the opinion that he delivered. He said, in the disposition of the case finally on a legal question which disposed of the case, that persons had read the Constitution and the history of this country to little purpose if they believed a man might be arrested in a foreign jurisdiction and brought under the law from his home into a strange jurisdiction, and there tried for an alleged offense; and he proceeded with the opinion and discharged the defendant. That was in a case involving the freedom of the press, and the trial of a defendant charged with abusing the power lodged in the free press of the country, taking him away into some other part of the country and trying him, taking away from him the right that has existed from the beginning of this Government—a right which the author of the Declaration of Independence thought proper to incorporate in one of the clauses condemning King George, that he had taken persons across seas to be tried for pretended offenses. Under the claim made it would have been entirely possible to take men from the Philippine Islands, from Porto Rico, or any other of our insular possessions, and bring them into the United States and try them for offenses committed in the islands.

The case referred to was one in which an editor of a newspaper was arrested and brought to Indianapolis for trial for statements made in a newspaper published in another jurisdiction outside of the Indiana district, simply because the newspaper containing the alleged libelous charge was sold from a news stand in that foreign jurisdiction. Men were arrested, as I remember now, in the city of Washington and taken to Indianapolis and placed upon trial. From the beginning, as suggested, defendants have had a right to be tried in the vicinity, or in the vicinage, the place, the locality—in other words, as the legal phrase runs, the venue to be laid in the country where the offense is committed. This judge held that it must be at the home office of the newspaper where the alleged libel is originally uttered, where the offense is committed; that where the home office of the newspaper provides a venue in which he shall be tried, there only can he be indicted and tried for criminal libel; that a defendant can not be taken out of that jurisdiction into some foreign jurisdiction and tried.

Now, that was done, and I remember quite well the course that was taken by the President of the United States at that time, when Judge Anderson ruled, as I think, in accordance with immemorial precedent, in accordance with the law of the land from the day of the Declaration of Independence to the last adjudicated case upon that subject; ruled justly, as any other just judge might have done, even under the pressure brought to bear upon him on that sort of a ruling under this bill. As soon as he reached the age of 70 years, under this bill he could have been removed from the bench, his judicial functions stripped from him, his duty to perform judicial service entirely taken away, only the shell of a judge remaining, simply because the President, in his opinion, might not have liked that decision.

I remember that the President who was occupying the Chief Magistrate's office at that time proceeded to criticize mercilessly that ruling of the judge, although there was not a lawyer in the United States of any respectability or standing who did not know that Judge Anderson's decision was the law of the land and had been the law from the beginning of this Republic. Any other would be the grossest form of tyranny. It would justify civil revolution to take a man out of his jurisdiction, because he edited a paper in Washington, and take him out to California, where a copy was sold, and try him on the Pacific coast. It would put an end to the liberty of the press in this country. Still, under this bill some President in some not distant age from now might take a judge off the bench, or substantially strip him of his judicial duties, merely because he declared that to be the law. I remember that decision appealed to every lawyer in the country because of its justice.

I do not want to take up any more time than I am obliged to, Mr. President. I wish to submit the remaining part of the article prepared by Prof. Fisher, of Yale University, and have it published entire in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. It is not a lengthy document, and I will not read it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. SHERMAN. And with these observations I will not take more of the time of the Senate.

The matter above referred to is as follows:

[Reprinted from quarterly publications of the American Statistical Association, March, 1916.]

THE MORTALITY OF OUR PUBLIC MEN—BEING A STUDY OF THE MORTALITY OF THE PRESIDENTS, VICE PRESIDENTS, SENATORS, AND REPRESENTATIVES OF THE UNITED STATES COMPARED WITH INSURED LIVES AND OTHERS.

(Paper presented at the annual meeting of the American Statistical Association, Washington, D. C., Dec. 29, 1915.)

[By Irving Fisher, professor of political economy, Yale University, chairman of the hygiene reference board of the Life Extension Institute.]

This paper is primarily a study of the mortality of the Senators and Representatives of the United States. As preliminary to this study, however, we first record the facts as to the longevity of the Presidents and Vice Presidents of the United States. The number of cases in the last two groups is too few, of course, to enable us to make any safe statistical generalizations. The following table gives the facts individually as to our Presidents:

Longevity of Presidents.

[1] The "American experience table of mortality" was first published in 1868. It was constructed by Sheppard Homans, principally from the experience of the Mutual Life Insurance Co. of New York. It has been, for a long time, the common standard for life insurance companies' calculations and for statistical comparisons, although it represents a heavier mortality than that of present insurance experience.

The longevity of each President is reckoned from the date of inauguration—that is, from the time of his first being President. Thus, Washington became President at 57 years of age, when the "expectation" of life, according to the American experience table, was 16 years. He actually lived, however, only 11 years instead of the 16. That is, he lived only eleven-sixteenths, or 69 per cent, of his expectation. John Adams, on the other hand, lived after inauguration 29 years, which was 2.23 times his expectation of 13 years.

Greatest longevity: John Adams (223), Madison (180), Jefferson (167), J. Q. Adams (153), Van Buren (139), Jackson (123), and Fillmore (120).

Least longevity: Harrison (the first) (1), Garfield (2), Taylor (8), Polk (18), Lincoln (21), McKinley (22), and Arthur (25).

The long-lived Presidents all belonged to the first half of the list and the majority of the short-lived ones belonged to the second half. These include the three assassinated Presidents—Lincoln, Garfield, and McKinley. If we group these deceased Presidents under four successive periods, approximately equal, we have the following table, in which the Vice Presidents are also included:

Ratio (per cent) of actual to expected longevity beyond inauguration.

	Presidents.	Vice Presidents.	Presidents.	Vice Presidents.
1st period (4 Presidents, 5 Vice Presidents)	156	137	156	100
2d period (8 Presidents, 7 Vice Presidents)	84	94	84	76
3d period (7 Presidents, 7 Vice Presidents)	75	67	84	69
4th period (5 Presidents, 5 VicePresidents)	45	42	68	44
Total	82	84	93	70

The table shows that the longevity of our Presidents, omitting the three still living, is only 82 per cent of that "expected" according to the table, which in turn is less than that among insured lives of the present time. Even if we omit the assassinated Presidents—Lincoln, Garfield, and McKinley—the longevity of the remainder is still only 93 per cent of that expected by the American experience table and less than two-thirds the expectation of the insured lives of to-day. We note also that the longevity of our Presidents seems to be diminishing with the increasing complexity of modern life in Washington. Their average longevity in the four successive periods was 156, 84, 75, and 45 per cent, respectively, or, omitting the assassinated Presidents, 156, 84, 84, and 68 per cent. We find the same apparent tendency among the Vice Presidents. It is also interesting to note that the Vice Presidents seem to live out a smaller fraction of their expectations than the Presidents, excluding the influence of assassinations. This fact (if it be a significant fact rather than an accidental incident in so small a number of lives) would suggest that the official social and convivial life at Washington is a greater life shortener than the heavy responsibilities of office.

The five presidents of Yale University for substantially the same period as that of the above table show a longevity equal to 137 per cent of their expectations. The consistent conformity of all the results to the hypothesis that a "simple" life is a long life and that a "complex" life is a short one is at least striking.

But, as already emphasized, the number of lives in all three lists—only 50 in all, excluding duplications—is so small that any statistical conclusions whatever, without confirmatory evidence, would be dangerous.

We turn now from these preliminary remarks on presidential and vice presidential lives to the lives of our Congressmen—Senators and Representatives. Here fortunately we have enough lives—about 7,500—to make the results of undoubted significance.

In this study I have been fortunate in having the assistance of the New York Life Insurance Co., to which I am indebted for its courtesy in permitting the clerical work to be done in its offices. I am also greatly indebted to Mr. Arthur Hunter, its actuary, for his assistance and criticism at every stage of the work.

The method employed has not been that of expected longevity used above, but that of expected mortality. This makes it possible to include the influence of the several thousand lives of the Congressmen still living. The mortality of the American experience table was used here also as a standard of comparison or measuring rod. Although, as already stated, this early table does not agree with the mortality experienced at present, either by the insurance companies of to-day (modern experience averages about 25 per cent less than the American experience table; the contrast is more marked for the earlier than for the older ages) or among the general public, it still serves as a convenient basis in terms of which any actual mortality may be expressed in percentages. Thus if for a particular year of age the actual death rate is half the death rate expected for that particular year of age according to the American experience table, and if the same were true for each other year of age, we would say that the actual mortality is half of the expected. Usually, of course, the ratios of actual to expected death rates will be somewhat different for different years of age. In that case an average of the different ratios, duly weighted, is struck. To take a specific example, we find that out of 398 Congressmen entering the 15 Congresses ending March 3, 1911, and being 45 to 49 years of age on entering, the actual number who died in the second year after entering was 7 and the number expected to die out of 398 was, according to the American experience table, 4.94. Therefore the ratio of actual to expected deaths in this second year was 7÷4.94=1.41, or 141 per cent. In the same way the number actually dying in the tenth year out of 275 then surviving was 3, as against 5.47 expected out of 275. The ratio of actual to expected is, in this case, 3÷5.47, or 55 per cent. In this same way the actual and expected deaths are taken not only for the second and tenth years but for each year involved until all have passed from observation, either by death or by surviving to March 3, 1912, at which date all observations closed. The average ratio for all these years is then found by dividing the total deaths, 159, by the total of the expected, 137, giving 159÷137=1.16, or 116 per cent, as the ratio of actual to expected for the group of Congressmen in the entire category considered.

The chief data for this investigation were obtained from the Biographical Congressional Directory, and the necessary facts relating to nearly 7,500 Congressmen were entered upon individual cards. As the congressional year dates from March 4, it was found convenient to carry the observations up to March 3, 1912, at which point they were closed. Except for the cases mentioned below, where the record was not complete, the investigation covered the entire history from date of entering Congress until death or until March 3, 1912. The date of birth was required in order to determine the age on first entering Congress. For some Congressmen this information was not given in the directory. The number of such cases was small—785—and sufficient accuracy was obtained by assuming that they entered at an average age. In other cases the directory did not trace the history of the Congressman after his retirement from Congress. These cases were not large in number and were included in the investigation from the date of first entering Congress to the date of last retirement from Congress.

In order to discover the effect of congressional life on mortality the following table was constructed:

Showing the mortality soon after entering Congress and later, divided in all into five periods of life, namely, a period of 2 years covering the (first) congressional term, a period of 8 years, the second decade after entering, the third decade, and the remainder of life.

[All Congresses, ending Mar. 3, 1911.]

Number of years elapsed since first entering Congress.	Actual deaths.	Expected deaths.	Ratio of actual to expected deaths.
			Per cent.
1–2	114	194.78	59
3–10	824	833.76	99
11–20	1,329	1,247.84	107
21–30	1,360	1,344.67	101
31 and over	1,506	2,028.62	74

The above table shows strikingly that Congressmen had a low mortality immediately after entering Congress, but a greatly increased mortality as the years passed by, reaching the maximum in the second decade after entering Congress, after which there was a decrease. In the first period, of two years, the mortality is only a little over half of the expected by the American Experience Table and somewhat less than the expected if more modern tables had been used. After two years (or one congressional term) it almost reaches, and during substantially the next three decades exceeds, the expected, and after that time it falls back to three-fourths of the expected.

These figures of themselves give no proof, of course, of what causes are at work. They, however, fit into the following hypotheses: (1) Congressmen are a select group having unusual vitality, and therefore a low mortality at the outset; (2) congressional life, with its responsibilities, heckling, excitements, worries, indoor and sedentary life, late hours, dining, wining, and other unhygienic conditions, makes a severe drain on this vitality, showing itself in a gradually increasing mortality; and (3) some Congressmen contrive to avoid or to correct these unhygienic conditions and cause a partial return toward the original low mortality after their less careful colleagues have died. At any rate the cardinal fact is clear that some cause or causes connected with entering Congress tends to kill Congressmen. They enter with more than the average vitality and after a single term of office possess less than the average vitality.

The same conclusion, namely, that congressional life sets, for some cause, a killing pace, is drawn from the following table:

Mortality of Congressmen according to length of service, namely, (a) 6 years or less, (b) more than 6 years in public service.[1]

[Fifteen Congresses, ending Mar. 3, 1911.]

Length of service.	Age on retirement from Congress.
	All ages.	Under 50.	50–59.	60 and over.
6 years and under	97	112	103	74
Over 6 years	120	103	124	124

[1] This investigation is confined to the group of 15 Congresses ending in 1911. Public service includes not only service in Congress but also any subsequent service as President or Vice President of the United States, Cabinet officer, governor of a State or ambassador to a foreign country, and similar positions under the Southern Confederacy. For this study Congressmen were entered in the investigation after the number of years in public service pertaining to each had been completed. Thus the mortality comparisons for a man who entered Congress in 1880 and had 25 years of public service ending 1905 began with 1905 and not with 1880.

The above table shows that, in general, those who have been in public service the longer time have a mortality of 120 per cent, as compared with 97 per cent for those who have served the shorter time. This contrast is the more marked the older the men when retiring from Congress. Among those retiring at 60 years of age or older the ones who keep in public service the longer show a mortality of 124 per cent, as contrasted with 74 per cent for those who have served the shorter time. Thus the killing pace of public life is more killing to the older men than to the younger. (In fact, as the first column shows, for those retiring before the age of 50 the long-service men show a slightly lower mortality than the short-service men. This may be the effect of selection. It is probable that in general only the hardier men either can or will choose a long career of public service. Everyone knows that the strain of professional life often forces men to retire; some of these men undoubtedly have died soon afterwards. The existence of this selective influence emphasizes all the more the main conclusion that the longer the public service the greater the mortality. Moreover, somewhat apart from voluntary withdrawal from an extended public career on the part of those who find they can not keep the pace, the contrast between the mortalities of the two groups would be still greater if there were any way of transferring from the shorter-service group to the longer-service group those who died before the six years were up, but who, had they lived, would have been classified in the long-term group.)

The following table (by years elapsed since retirement instead of by ages of Congressmen) was made to throw further light on the subject. It is confined to the last fourth of our Congresses.

Fifteen Congresses ending Mar. 3, 1911, observed from date of last retirement from Congress.

(Ratio (per cent) of actual to expected deaths.)

Length of public service.	Number of years from retirement.
	1–10.	Over 10.
6 years and under	105	89
Over 6 years	128	104

The above table shows the same contrast—higher mortality for the men who served over six years as compared with those who served less, i. e., 128 per cent as contrasted with 105 per cent, and also 104 per cent as contrasted with 89 per cent. Incidentally, the table also shows that the adverse influence of public life is, as might be expected, felt mostly soon after retirement.

In the first decade after retirement the mortality is much higher than in the next decade, as a comparison of the two columns shows. This may be due largely to the fact that many retire on account of ill health, while others may lose health as a consequence of defeat. Again, as already observed, those who survive the first 10 years after retirement are presumably those who have been able to avoid or counteract the worries and bad hygiene which have killed off their colleagues. (The reason why the first table giving the mortality according to time elapsing since entering Congress shows a decided fall in mortality only after the 30-year mark, while this table shows a decided fall after the 10-year mark, is clear, viz, in the last table the years are reckoned from a later date than the first, i. e., from time of retirement instead of from time of entrance. In the former table those in the second and even the third decade after entering Congress include many who had not yet retired.)

Thus far we have considered Congressmen as a single group. But the same conclusions apply separately to different periods in our national history, as the following table shows:

Ratio (per cent) of actual to expected deaths.

Number of years elapsed since first entering Congress.	Group of Congresses ending—				All combined.
	1821	1851	1881	1911
1–10	94	112	82	85	91
11–20	119	116	97	102	107
21–30	115	110	92	86	101
31 and over	85	85	59	.....	74

The first group consists of the Continental Congresses and the first 16 regular Congresses ending with March 3, 1821, and the other three groups, each of 15 Congresses, ending, respectively, March 3, 1851, 1881, and 1911. The individual cases were classified in the four groups according to the date of first entering Congress. It will be observed by following the eye down any one of the columns of the table that the mortality always rises from the first to the second decade after entering Congress and falls thereafter, especially from the third to the fourth decades.

The above table also affords an opportunity to compare one historical period with another, if the eye is run through it horizontally instead of vertically. The most striking results of such comparisons are the lower mortality of the last two groups of Congresses as compared with the first two. The low mortality of the third group seems especially remarkable.

For historical comparison, however, the best data are those in which the mortality is presented by the attained ages of the Congressmen, as in the following table, which for the present purpose should be read vertically:

Ratio (per cent) of actual to expected deaths by attained ages.

Congresses.	All.	Under 40.	40–49	50–59.	60 and over.
Continental Congresses and 16 regular Congresses ending Mar. 3, 1821	100	82	121	143	91
15 Congresses ending—
Mar. 3, 1851	100	114	133	135	91
Mar. 3, 1881	79	110	103	97	74
Mar. 3, 1911	92	89	85	98	91

In this table we note: (1) That, in general, there has been an improvement in mortality from the earliest period of our history to modern times, the first two groups showing 100 per cent each and the last two 79 and 92, respectively; (2) that for the oldest age group—those dying over 60 years of age—there has been, generally speaking, no improvement, the figures being 91, 91, 74, and 91 per cent; (3) that the Congresses of the third period of our history had an exceptionally low mortality, especially for the older ages.

It seems difficult to account for the exceptionally low mortality in the group of Congresses from 1851 to 1881. Probably there are several reasons, such as: (1) The temporary withdrawal (about 1861–67) of the southern contingent of Congressmen because of the Civil War (the insurance companies have experienced a higher mortality in the South than in other sections of the country and the statistics given below show the same contrast for Congressmen); (2) the stricter standard of living which prevailed during war time; (3) the inclusion in Congress of a larger proportion of men of "plain living and high thinking" during the period of and following the Civil War. The last-named factor may account for the special superiority of the Congresses of the third period in respect to the older ages at which time the "wear and tear" diseases chiefly enter into mortality.

As has been previously stated, the expected deaths in the tables of this paper have been calculated by the American Experience table, which table shows a much higher death rate than is experienced by American insured persons at the present time. For instance, the present ratio of actual to expected deaths among the insurance companies of this country is about 75 per cent of the American Experience table. Policyholders, however, have passed a medical examination, which is not the case with Congressmen. It is necessary, therefore, to turn to some other records in order to determine approximately what relationship to the American Experience Table the mortality among Congressmen should have. In the Transactions of the Actuarial Society, Volume X, there appears an analysis by Mr. E. B. Morris of the mortality experienced among Yale graduates. (The figures of Mr. Morris are, so far as I know, the only figures for any representative class of the population extending continuously from the eighteenth century through the nineteenth.)

In order that a more detailed comparison with the mortality experience of Yale graduates may be made, the following tables have been prepared.

They show the mortality of Congressmen and the mortality of Yale graduates as compared with the American Experience Table.

Ratio (per cent) of actual to expected deaths.

Groups.	Attained ages.
	All ages.	Under 40.	40–49.	50–59.	60 and over.
31 Congresses ending Mar. 3, 1851	100	98	128	139	91
Yale graduates 1792 to 1849 of the academic department	86	125	115	92	75

Ratio (per cent) of actual to expected deaths.

Groups.	Attained ages.
	All ages.	Under 40.	40–49.	50–59.	60 and over.
30 Congresses ending Mar. 3, 1911	82	101	96	98	77
Yale graduates 1850 to 1900 of the academic department, graduates 1852 to 1901 of Sheffield Scientific School, and graduates 1843 to 1901 of law school	76	70	81	79	85

The lower mortality of the Yale graduates is clearly brought out in the foregoing comparison. (The Yale graduates of the medical school have not been included in the above tables. The experience in regard to these graduates had not been subdivided in the form desired for the above comparison. Although the mortality among medical graduates was somewhat higher than among the other graduates, the relative number of the medical graduates being small, their exclusion does not sensibly affect the comparison.)

As to historical trends we may note such for the mortality of Yale graduates by taking the historical groups worked out by Mr. Morris. These extend back of our national history. The chief groups are three, covering substantially the eighteenth century and the two halves of the nineteenth in the following divisions: (1) The graduates, 1701–91; (2) the graduates of the academic department, 1792–1849; (3) the graduates of the academic department, 1850–1900; the graduates of the Sheffield Scientific School, 1852–1901; and the graduates of the law school, 1843–1901.

The ratios of actual to expected deaths (according to the American Experience table) for these three groups were: 94, 86, and 76 per cent, respectively. It is evident from these figures that there has been a continuous improvement in mortality, as was the case among Congressmen. We also note for Yale graduates that there is an improvement as between the two periods for all ages except "60 and over" for which, on the contrary, there has been an increase of mortality, namely, from 75 to 85 per cent. (Morris's figures show, for the higher ages (above 55), a decided retrogression. The mortalities for ages over 45 [Dates exact for academic department and approximate for others.] were:)

	Ages.
	46–55.	56–65.	66–75.	76 and older.
1825–1849	98	74	75	70
1850–1874	60	81	86	93
1875–1900	88	211	.....	.....

The recent cessation of improvement in middle-age mortality and in some cases even the increase of mortality after middle age is a fact we encounter at almost every turn. It is even observable in insured lives in spite of improvements in the rigor of medical selection, especially for the older ages (see Eugene L. Fisk, M. D., "Force of Adverse Selection among Entrants at the Extremes of Life," Proceedings Assoc. Life Ins. Med. Directors, Oct. 24, 1907, pp. 129–170) and in the classes constituting policyholders. The great medico-actuarial investigation conducted under Mr. Arthur Hunter showed that mortality at ages 60 and over "has shown no distinct improvement." For the three successive periods, 1885–1892, 1893–1900, 1901–1908, the figures were 91, 98, 93 (based on a special table of mortality). (See Medico-Actuarial Mortality Investigation, Vol. I, Actuarial Society, New York, 1912.) The tendency is, in fact, less observable among congressional lives than in other quarters, owing probably to the fact that public men are to-day held more strictly to account for their personal conduct than formerly, when laxity of various kinds was condoned.

I close this paper by a geographic comparison of Congressmen from the southern, eastern, and western sections of the United States. (In the Southern States were included Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Kentucky, Tennessee, Alabama, Mississippi, Arkansas, Louisiana, Oklahoma, and Texas. The Eastern States for this purpose were considered to be Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Connecticut, New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Michigan, Wisconsin, Delaware, Maryland, West Virginia, and the District of Columbia. The remaining States were classified as western.)

The results of this investigation, based upon the group of 15 Congresses ending in 1911, are as follows:

Ratio (per cent) of actual to expected deaths.

Southern	100
Eastern	93
Western	80
All States	92

The foregoing is in conformity with the experience of insurance companies, namely, that the Southern States have the highest mortality and the Western States the lowest, while the Eastern States represent about the average mortality throughout the United States.

The results of this investigation may be summarized in the following statistical generalizations:

1. The mortality of Congressmen for the two years immediately after entering Congress has been low, being very much lower than that of the American experience table and materially lower than the mortality of Yale graduates from 1792 on.

2. The mortality of Congressmen in the next eight years of life was much higher, being about equal to that of the American experience table and above the mortality of Yale graduates. Again, their mortality in the next decade was still higher.

3. Those Congressmen surviving beyond the second decade showed, in turn, a much lower mortality.

4. Those Congressmen whose public service was only six years or less showed a materially lower mortality than those whose public service extended beyond six years.

5. The mortality of our modern Congressmen is in general lower than that of their predecessors.

6. This historical improvement in congressional mortality is greatest for the younger ages—in accordance with the observations on mortality of the general population.

7. For the ages "60 and above" there has been no improvement. This is also in accordance with observations on the mortality of the general population.

8. The congressional mortality during and soon after the Civil War was exceptionally low.

9. This low mortality for the Civil War period was especially marked for the older ages.

10. The last five conclusions (as to historical changes in mortality) are, in general, consonant with the results of the investigations of Mr. E. B. Morris for Yale graduates. (In the case of Yale graduates the mortality at older ages has not only not improved but has grown worse.)

11. Comparing the mortality of southern, eastern, and western Congressmen we find that of the southerners was the highest and that of the westerners the lowest, the figures being 100, 93, and 80 per cent for the South, East, and West, respectively.

In the above generalizations no mention has been made of the mortality of Presidents and Vice Presidents. This seems to be high and to show a consistent progressive change for the worse; but the number of lives available is so small, compared with the number of Congressmen considered, as scarcely to justify independent generalizations.

The foregoing generalizations merely give the facts as we find them, without reference to their interpretation. The facts may seem to different people capable of different interpretations. My own interpretation is one into which all the facts fit perfectly and which is also in tune with the results of E. B. Morris's investigations for Yale graduates and other studies, such as certain investigations of the United States Census and of the Life Extension Institute. This interpretation is as follows:

(a) Presidents, Vice Presidents, and Congressmen are a select group endowed at the outset with unusual vitality.

(b) The vitality of most of them is severely taxed and materially reduced by the heavy responsibilities and bad personal hygiene incident to a public career.

(c) A minority escape the worst of these conditions and retain the major part of their natural endowment of vitality.

(d) Bad hygiene has been more destructive than the weight of responsibility. This conclusion is suggested by the fact that the Vice Presidents suffer a greater curtailment of life than the Presidents, although Vice Presidents have far less responsibility but spend much more time in Washington social life than the Presidents. It is also suggested by the fact that the Civil War period, with its greater weight of responsibility but more simple living, showed a lower mortality than the periods preceding and following, with less weight of responsibility, but less simple living.

(e) Historically there has been a progressive decrease in those causes of death consisting of infections which kill their victims chiefly at the earlier ages, but a progressive change for the worse in those causes of death consisting of the wear and tear diseases (or degenerative diseases) which kill their victims chiefly at the later years. These opposite changes in the infectious and degenerative diseases would explain the improvement in mortality at the earlier ages and, on the other hand, the nonimprovement (and in the case of the Yale graduates even positive retrogression) in the mortality at the older ages; again they would explain the marked exceptionality of the older ages in the Civil War period; for if it was plain living which explained the low mortality of that period we should expect the most marked influence of this factor to appear, just as it does, at the older ages at which the wear and tear mortality is chiefly registered.

(f) The chief causes of wear and tear on the lives of Congressmen are the same as those applying to modern convivial social life in general; they are the causes emphasized by the Life Extension Institute which, through its hygiene reference board of hygienists and scientists, has described these causes in its recent handbook How to Live. The chief causes emphasized are indoor and sedentary living, a crouching, cramping posture, late dinners, overeating, especially of nitrogenous foods, such as meat and eggs, overconcentration or lack of bulk in diet, hasty eating, constipation, irregular hours, lack of sleep, worry, and the use of drugs, especially narcotics like alcohol and tobacco. In short, the chief reasons why Congressmen shorten their lives are avoidable, being due, not so much to their work as to the kind of life into which their work leads them.

The damage to vitality which we find from public life is not, therefore, put forward as an argument against entering public service; nor will a knowledge of the facts probably tend in that direction, certainly not among those who place public interests above personal interests, as every public man should. But knowledge is power and a knowledge of the facts should enable us to protect our public men or enable them to protect themselves, and to do so in the public interest. This can be accomplished by better general health conditions in the country and its Capital, by better health customs and habits, by better health ideals, and by a more systematic application of the imperfect ideals already existing.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND] to the amendment of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Bankhead	Hollis	Nelson	Smith, Ariz.
Brandegee	Hughes	Norris	Smith, Ga.
Chamberlain	Husting	Overman	Smith, Mich.
Clapp	James	Owen	Smoot
Clark	Johnson, Me.	Page	Sterling
Cummins	Johnson, S. Dak.	Penrose	Sutherland
Curtis	Jones	Pittman	Swanson
Dillingham	Kenyon	Pomerene	Underwood
Fletcher	La Follette	Reed	Wadsworth
Gallinger	Lane	Saulsbury	Warren
Gore	Lea, Tenn.	Shafroth	Watson
Gronna	Lee, Md.	Sheppard	Weeks
Harding	Martin, Va.	Sherman	Williams
Hitchcock	Martine, N. J.	Shields	Works

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I have been requested to announce the unavoidable absence of the senior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CHILTON] and to state that he has a pair with the senior Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL].

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty-six Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, the objection which the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] makes to the amendment which I have offered seems to me a somewhat astonishing one, namely, that the Chief Justice will have no machinery to make investigations of this character. I have always understood that if a duty was imposed upon an officer the machinery to discharge it was implied. It requires nothing essentially different from what the Chief Justice may now be required to do under the law.

Section 16 of the Judicial Code, for example, provides:

Any such circuit judge, or circuit justice, or the Chief Justice, as the case may be, may, from time to time, if in his judgment the public interests so require, make a new designation and appointment of any other district judge, in the manner, for the duties, and with the powers mentioned in the three preceding sections, and revoke any previous designation and appointment.

There is a section which contemplates that the Chief Justice, in a proper case, shall make inquiry to ascertain whether or not the public interests require a new designation of a judge, and empowers him, if in his judgment the public interests do require it, to make the designation. No specific machinery is provided for ascertaining that fact; but the duty being imposed upon the Chief Justice all necessary machinery with which to carry out the duty is implied, of course.

Section 17 provides:

It shall be the duty of the senior circuit judge then present in the circuit, whenever in his judgment the public interest so requires, to designate and appoint, in the manner and with the powers provided in section 14, the district judge of any judicial district within his circuit to hold a district court in the place or in aid of any other district judge within the same circuit.

There is substantially the same sort of a duty imposed upon the senior circuit judge in each of the circuits. He must ascertain whether the public interest requires that a new designation shall be made, and if, in his judgment, it does, he is to make it. Of course all the machinery that may be necessary to be utilized for that purpose is implied. He is required to ascertain precisely the fact which my amendment contemplates that the Chief Justice shall ascertain in this case. There may be a case where the judge in any district has reached the age of 70 and is unable to perform the duties of the office or unable to perform them adequately. That may be the foundation for the determination that the public interests require the designation of an additional judge. So he may be required, under the existing law, to ascertain exactly the facts which the amendment which I have offered contemplates shall be ascertained in this case.

Section 18 provides:

Whenever, in the judgment of the senior circuit judge of the circuit in which the district lies, or of the circuit justice assigned to such circuit, or of the Chief Justice, the public interest shall require, the said judge or associate justice or Chief Justice shall designate and appoint any circuit judge of the circuit to hold said district court.

So you see that in those three instances, and in others to which I might call attention in the statute, duties of this same character are imposed upon the Chief Justice, upon the various circuit judges, and upon the senior circuit judges in the various districts.

Section 15 provides:

If all the circuit judges and the circuit justice are absent from the circuit or are unable to execute the provisions of either of the two preceding sections, or if the district judge so designated is disabled or neglects to hold the court and transact the business for which he is designated, the clerk of the district court shall certify the fact to the Chief Justice of the United States, who may thereupon designate and appoint, in the manner aforesaid, the judge of any district within such circuit or within any other circuit, and said appointment shall be transmitted to the clerk and be acted upon by him as directed in the preceding section.

There is exactly the sort of fact that is required to be ascertained under the pending bill. That is to be ascertained by the Chief Justice of the United States, and the law provides in that case that the fact is to be certified by the clerk. Certainly the Chief Justice of the United States has as much machinery to ascertain the fact as a clerk of a court has to ascertain the fact. So that it seems to me the objection which is made by the Senator from Georgia upon that ground has absolutely no foundation.

I think that the adoption of my amendment will take from the bill some of the objection which has been urged against it. Certainly there should be no objection to having a responsible judicial officer like the Chief Justice of the United States ascertain and certify to a fact of this character before the President is permitted to act.

I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. JONES (when his name was called). The senior Senator from Indiana [Mr. KERN] is necessarily absent for a short time, and I am paired with him. If he were present, he would vote against this amendment, and if I were at liberty to vote I would vote for it.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CURTIS (after having voted in the affirmative). I desire to announce that I have a pair with the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK], and therefore withdraw my vote.

Mr. GRONNA (after having voted in the affirmative). I inquire if the senior Senator from Maine [Mr. JOHNSON] has voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. GRONNA. I have a pair with that Senator, which I will transfer to the junior Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. DILLINGHAM (after having voted in the affirmative). I observe that the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH], with whom I have a general pair, has not voted; so I withdraw my vote.

Mr. CLARK (after having voted in the affirmative). My attention has been called to the fact that the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE] is not in the Chamber. Having a pair with that Senator, I am compelled to withdraw my vote.

Mr. GALLINGER (after having voted in the affirmative). Since voting, I have discovered that my pair, the senior Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN], is not present. I therefore withdraw my vote.

Mr. OWEN (after having voted in the negative). I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CATRON] to the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL] and will allow my vote to stand.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I have been requested to announce the unavoidable absence of the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECKHAM] and to state that he is paired with the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT].

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I have been requested to announce that the senior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CHILTON] has been called out of the city on pressing business.

Mr. McCUMBER (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS]. I understand that he has not voted. Therefore I will withdraw my vote.

Mr. WADSWORTH (after having voted in the affirmative). I understand that the junior Senator from New Hampshire

[Mr. HOLLIS] has not voted, being absent. I have a pair with that Senator, and therefore withdraw my vote.

Mr. CURTIS. I have been requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from Idaho [Mr. BRADY] with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. VARDAMAN];

The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL] with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CHILTON];

The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCLEAN] with the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS];

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN];

The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT] with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY];

The Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT] with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECKHAM]; and

The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. LIPPITT] with the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH].

The result was announced—yeas, 24, nays 28, as follows:

YEAS—24.

So Mr. SUTHERLAND'S amendment to the amendment of Mr. SMITH of Georgia was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question recurs on the amendment of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The amendment is the amendment of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS], which I accepted. It is really the amendment of the Senator from Iowa.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Georgia.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading and was read the third time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is "Shall the bill pass?"

Mr. SMOOT and Mr. SUTHERLAND called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CURTIS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Georgia [Mr HARDWICK]. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. DILLINGHAM (when his name was called). Owing to the absence of the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH], with whom I have a general pair, I shall withhold my vote. If permitted to vote, I would vote "nay."

Mr. GALLINGER (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN], who is absent. For that reason I withhold my vote. If privileged to vote, I would vote "nay."

Mr. GRONNA (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Maine [Mr. JOHNSON], which I transfer to the junior Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] and vote "nay."

Mr. JONES (when his name was called). The senior Senator from Indiana [Mr. KERN] is necessarily absent at the present time. I am paired with him for the afternoon. If he were present, he would vote "yea," and if I were permitted to vote I would vote "nay."

Mr. McCUMBER (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS]. He is absent from the Chamber, and I withhold my vote. Were I permitted to vote, I would vote "nay."

Mr. SAULSBURY (when his name was called). Has the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT] voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I have a pair with that Senator. I transfer my pair to the junior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. KIRBY] and vote "yea."

Mr. TILLMAN (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] to the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BROUSSARD] and vote "yea."

Mr. WADSWORTH (when his name was called). In the absence of the junior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HOLLIS] I withhold my vote, having a general pair with that Senator. Otherwise I would vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. OWEN (after having voted in the affirmative). I transfer my pair with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CATRON] to the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. CURTIS. I have been requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from Idaho [Mr. BRADY] with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. VARDAMAN];

The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL] with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CHILTON];

The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCLEAN] with the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS];

The Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT] with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECKHAM]; and

The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. LIPPITT] with the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH].

The result was announced—yeas 33, nays 25, as follows:

YEAS—33.

So the bill was passed.

PROHIBITION IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I ask unanimous consent that Senate bill 1082, to prevent the manufacture and sale of alcoholic liquors in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, be printed for the information of the Senate, showing in small capitals the amendments offered by me March 14, 1916.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. SIMMONS. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 3 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, December 8, 1916, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, December 7, 1916.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father in heaven, we pray for a universal faith that shall dispel doubt, a universal hope that shall eliminate despair, a universal love that shall sweep away hate and place the star of love in the ascendency; that Thy kingdom may indeed come in the hearts of men everywhere and abolish war with its wide desolation and unmitigated evils, that the pursuits of peace may reign supreme and every home be typical of the heavenly home, and the old earth blossom as the rose; in the name of the King of Peace, who taught us the way and the truth and the life. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution:

Senate concurrent resolution 27.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That a joint committee, consisting of three Senators and three Representatives, to be appointed by the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives, respectively, is authorized to make the necessary arrangements for the inauguration of the President elect of the United States on the 5th day of March next.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an address by my colleague Mr. MOTT delivered yesterday at the National Rivers and Harbors Convention.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to print in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD an address delivered yesterday at the Rivers and Harbors Convention by his colleague Mr. MOTT. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

FISH-CULTURAL STATIONS IN CERTAIN STATES.

The SPEAKER. The unfinished business is the bill H. R. 15617, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 15617) to establish fish-hatching and fish-cultural stations in the States of Alabama; Louisiana; Florida; Georgia, South Carolina, or North Carolina; Maryland or Virginia; Oregon or Washington; Texas; Oklahoma; Illinois; Washington; Arizona; New Mexico; Michigan; Idaho; Missouri; Pennsylvania, Delaware, or New Jersey; and Minnesota.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them in gross.

The question was taken, and the amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read a third time.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. BENNET. To move to recommit the bill to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman from New York opposed to the bill?

Mr. BENNET. I am.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will send the motion to the desk.

The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. BENNET moves to recommit the bill to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries with the following amendment: Page 2, after line 3, insert:

"State of Wisconsin, $50,000.
"State of Tennessee, $50,000.
"State of New York, on Long Island, $50,000.
"State of Colorado, $50,000."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to recommit.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. BENNET. Division, Mr. Speaker.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 16, noes 64.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and eighty-nine Members are present, not a quorum. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, is the question on the motion to recommit?

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to recommit. Those in favor of the motion offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET] to recommit will, as their names are called, answer "yea," and those opposed will answer "nay," and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 53, nays 305, answered "present" 1, not voting 75, as follows:

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

A message, in writing, from the President of the United States, by Mr. Sharkey, one of his secretaries.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

Mr. LAZARO, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled joint resolution of the following title, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. J. Res. 91. Joint resolution authorizing and directing the Department of Labor to make an inquiry into the cost of living in the District of Columbia and to report thereon to Congress as early as practicable.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. THOMPSON, by unanimous consent, was granted leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, papers in the case of Julia A. Slaybaugh, H. R. 6474, Sixty-fourth Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE—ANNUAL REPORT, GOVERNOR OF THE PANAMA CANAL (H. DOC. NO. 1498).

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which, with the accompanying documents, were referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith, for the information of the Congress, the annual report of the Governor of the Panama Canal for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1916.

WOODROW WILSON.

THE WHITE HOUSE, December 7, 1916.

FISH-CULTURAL STATIONS IN CERTAIN STATES.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] demands the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the roll. This is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 189, nays 159, answered "present" 2, not voting 84, as follows:

So the bill was passed.

The Clerk announced the following additional pairs:

Until further notice:

Mr. CANTRILL with Mr. GUERNSEY.

Mr. VENABLE with Mr. HUTCHINSON.

Mr. CARAWAY with Mr. SNELL.

Mr. TALBOTT with Mr. MORIN.

Mr. DOREMUS with Mr. ROWLAND.

Mr. TAYLOR of Arkansas with Mr. NORTON.

Mr. ESTOPINAL with Mr. BACHARACH.

Mr. RIORDAN with Mr. FOCHT.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi with Mr. BENEDICT.

Mr. MAHER with Mr. COSTELLO.

Mr. HAYDEN with Mr. BEALES.

Mr. LEE with Mr. NOLAN.

Mr. JONES with Mr. ELLSWORTH.

Mr. SMITH of New York with Mr. BARCHFELD.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed, and I move to lay that motion on the table.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

Mr. RAKER. Reserving the right to object, the title should be amended.

Mr. ALEXANDER. The title should be amended to include the State of California.

The SPEAKER. Without objection the title will be amended as indicated by the gentleman from Missouri.

There was no objection.

On motion of Mr. ALEXANDER, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

INAUGURATION OF THE PRESIDENT ELECT.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, there is a Senate concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 27) on the Speaker's table. It provides for the appointment of a committee to make the necessary arrangements for the inaugural ceremonies. Perhaps that resolution might as well be disposed of now as at any time, and I ask the Speaker to lay the resolution before the House.

The SPEAKER. It requires unanimous consent.

Mr. GARRETT. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table, and that the House now consider, Senate concurrent resolution 27.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table Senate concurrent resolution 27, about the inauguration. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Let it be reported first.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That a joint committee, consisting of three Senators and three Representatives, to be appointed by the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives, respectively, is authorized to make the necessary arrangements for the inauguration of the President elect of the United States on the 5th day of March next.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this resolution.

There was no objection.

The resolution was agreed to; and the Speaker appointed as the committee on the part of the House Messrs. RUCKER, GARRETT, and MCKINLEY.

VOCATIONAL EDUCATION.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Saturday next House bill 11250, known as the vocational educational bill, shall be in order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that on next Saturday, immediately after the reading of the Journal and the clearing up of the business on the Speaker's table, the vocational education bill (H. R. 11250) be taken up. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, will the gentleman permit me to make a suggestion?

Mr. KITCHIN. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. Under the request which the gentleman makes, if the bill is not disposed of on Saturday it will not be privileged after that. I think if we take up that bill we ought to take it up in such a way that it will be finally disposed of, and I suggest to the gentleman that he request that the bill be made privileged, subject to appropriation bills.

Mr. KITCHIN. I was about to ask that it be made privileged, subject to the right of way of appropriation bills.

Mr. MANN. And other privileged matters.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that beginning with Saturday, after the reading of the Journal and the disposition of matters on the Speaker's table, the vocational education bill be made a privileged bill, not to interfere with appropriation bills.

Mr. KITCHIN. And other privileged bills.

The SPEAKER. And things of that sort.

Mr. MANN. And other privileged days.

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

The SPEAKER. Just to give it a privileged status. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT UNTIL SATURDAY NEXT.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Saturday next.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Saturday next. Is there objection?

Mr. ASHBROOK. Reserving the right to object, what effect will that have on the rights of the Committee on Invalid Pensions? That committee has a bill ready to act upon to-morrow, which is the regular day.

Mr. KITCHIN. I will say to the gentleman——

The SPEAKER. We can not take it up to-morrow if the House adjourns.

Mr. KITCHIN. We can make the arrangement we have made heretofore for unanimous consent, that on Saturday after 5 o'clock, or after 6 o'clock, we can consider pension bills.

Mr. MANN. Why not now provide by unanimous consent that it shall be in order to consider that bill on Saturday?

Mr. KITCHIN. I will ask unanimous consent that that bill—the pension bill—be in order on Saturday.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that on Saturday it be in order to consider the pension bill.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, has the other request been granted, that we adjourn until Saturday?

The SPEAKER. No; it has not.

Mr. ADAMSON. I want to ask what effect that will have upon the meeting of our committee to-morrow? That will not affect the legality of the meeting of our committee, will it?

The SPEAKER. Why, no. You have got the right to meet any day in the year.

Mr. MANN. You can meet at midnight if you can get the members of the committee together.

Mr. ADAMSON. We will get in an all-day meeting, then, if we can get away from this wrangle here.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ASHBROOK] proposes to object, unless his pension bill can be considered.

Mr. MANN. That is in the request.

Mr. ASHBROOK. I understand that the gentleman from North Carolina includes in his request that the pension bill be in order on Saturday.

Mr. KITCHIN. And that that be disposed of before we take up the vocational education bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that on Saturday next, the first thing after the reading of the Journal and the disposition of business on the Speaker's table, the pension bill shall be called up and disposed of, and that following that the vocational education bill be a matter of privilege.

Mr. MANN. And that when we adjourn to-day we adjourn to meet on Saturday.

The SPEAKER. Yes; and that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Saturday next. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

FOOD.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for a change of reference of House resolution 389, directing the Federal Trade Commission to investigate and report to the House of Representatives the facts relating to the production, marketing, and distribution of food products in the United States, together with any violations of the antitrust laws in connection therewith, and recommendations for greater economy and efficiency in the marketing of food products and the punishment and prevention of extortion in the prices thereof.

This resolution was sent by the Speaker to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. The fact is that it is on a subject which has been before the Committee on the Judiciary. That committee have had hearings on it, and this is the amplification of the resolution upon which the Judiciary Committee have had hearings. Therefore I ask a change of reference to the Judiciary Committee.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent that the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce be discharged from the further consideration of House resolution 389, and that the same be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. Is there objection?

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Georgia rise?

Mr. ADAMSON. I rise to reserve the right to object, in order to make an observation.

I do not see why a resolution referred to the appropriate committee through inadvertence or otherwise should be changed. This resolution plainly and evidently deals with matters under the jurisdiction of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce; it deals with an investigation that that committee has the authority to order. The fact that they have stated in their bill something about the antitrust law does not divest the committee of its fundamental jurisdiction. It may be that in conducting an investigation our committee might unearth something about the antitrust law and in its investigations as to the trade conditions in beef. While I am not going to interfere with the liberal construction of the administration of the Speaker in being good to all the committees that do not have much of anything to do, I shall protest, at least formally, against being divested of jurisdiction which properly belongs to a committee which can and does do business. [Laughter.] I shall leave it to the Speaker and shall not raise any row about it, but I will not agree that a resolution which belongs to our committee shall be taken away.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman permit a suggestion?

Mr. ADAMSON. I will yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. I should be glad to have the resolution remain with the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, but after all this is a supplemental resolution. There are a lot, I do not know how many, about 15 or 20, kindred resolutions from different sources which have been referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and this is simply a supplemental resolution, and in the orderly procedure of business it ought to go to that committee without affecting the question of jurisdiction between the committees.

Mr. ADAMSON. If the gentleman from Missouri will state that the purpose of the investigation is to ascertain violations of the antitrust law I will waive any objections I may have.

Mr. BORLAND. I am much obliged to the gentleman for the courtesy, because we had no intention to take it away from his committee, but simply to follow up the work already done by the other committee.

The SPEAKER. The Chair inadvertently sent this to the committee presided over by the gentleman from Georgia, and the Chair has stated a dozen times that that committee has a lot of work to do and does a lot of work. The rest of these bills have been sent to the Judiciary Committee. The House can do as it pleases. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from Missouri if this is the resolution known as the beef-trust resolution?

Mr. BORLAND. It is.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And was before the Judiciary Committee at the last session?

Mr. BORLAND. The original resolution was before the committee at the last session, not this resolution.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. What progress was made by the Judiciary Committee?

Mr. BORLAND. There were extensive hearings, occupying 10 or 12 days in all, and the printed copies of the hearings are in existence.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The purpose of this resolution is to inquire into the high cost of living, the price of beef and meats generally.

Mr. BORLAND. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Has not the Attorney General announced a purpose of making an inquiry of this kind?

Mr. BORLAND. I think he has; I hope he has; but that would not obviate the work done here.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I would like to say that the question of the price of meats in the large cities is an aggravated one. We waited patiently all of last session to have some action taken on these resolutions. No action appears to have been taken. Now, if we are to fall again between the three stools—the Attorney General, the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and the Committee on the Judiciary—we might as well have an understanding now when this question of unanimous consent is asked. Does the gentleman think he is going to get any action on the high cost of living if this resolution is referred to the Judiciary Committee?

Mr. BORLAND. I do.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky demands the regular order, and the regular order is, Is there objection to this change of reference?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Reserving the right to object, I merely want to say——

Mr. SHERLEY. I demand the regular order.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Evidently the gentleman does not want action.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. ADAMSON. I shall not object on the statement of the gentleman from Missouri that the purpose is to investigate violations of the antitrust law.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I object.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR] may address the House for one hour.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR] may address the House for one hour. Is there objection?

Mr. ADAMSON. For the purpose of asking a question, I reserve the right to object, and for that purpose only. Is it the intention to transact any other business in the House to-day?

Mr. KITCHIN. No; we will adjourn after the remarks of the gentleman from Wisconsin if consent is granted.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR] be permitted to address the House for one hour. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, I again submit my request for unanimous consent for change of reference on House resolution 389 from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce to the Committee on the Judiciary. The purpose of this is to discover violations of the antitrust law.

The SPEAKER. Is this the same matter the gentleman had up a moment ago?

Mr. BORLAND. It is.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND] asks unanimous consent to rerefer House resolution 389 from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce to the Committee on the Judiciary. Is there objection?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, for the present I object.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR] is recognized for one hour.

PUBLIC BUILDING WASTE REACHES MANY MILLIONS OF DOLLARS EVERY YEAR—EIGHTY PER CENT OF THE PROPOSED 1916 ITEMS IS WASTE, ACCORDING TO TREASURY DEPARTMENT COMPUTATIONS—IT IS A "PORK-BARREL" BILL, IN DEGREE FULLY AS BAD AS THE AVERAGE RIVER AND HARBOR BILL—THE LAST PUBLIC BUILDINGS BILL WAS PASSED BY THE HOUSE WITH 20 MINUTES' DEBATE—THIS BILL CARRIES $35,000,000 AND SHOULD BE DEFEATED.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Speaker, the House has passed within a half hour an omnibus bill by a vote of 188 to 159 appropriating nearly $900,000 for 18 fish hatcheries scattered from Alabama to Washington, in addition to 40 now established. The House probably noticed that some of the distinguished Members on the Democratic side, including the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD], voted against that omnibus bill, which proposed to establish fish hatcheries throughout the country. Yesterday there was given to Congress by the Secretary of the Treasury a report in which he vigorously criticised the omnibus public buildings bill calling for $35,000,000, and gave reasons why, in his judgment, that bill ought to be defeated. Yesterday, also, the distinguished Vice President of the United States, Mr. MAR-

SHALL, in welcoming a body of men known as the River and Harbor Congress, which is a lobby organized for the purpose of urging the passage of river and harbor bills, also recommended a change in the method of appropriations from omnibus bills to specific legislation. The protest against "pork barrels" is in the air, and at this time, Mr. Speaker, I desire to discuss briefly the subject of public buildings bills, and ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. CONRY). The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Speaker, I speak in opposition to the pending $35,000,000 public-buildings bill, which we are told will pass at this session. Judging from past experience the bill will be loaded down at the other end of the Capitol with from $5,000,000 to $10,000,000 more "Government monuments," so that it promises to rival the $43,000,000 river and harbor pork barrel passed at this same session of Congress. The last public-buildings act was rushed through the House under suspension of the rules. Only 20 minutes were given the opponents of the bill in which to discuss a bill of 50 pages, containing between 400 and 500 items, appropriating over $40,000,000, and covering extravagant and worthless projects from one end of the country to the other. The House and the public were blindfolded as to facts, and then bound and gagged by a vote of 154 to 30 to stifle discussion. Those who would know the record will find it beginning on pages 3299 and 4245 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of the Sixty-second Congress.

Protests upon protests against the bill and its method of passage will there be found in the few minutes then permitted for discussion.

There will be found the denunciation of Mr. FITZGERALD, of New York, chairman of the appropriations bill, who said:

> I denounce as indefensible this method of passing a public building bill. * * * It can not be defended from any standpoint of public necessity.

Of the 32 most important chairmanships of House committees, Mr. FITZGERALD is the only chairman from any Northern State, and as the Northern States pay nearly 95 per cent of the revenues with which this Government is being run, and from which appropriations are made, his remarks are of exceptional weight.

AN AUDACIOUS RAID ON THE TREASURY.

A leading Democratic Senator said of the 1913 public-buildings bill it was "the boldest and most audacious raid on the Public Treasury that has been attempted in recent years." The same judgment may be passed on the 1916 bill now before the House.

When the 1913 measure was returned with Senate amendments, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT], in charge of the bill, said:

> I desire merely to state that there are a number of Senate amendments; there are some of them perhaps that are good and many of them no doubt are bad.

The record, however, fails to show that any of the many bad ones put in by the House or Senate were omitted.

The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND] said on the same day, February 27, 1913:

> The bill contains perhaps less than a score of items that can be attacked on any ground of just criticism out in the country, but contains nearly $10,000,000 hogshead of pork for the District of Columbia. We are compelled to submit to this unjust criticism from one end of the country to the other of having prepared a pork-barrel bill, when there is not a Member of this House that has got more than a slice of side meat compared with this hogshead of pork (Senate amendments). I am disgusted with this high-handed attempt to not only get the lion's share of the pork, but to load all the odium upon the House of Representatives.

This suggests a new odium movie tragedy entitled "Who gets the most pork, or when is an egg too bad to use?"

On a second motion to suspend rules and demand immediate conference, the opposition to the bill was snowed under—164 to 26 (p. 4247). A record vote of 104 majority was cast against instructing the conferees to urge an amendment to limit buildings to offices having more than $10,000 annual receipts. No restrictions in pork getting were favored.

Without debate or investigation, amid cries, shown by the RECORD, of "Vote!" "Vote!" on page 4245, which significantly sounds like "Pork!" "Pork!" the bill was passed without a roll call. Before the 1916 bill is reached on the calendar, and before the House is again blindfolded, bound, and gagged on the new $35,000,000 public-buildings bill, which may eventually reach over $40,000,000, I desire to place before you some facts to show the legislative scandal that will be involved through stifling investigation and debate on this bill and by its passage.

PROFLIGATE WASTE.

In its Democratic national platform, adopted at Baltimore, the party now in power said:

> We denounce the profligate waste of money wrung from the people by oppressive taxation through lavish appropriations of recent Republican Congresses which have kept taxes high. * * * We demand a return to that simplicity which befits a democratic Government.

Chairman FITZGERALD, in debate last session, declared of his own party associates:

> They have unnecessarily piled up public expenditures until the Democratic Party is becoming the laughingstock of the country.

In the same speech he referred to "this band of Treasury looters."

Many like statements have been heard from the other side of the aisle by way of confession, and the words of Representative SISSON, of Mississippi, were to the same effect when he said to the House:

> I must apologize to you Republicans for having ever used the words "criminally extravagant" in criticizing the appropriations that you made, for if that expression "criminally extravagant" was proper to apply to you, my God! the English language has never found an adjective strong enough to apply to Democratic extravagances.

With expert opinions to guide us on past extravagances of this administration, let us consider the new $35,000,000 bill, which cares for the interests of 300 or more separate congressional districts with over 400 items, and binds, gags, and blindfolds Congress when it is passed by the House.

Mr. Speaker, two public omnibus legislative scandals have been fastened on Congress recently. Two scandals that find supporters but few apologists. From insignificant weaklings they have grown to mighty giants until through allotment of political pelf, they now seek to govern other important legislation.

Both omnibus bills are founded on private greed and local selfishness. They permeate political and legislative activities and encourage the belief among shortsighted constituencies that the relative value of a Representative's service is determined by his ability to obtain appropriations for his constituency. Legitimate public improvements throughout the country, therefore, are required to support these omnibus bills, covering, as they do, scandalous treasury hauls which during the last two decades have jumped from lilliputian size to scores of millions in bills reeking with profligate waste.

Heretofore I have endeavored, although possibly too briefly, to discuss and expose several river and harbor extravagances and the Mississippi River $16,000,000 land reclamation bill, in an effort to arouse sentiment against such notorious raids on the Federal Treasury. I herewith offer a brief analysis of the public buildings legislative atrocity, which also has served to make Congress a laughingstock throughout the country. For scientific distribution of political pork it has no parallel, as may be easily demonstrated.

PORK BARRELS MUST BE ABANDONED.

Other members are better able to perform this service and I do not expect to offer any thoroughgoing analysis of either the 1913 or 1916 bills. I desire, however, to present a few facts that must soon convince intelligent men that public-buildings bills and river and harbor bills are largely political grab measures, wasteful and indefensible in character, and measures that should be abandoned if we would maintain our self-respect individually and collectively.

For those who have not time nor inclination to investigate the facts, but who wish to get a general understanding of public-buildings bills and their methods of preparation, I have collated a few facts taken from official sources which may be of use in determining what should be done with the 1916 bill.

An agreed state of facts and the opinions of experts will first be submitted to show that the average public-buildings bill, including the bill under discussion, is indefensible and vicious in principle. Some intelligent, businesslike system of determining the location and character of public buildings should be submitted in lieu of the shameful methods which characterize every public-buildings bill.

Taxpayers overburdened with public-building, land-reclamation, and waterway pork barrels, amounting in the aggregate to over $100,000,000 during the year 1916, have right to rebel. The 1916 river and harbor bill amounted to $42,886,000, the so-called flood-control and land-reclamation bills to $50,600,000, and the 1916 public-buildings bill already reaches $35,000,000. Over one-half of that total, it can be demonstrated, is to be wasted on useless, extravagant, or private projects and will be improperly drawn from the Public Treasury by three omnibus bills during this session of Congress, with other equally extravagant bills to follow.

A public-buildings act was passed and approved March 4, 1913, which provided for a Public Buildings Commission. That commission consisted of W. G. McAdoo, Secretary of the Treasury; J. C. Reynolds, Attorney General; A. S. Burleson, Postmaster General; Senators C. A. SWANSON and GEORGE SUTHERLAND, and Representatives FRANK CLARK and R. W. AUSTIN.

THE PUBLIC BUILDINGS COMMISSION'S REPORT.

The commission's report is found in House Document No. 936, Sixty-third Congress. I call attention to several statements therein, to wit:

In 12 years $163,085,431 has been authorized for public buildings. The act of 1913 authorized $41,797,350, or over 25 per cent of the total. On January 1, 1914, 864 buildings had been completed, 120 more were in course of construction, 310 more authorized on sites not built, and 183 more authorized sites for buildings had not been purchased. The Architect's Office is able to prepare for about 75 buildings annually, and, according to information received, that office has not yet caught up with the demands of hungry constituencies, as set forth in the figures cited.

Another significant fact is disclosed. The average annual operating cost for 436 post offices, including heat, light, and so forth, is $2,594. Buildings costing $75,000 averaged $2,320, and buildings costing $50,000 averaged $1,815 annually. To this cost should be added 3 per cent annual interest on the investment, which makes the annual cost to the Government on $50,000 buildings $3,315 and on $75,000 buildings $4,570. To this total must also be added depreciation charges of approximately 3 to 5 per cent annually, to include repairs. These figures should be kept in mind when ascertaining the profligate waste piled up by these bills.

The highest rental paid by the Government to any one of the 508 post offices having over $10,000 annual receipts and occupying leased quarters is $2,580, and the lowest rental $151 annually. At 378 offices the rental is less than $1,000, and at 130 offices the rental exceeds $1,000. For 4,320 post offices of all classes and branches the average annual rental in 1913 was $824.

In other words, it now costs the Government annually about $824 on the average to rent offices which will cost over $3,315 annually when $50,000 buildings are erected, and $4,570 when the cost reaches $75,000 for building and site. Other costs, present and prospective, will be set forth more in detail when specific items are discussed.

No hasty conclusions should be reached as to necessity for "public monuments" in Jim Crow towns or jerkwater stations until the provisions of the 1913 law are first examined. An analysis of the last public-buildings act passed by Congress shows conclusively just how dishonest and wasteful these bills have become.

A HIGH-CLASS COMMISSION.

Before discussing that law I quote from the commission's report signed by Messrs. McAdoo, Swanson, Sutherland, Clark, and Austin. It recommends that no public building be authorized where annual receipts are less than $10,000 per year, and in the consideration of each project "a comparison of rental value for suitable quarters, together with cost of maintenance and operation, including interest at 3 per cent on the investment for the building proposed shall be made in order that it may be determined whether its erection would be a desirable or proper investment." Again the majority of the commission reported "A general examination of sites and buildings authorized but not consummated has been made, and the commission is satisfied that some appropriations and authorizations have been made which are not justified. Other authorizations are too large." This is a positive indictment of past public-buildings bills and of Congress, made by reputable and responsible authority.

Chairman CLARK, of the committee and a member of the commission, signed that report. Thereafter Postmaster General Burleson ripped the cover from off the 1913 public-building pork barrel in a minority report which for comprehensive detail could not be surpassed. Page after page of concrete facts are given in Document No. 936, of last session, wherein the whole miserable system is disclosed, not by argument, but by uncontrovertible statistics.

Mr. Burleson served his apprenticeship in the House and afterwards undertook the administration of the department for which we are providing public buildings. His judgment of locality requirements ought to be that of manager of a great commercial business. He tells us what is needed, but in order to help local constituencies and boost political fortunes the directors of the company—Congress—insists on establishing buildings at hundreds of country cross roads for political purposes rather than public necessity, notwithstanding this protest of the business manager, chosen by the people.

In his minority report, pages 28 and 29, Mr. Burleson, presumably the best-informed member of the Public Building Commission, says:

That a public building for post-office purposes only be not authorized for any place unless the rental paid for Government offices is as much as $1,000 per annum, and then only when either the gross post-office receipts amount to as much as $15,000, or the population to as much as 5,000.

From a brief examination of the 1913 bill this would have barred over 80 per cent of the four hundred and odd projects contained in that bursting pork barrel, and, according to Mr. Burleson's conclusions, that bill was four-fifths waste when measured by items. By the same token over 80 per cent of items in the 1916 bill would be properly rejected apart from extensions and increases.

Again, Mr. Burleson says in his report—

2. That whenever public buildings are authorized quarters be provided, if possible, for all permanent Government offices, but that no provision be made for any branch of the service that will not have real need of accommodations on at least one day of each month, except in the case of United States courts.

3. That United States court accommodations be provided only at places where court has actually been in session on at least 10 days of the preceding year.

Just why 10 days instead of 30 days or more was named is hard to say. Surely he is liberal in his estimates of public necessity.

DESERTED FEDERAL COURTHOUSES.

Yet if the provision recommended by Mr. Burleson had been pursued in the past, about one-half of our magnificent deserted Federal courthouses would not have been built and many millions of dollars would not have been frittered away on extravagant empty buildings—monuments to our own business incapacity. Again, he says—

7. That the practice of authorizing sites in advance of authorizations for buildings be discontinued, and that authorizations for buildings and sites be made simultaneously.

Why not, except to wrongfully encourage a dribbing, unbusinesslike system?

Providing this common-sense plan had been followed, instead of public grab methods, 130 sites contained in the 1913 bill would have been omitted, but these items pulled votes for the bill, and practically the same number of sites in the 1916 bill are relied on to furnish 100 more votes for the measure now before us.

Mr. Burleson says further in his report to Congress:

20. That a lump-sum appropriation of $10,000,000 be made annually for public buildings work.

This would be more economical, but would not affect the vicious system, without other changes made in present methods.

As the amount appropriated from 1906 to 1913, inclusive, for public buildings reached about $130,000,000, or nearly double the average amount recommended by Postmaster General Burleson, one effect of his proposal will be readily appreciated. It tends toward needful economy.

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FREAR. Yes; certainly I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. FOCHT. May I ask the gentleman whether it is not a rule of the committee not to consider an appropriation for any location unless the receipts of the particular place where it is proposed to construct a public building are in excess of $10,000?

Mr. FREAR. No; it is not a rule. It is said to be a rule, but by the time the gentleman has seen the statistics which I shall submit in respect to the 1916 bill, he will observe that it is a rule which is honored by its nonobservance from beginning to end.

Mr. FOCHT. I trust the gentleman will develop that.

Mr. FREAR. I shall certainly demonstrate it to the satisfaction of the House with many items that will be submitted. I say any number. I would say offhand 100 or more of the projects contained in this bill. In one case of nine projects from one State not a single one of the projects reaches that amount of receipts.

Mr. FOCHT. I asked the question for the reason that in several instances where I have applied for an appropriation the first consideration was whether there were receipts exceeding $10,000, and I was led to believe that the committee would not consider the matter unless that amount was received.

Mr. FREAR. I readily understand that that has been the position assumed by the committee but not observed. Let me suggest as an evidence of the action of the House upon that particular proposition that when an amendment was urged as a part of the 1913 bill to limit the construction to places where the receipts amounted to $10,000 it was defeated in the House by nearly 100 majority. I stated that a few moments ago. I propose to offer a tentative bill suggesting a system that will, if adopted, remove all of these objections.

Mr. FOCHT. The gentleman is not opposed to a public building where the necessity of the case demands it?

Mr. FREAR. No; certainly not.

Mr. FOCHT. Or where the receipts are $10,000?

Mr. FREAR. Oh, yes, indeed. I propose to show here that Mr. Burleson said that the limit ought to be $15,000, and the Treasury Department insists that it ought to be $25,000. The question of the amount of money taken in at a particular office, in so far as the construction of a building is concerned at that point, has no more relation to it than has the amount of money taken in by a street car conductor with the cost of the car that he is running. That will be readily observed when it is realized that this money is for the purpose of carrying the mail, and that we are carrying on our Post Office Department not at a profit but at a loss. I shall submit in my statement cases showing the increased expense will be three to ten times the amount now paid by the Government for local rents and other charges, according to the estimates of the Treasury De partment.

Mr. FOCHT. I have always understood the conception to be that these appropriations are made for the accommodation of the public, and hence that it is the best kind of appropriation, if properly applied, that could be made by Congress. In fact, about the only thing that the people get with any directness is the delivery of the mail and the dispatch of their business; and if there is a community of sufficient commercial importance and population to require such a building I would like to ask the gentleman whether he is opposed to it?

Mr. FREAR. Let me ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania what he believes is the proper standard?

Mr. FOCHT. I think that is the standard—the importance of the community and the requirements and the public demand for the dispatch of business.

Mr. FREAR. True; and of these 400 items that have been placed in the 1916 bill there is not a single item which has not been inserted by that very argument, dependent upon the locality itself, dependent upon the political pull that is possessed, as to whether the proposition is sufficient. Who is going to determine it? Not the Treasury Department, not the Post Office Department, but a committee which does not observe any rule of which the gentleman speaks.

Mr. FOCHT. Congress is supposed to determine the question, and as far as the gentleman's constant quoting of Mr. Burleson, I should prefer to have his own opinion as a Member of Congress.

Mr. FREAR. I thank the gentleman. The reason I have quoted Mr. Burleson so frequently is this: He was an able member of that commission. He made a statement based upon a very careful investigation of all the facts, that $15,000 ought to be the limit, the minimum. I can not conceive of any limitation of that kind having any bearing upon what the cost of the building should be. It would seem to me that the recommendation should come through the Treasury Department or the Post Office Department, depending upon the necessity of a particular community, and in such a case, just as with the river and harbor bill or any other bill, that ought to be the determining factor.

Mr. FOCHT. The gentleman's theory is to get away from the pork-barrel feature——

Mr. FREAR. Yes.

Mr. FOCHT. And the local political pull it gives Congressmen. I thoroughly agree that the building should be based upon the public necessity. We must stand on that.

Mr. FREAR. I know the gentleman does. I am offering this statement in order to make clear where we have been led in past legislation.

Mr. FOCHT. I think the gentleman is performing a great public service if he can confine the construction of post-office buildings to communities where necessity alone demands them.

Mr. FREAR. I wish it were more generally believed in by Members of the House.

Returning to the Public Building Commission's report:

Other recommendations seeking to halt or slacken the race for local public-building gifts and grafts appear in the minority report, which covers 100 pages and blasts the present system with a broadside of statistics.

In this discussion it is needless to say I have no interest in what congressional districts are affected or who introduces the bills acted upon by the committee. I do not presume to criticize individual Members for introducing bills under local pressure, nor am I interested in the acts of the committee, excepting in so far as such acts serve to show the character of the present system which notoriously is affected by political or personal pull and in only a secondary degree by the requirements of communities or needs of the General Government.

I do say that 400 different propositions contained in the 1916 bill scattered all over the country are calculated to enlist the support of enough votes to pass any bill. That is a problem as serious in character as any which confronts this Congress. Will Congress put through this legislative monstrosity, which carries many millions of dollars of wasted public money? I shall endeavor briefly to demonstrate, so that he who runs may read, that the whole bill is charged with "profligate waste," such as was denounced by the Democratic convention at Baltimore and to use a further quotation from that historic but disregarded platform, it is "wrung from the people by oppressive taxation."

LIMITATION BASED ON RECEIPTS IS A SUBTERFUGE.

An effort is made ostensibly to limit items going into the public-building grab bag by requiring local office annual receipts to reach $10,000. This modest limit was fixed so as to permit thousands of villages to enter the bill, but the limit is regularly brushed aside by the committee, so that the rule has become honored by its notorious nonobservance. In other words, when the annual rental is only $300 or less a new building costing $3,000 or more in annual carrying charges may be built whenever receipts reach far less than $10,000 annually—if the committee so elects.

What business reason exists for a law or rule which has become a political subterfuge? Let us see. The committee says not even $10,000 annual postage sales and income should be the limit. Burleson says $15,000 annually, and Treasury officials believe $25,000 annual receipts should be shown before a public building is authorized. The matter of local receipts as a measure of Government needs has no relation to the subject. The local post office is only a collector, and the collection is made to handle and carry mail to the four quarters of the globe, not to erect public monuments in corner crossroads.

The department is not self-supporting. The question governing any other kind of business, public or private, would relate to necessity, economy, and policy. The omnibus policy is to build wherever votes are needed to carry through the bill. Every excuse is urged for construction—Federal courts and assay offices—and now to aid the civil service. No inventive genius has yet thought of using these "Government monuments" for Army signal stations or Indian blockhouses in our scheme of public defense, but no reason is too absurd to avoid a nonobserved limitation in receipts which in itself is unintelligible from any business standpoint and manifestly absurd in principle.

This assumed limitation is only used to justify a bad legislative policy, as may be demonstrated.

In order to relieve Members of Congress from the necessity of building these scandalous swap bills, and in order to permit them to engage in more legitimate legislative public service, I suggest a business proposition which will save money and time and promote public efficiency. Why not pass a simple measure to cover the following purposes?

A BILL PROVIDING FOR A PUBLIC BUILDING COMMISSION.

A commission composed of the Secretary of the Treasury, the Postmaster General, and the Attorney General is hereby created whose duty it shall be to receive and investigate all applications for Government public buildings wherever located. The commission may provide rules concerning the size of communities, post-office receipts, and rental paid by the Government in determining where public buildings are to be constructed, and shall determine the character, cost, and plans of every such public building.

The commission shall annually prepare a report of its findings and recommendations and the same shall be embodied in the report of the Secretary of the Treasury and of the Postmaster General. The amounts required to provide for the purchase of sites, construction of buildings, and purchase of needed equipment shall be included and made a part of the regular supply bills submitted by the Secretary of the Treasury to Congress.

Mr. Speaker, a few facts have been presented heretofore relative to the vicious character of river and harbor legislation, which depends for its existence on votes gathered from different sections of the country by the judicious distribution of cash. The public-buildings bill is equally indefensible. Excuses are offered that Congress grants a maximum amount for buildings, and it is then for Treasury officials to reduce the amount, if need be. That excuse is of the same character as occurs in river and harbor legislation when extravagance and waste is avoided by laying responsibility on Army engineers. Congress makes wasteful and extravagant appropriations for rivers and harbors and public buildings. Congress locates these "improvements." Political pull is then brought to bear on the administration authorities to expend the entire amount, and frequently much more than the first amount granted. The system has resulted in illogical measures that waste a score of millions every year on inland waterways and insignificant harbors and on useless public buildings. A pretense of securing Army engineers' approval is offered with river and harbor projects. No official approval as to necessity occurs with public buildings. It is largely a matter of political pull and local graft. Owners of desirable sites, those interested in change of location, those who want to see Government money spent locally, and various other interests demand their "Government monument."

Such bills will not bear public scrutiny, and a few facts presented show imperatively that a more businesslike, economical, and honest method of providing public buildings must be devised. The money waste is large but of minor importance compared with the corrupt influence which underlies all omnibus money grabs.

Before considering the 1916 bill I desire briefly to discuss the last bill passed by Congress in 1913, and on which much definite data is available. The waste, extravagance, and general character of that last bill as passed by Congress may be better understood from statistics gathered from official reports. In round numbers that bill contained over 400 projects, which, evenly distributed, would have covered nearly every congressional district, irrespective of public needs. These items were widely and generously distributed, as will appear from a perusal of Document No. 936, Sixty-third Congress, so that when presented for passage a large majority of the districts were provided with some building or building site. No roll call could be secured, as appears from the RECORD, which was quoted at the outset.

VILLAGES UNDER 3,000 INHABITANTS.

To show what kind of villages and crossroads were recognized in the 1913 bill, a partial list of places under 3,000 inhabitants is offered where the Government is now paying on the average an annual rental of from $300 to $720 per month, yet when the new 1913 public buildings have been erected the average annual cost to the Government will be from five to ten times present expenditures. In other words, that is local pork taken from the Public Treasury in response to clamoring local constituencies. The Postmaster General insists that 280 cities, containing over 5,000 inhabitants each, ought first to be provided with public buildings before any more pork barrels are built, but I am taking a much lower census figure, 3,000, to show the indefensible character of the last public-buildings bill, which did not differ much in general plan from the 1916 bill now urged for passage. Nearly 100 of such items occurred in the 1913 bill alone, of which a few are cited from the commission's report:

The principle governing the distribution of political or local pork in the 1913 bill is found on page 33 of Document 936 when applied to Florida items for illustration:

Location.	Population.	Rentals.	Appropriation.
Bartow, Fla	2,662	$650	$55,000
De Land, Fla	2,812	600	65,000
Orlando, Fla	3,812	900	65,000
Apalachicola, Fla	3,065	600	75,000
Lakeland, Fla	3,719	1,200	75,000
Marianna, Fla	1,915	350	70,000
Sanford, Fla	3,570	600	70,000
De Funiak Springs, Fla	2,017	100	[1]6,000
Key West, Fla	19,945		80,000
Kissimmee, Fla	2,157	360	[1]6,000

[1] Site.

This is not a full list of Florida projects contained in the 1913 bill. Notwithstanding Florida has all its 5,000-population towns already provided according to the report, the above list and several others in the bill show that Florida had some potent influence in getting public funds from the Federal Treasury. Think what joy came to Marianna, with its 1,915 souls, upon learning that a good shepherd had given to its people a $70,000 monument at $35 per capita. Think of Kissimmee, with 2,157 souls, now living on a stream dry eight months in the year, but remembered in a recent river and harbor bill with $43,000 more to insure against prairie fires.

Real estate speculators in De Funiak Springs spent sleepless nights while skirmishing around among its 2,017 inhabitants in a desperate effort to find a vacant building lot for $6,000 on which to erect their Government monument. And that amount alone would have paid rental for 60 years, or over a half century at present rates, in the Springs.

The little city of Key West gets $80,000 from Uncle Samuel just to find a lot on which to build. Is that the site secured by a representative of the Flagler road who haunted the committee before the 1913 bill was reported?

Nine Florida villages above named totaled 25,774 men, women, and children last census, and receive from the good shepherd at Washington nearly a half million dollars to divide among the nine villages. Counting Key West, the allotment reached beyond the half million, and it should be remembered that from other good shepherds Florida gets annually nearly a million dollars more drawn from Federal Treasury vaults for the Kissimmee, the Oklawaha, the Apalachicola, and streams and harbors with liquid names, but often dry banks and bottoms.

OTHER PUBLIC BUILDINGS IN FLORIDA.

The Public Buildings Commission makes an equally astounding statement in its report, pages 94 to 97. From that we learn Florida has 10 Government courthouses containing local post offices which have cost $1,875,000. California has only 4; Ohio, 5; and Illinois, 6. Florida has 4 Congressmen; California, 11; Ohio, 22; Illinois, 27. Florida has less than 10 per cent of the population of Ohio and Illinois, but 10 courthouses to their 11. In its 1915 fiscal year income-tax payments Florida paid $229,509; Ohio, $4,027,459; Illinois, $5,654,151. Florida furnishes less than 3 per cent of Federal funds compared with these two States, but she coopers the barrel, according to official documents. Later we will discover other remarkable Florida statistics disclosing other interesting facts. At the beginning we learn 10 Government courthouse monuments go to the 4 congressional districts of Florida, also 18 items are in the last 2 public-buildings bills for Florida's 4 districts; ten times the courthouse average that is given to Ohio or to Illinois districts, and yet the Buckeye State contributes practically $19 for Florida's Government buildings to every dollar paid by Florida, and the Sucker State contributes $25 for Florida's Government monuments for every dollar paid by Florida, and Florida gets proportionately 10 monuments where Illinois gets 1.

The following covers a few more of the 1913 bill post-office projects which are located in places under 3,000 inhabitants, notwithstanding the Postmaster General insists that no building be placed in cities under 5,000 inhabitants:

Location.	Population.	Appropriation.
Jasper, Ala	2,509	$107,500
Arkadelphia, Ark	2,745	60,000
Fordyce, Ark	2,704	55,000
Statesboro, Ga	2,529	57,500
Hiawatha, Kans	2,974	67,500
Lancaster, Kans	1,507	60,000

Lancaster lost 133 souls through death or departure from 1900 to 1910, but bleeding Kansas of the last generation apparently bleeds the Treasury of this. Lancaster had less than one-third the population recommended by the Postmaster General for consideration.

Location.	Population.	Appropriation.
Hammond, La	2,942	$55,000
Holly Springs, Miss	2,192	50,000

Holly Springs had an epidemic of removals between 1900 and 1910, during which time it lost 623, or 25 per cent, of its Holly Springs; but Christmas gifts, appropriately wreathed by holly, were dumped by war-tax contributions into the Springs by the congressional Santa Claus.

Location.	Population.	Appropriation.
Aurora, Nebr	2,630	$56,000
Chadron, Nebr	2,687	125,000
Wahoo, Nebr	2,168	56,000

The Aurora in Nebraska gets up before breakfast. Chadron stretches its waistband with pork, while the village of Wahoo, increasing just 68 souls from 1900 to 1910, showed disregard of President Roosevelt's advice.

Location.	Population.	Appropriation.
Waynesville, N. C	2,008	$72,000
Jellico, Tenn	1,862	80,000
Martin, Tenn	2,228	55,000
Maryville, Tenn	2,381	70,000

Tennessee made a big haul for its ruralities. Its advantage is noted, when 6,471 people in three villages get $205,000 in public buildings. And this gift comes from an administration that in its 1912 Baltimore platform shrieked, "We denounce the profligate waste wrung from the people by oppressive taxation," and so forth.

Location.	Population.	Appropriation.
Richfield, Utah	2,559	$60,000
Franklin, Va	2,271	50,000
Warrenton, Va	1,427	62,000
Waynesboro, Va	1,389	57,500

The home State of the Father of his Country was not backward in its demands for "profligate waste wrung from the people (in 1914) by oppressive taxation," as shown by these additional items:

Location.	Population.	Post-office receipts.
Buena Vista, Va	3,245	$6,358
Cape Charles, Va	1,948	7,481
Manassas, Va	1,217	7,351
West Point, Va	1,397	3,995
Woodstock, Va	1,314	6,073

These are Virginia villages that are getting Government monuments through oppressive taxation. More will follow.

Location.	Population.	Appropriation.
Basin, Wyo	763	$56,000
Buffalo, Wyo	1,368	69,500
Cody, Wyo	1,132	56,000

When the handful of people in the villages of Basin, Buffalo, and Cody, Wyo., learned what the Public Buildings Committee did for those villages, they sang praises for those from whom the money flows. "Government monuments" to prevent the stranger from losing his way are numerous in the wilds of Wyoming.

Again quoting from the 1913 bill, Document 936, page 37:

Location.	Population.	Appropriation.
Andalusia, Ala	2,480	$50,000
Cordova, Alaska	1,152	100,000
Prescott, Ark	2,705	50,000
Rogers, Ark	2,820	70,000
San Pedro		60,000
Willow, Cal	1,139	75,000

Willow lost 40 of its souls from 1890 to 1910, but San Pedro did not have enough population in 1890, 1900, or 1910 to get into the Government census. It gets $60,000, however, from the Federal Treasury. Over $400,000 given to six villages in "profligate waste wrung from the people by oppressive taxation during Democratic times of 1914 and over the protest of a Democratic Postmaster General.

Location.	Population.	Appropriation.
Glenwood Springs, Colo	2,019	$100,000
Marianna, Fla	1,915	70,000
West Point, Ga	1,906	50,000
Aledo, Ill	2,144	65,000
North Vernon, Ind	2,915	60,000
Girard, Kans	2,446	75,000
North Topeka, Kans		71,000
Glasgow, Ky	2,316	60,000
Marion, Ky	1,627	60,000
Fort Fairfield, Me	1,621	80,000
Bad Axe, Mich	1,559	55,000

What a record for 11 villages, taken in order, that were given approximately three-quarters of a million dollars.

Every appropriation apparently needed a good ax. Remember these are generous public gifts by Uncle Sam, as shown by the 1913 Democratic public-buildings bill. The 1916 bill is of the same general character. Continuing we find—

Location.	Population.	Appropriation.
Midland, Mich	2,527	$60,000
Fairmont, Minn	2,958	65,000

Fairmont shriveled 92 souls from 1900 to 1910, but it crowded into the same 1913 bill.

Location.	Population.	Appropriation.
Butler, Mo	2,894	$60,000
Fayette, Mo	2,586	55,000
Harrisonville, Mo	1,947	52,500

Good work on the Treasury by Harrisonville, which gained 94 people during the preceding 10 years. Political pull is not lacking for Missouri. The "show me" State lands its share of profligate waste both in rivers and public buildings.

Location.	Population.	Appropriation.
Central City, Nebr	2,428	$55,000
Fallon, Nev	741	55,000

That is a good fall out of the Treasury by Fallon. Nevada is one of the newer sister States, but it has learned the ropes without much trouble.

Location.	Population.	Appropriation.
Winnemucca	1,786	$60,000
Fort Plain, N. Y	2,762	65,000
Chapel Hill, N. C	1,149	60,000

Over $50 apiece for every mother's son and daughter in the North Carolina crossroads town is a godsend. Certainly such an appropriation for Chapel Hill warrants prayers against "oppressive taxation wrung from the people," according to the Baltimore platform.

Location.	Population.	Appropriation.
Woodward, Okla	2,696	$110,000
Monessen, Pa	2,197	90,000

That rescues Monessen when the committee says $40 per soul expended in the village is a good investment for Uncle Sam. It sounds more like grab and "profligate waste," to use a familiar platform expression.

Location.	Population.	Appropriation.
State College, Pa	851	$75,000

There is a lesson for Young America in Government economy—on how not to do things. The 1913 Democratic public-buildings bill contained that item of profligacy at $90 per capita.

Location.	Population.	Appropriation.
Bellefourche, S. Dak	1,352	$75,000
Chamberlain, S. Dak	1,275	60,000

These are items in the 1913 keeping-us-in-war-taxes administration. Approximately $50 for every single soul in these South Dakota crossroads towns is given away by Uncle Sam.

Location.	Population.	Appropriation.
Athens, Tenn	2,264	$50,000
Franklin, Tenn	2,924	55,000
Gallatin, Tenn	2,399	50,000
Cameron, Tex	3,263	55,000
Comanche, Tex	2,756	50,000
Commerce, Tex	2,818	50,000
Gilmer, Tex	1,484	55,000
Honey Grove, Tex	2,300	50,000
Mount Pleasant, Tex	3,137	55,000
Pittsburg, Tex	1,916	55,000
Vernon, Tex	3,195	50,000

Above are just a few of the Tennessee and Texas items contained in the 1913 bill. They show the power of pull in creating profligate waste. Yet the Postmaster General from Texas protests against such public waste.

Location.	Population.	Appropriation.
Vernal, Utah	836	$50,000
Farmville, Va	2,971	60,000
Front Royal, Va	1,133	50,000
Leesburg, Va	1,597	55,000
Norton, Va	1,866	75,000

This is part of another installment for Virginia contained in the 1913 bill. "Profligate waste," thy name is democracy, and I am not referring to party labels but to a democracy that pays for shocking waste by oppressive taxation.

It should be understood that the bill proper arranges items alphabetically under different subheads. For this reason the disproportion in State allotments and size of villages require tabulating.

One Wisconsin item in the 1913 bill is for a city of less than 5,000 population, but I am offering no defense and only submitting facts which show that notwithstanding the vigorous protest of the minority report over 80 per cent of our public buildings are being erected in towns having less than 5,000 inhabitants and less than $15,000 annual receipts, and less than $1,000 annual rental.

Building sites—just building sites alone—carrying several hundred thousands in the aggregate, went to some 60 villages with a population under 3,000. As an illustration, a few building sites for Kentucky are found in the 1913 public-buildings bill, showing the class of villages and crossroads that were generously remembered by the committee, to be hereafter followed up with extravagant appropriations for buildings in these crossroads:

[Document 936, 63d Congress, p. 43.]

Location.	Population.	Annual rent.	Site appropriation.
Barbourville, Ky	1,633	$408	$5,000
Central City, Ky	2,545	250	7,500
Elizabethtown, Ky	1,907	400	7,500
Eminence, Ky	1,274	193	8,000

Eminence is properly named for nerve temperature when, with 1,274 souls and $3,825 annual postal receipts, it gets $8,000 for a building site. That ought to buy 100 acres of good farm land right in the center of the village, and should furnish the chairman of the Democratic national convention in 1912 and 1916 with a gold-headed cane sent by admiring constituents. Think of an $8,000 building site in a town with $193 annual rental.

Continuing—

Location.	Population.	Annual rent.	Site appropriation.
Falmouth, Ky	1,180	$340	$5,000
Harrodsburg, Ky	3,147	600	10,000

Hats off to Harrodsburg. Doubtlessly that is enough to buy one of the best business blocks in the village. Even Falmouth could afford to contribute a rainbow necktie toward the garb of the distinguished ex-chairman of the ex-convention and a present statesman from Kentucky.

Location.	Population.	Annual rent.	Site appropriation.
Hodgenville, Ky	744	$300	$5,000
Murray, Ky	942	240	5,000
Paintsville, Ky	942	132	5,000
Pikeville, Ky	1,280	332	7,500
Prestonburg, Ky	1,120	174	5,000

There are no pikers in Pikeville when Uncle Sam pays the bills, but in these times of profligate waste and war taxes there is pork in porkville Kentucky, and the fair State has many struggling villages that lay claim to the biggest share.

The situation in Kentucky's assignment for the last public building sites is worth studying. Eleven of these villages, having an aggregate population of 15,594, were given approximately $70,000 for building sites. The total annual office receipts in these 11 Kentucky villages reached $57,978, or an average of slightly over $5,000 for each village, while Prestonburg reports only $2,633, or about 25 per cent of the minimum rate recommended by Chairman CLARK in his report, and only 17 per cent of the minimum amount urged by Postmaster General Burleson, who, in his report, denounces this bad practice of buying sites in advance.

These 11 sites were expected to marshal a few votes for the last public-building porous plaster and are certainly a tribute to profligate waste. Eleven public monuments to grab were assigned to Kentucky in 1913 in the single item of building sites, We will discover that the present public-buildings bill is a worthy imitator of its immediate predecessor. Oh, for a Proctor Knott to sing the praises of Hodgenville, Paintsville, and Pikeville, and Murray, and Prestonburg. Duluth, with the second largest harbor in the country, has several times the population of the entire 11 Kentucky villages just enumerated, yet Duluth was an inspiration to Kentucky's distinguished statesmen.

DESERTED FEDERAL COURTHOUSES.

In several cases a Government courthouse is combined with the local post office, and to show just what kind of Government investment that makes, it is stated on page 83 that only seven cities in the United States paid rental for Federal courts prior to the erection of Federal buildings.

The following include a few courthouses generally built with some local post office and the total days of court during a year and cost of building to accommodate that litigation:

Location.	Days per year.	Appropriation.
Tuscaloosa, Ala	5	$157,500
Batesville, Ark	6	80,000
Fresno, Cal	4	150,000
Sacramento, Cal	4	430,000
Fernandina, Fla	4	430,000
Marianna, Fla	3	175,000
Ocala, Fla	5	114,000

That is going some in Florida for a total of 12 days of court, but Florida by legislative accident holds the chairmanships of the two great pork-barrel committees. Counting interest and expense, it costs the Government over $3,000 a day to provide halls of justice for these Florida litigants. Of course, Florida has many other courthouses built at Government expense, as previously stated.

Kentucky gets a good pull for Federal courthouses:

Location.	Days per year.	Appropriation.
Bowling Green, Ky	3	$145,000
Jackson, Ky	9	100,000
Owensboro, Ky	5	175,000
Paducah, Ky	6	220,500
Richmond, Ky	11	130,000

Louisiana is also remembered with vacant "Government monuments."

Location.	Days per year.	Appropriation.
Alexandria, La	4	$125,000
Lake Charles, La	5	125,000
Monroe, La	4	75,000
Opelousas, La	2	50,000

Mississippi gets generous aid as usual.

The Flood Control Committee does not control the flood of "profligate waste" that goes to Mississippi, according to the following Federal court buildings:

Location.	Days per year.	Appropriation.
Aberdeen, Miss	8	$79,000
Biloxi, Miss	8	125,000
Clarkesdale, Miss	5	115,750
Meridian, Miss	8	130,000

North Carolina, with usual modesty, gets a few dollars for sundry localities when looking for justice.

Location.	Court days.	Appropriation.
Charlotte, N. C	6	$342,000
Elizabeth City, N. C	10	140,000
Newbern, N. C	9	95,000
Statesville, N. C	6	77,500
Washington, N. C	3	144,000
Wilkesboro, N. C	5	60,000
Wilmington, N. C	10	600,000

This reaches an average cost per day to the Government of about $3,000 for halls of justice in North Carolina. But, then, a Secretary of the Navy, chairmen of Ways and Means and of Judiciary Committees all make up a formidable front when their State is shouting for public-buildings and river and harbor appropriations.

The list could be extended to cover many other States, and, of course, it is to be understood that many other cities in these States have Federal buildings, and, further, that generous giving is not limited North or South. It is all part of the cash distributing system which has been in vogue during recent years, and which has grown more stupendous and extravagant in the last two or three bills, as will appear from the total amounts to which I desire later to refer.

To the student of public-buildings expenditures both Senate Document 321, Sixty-fourth Congress, and Document 244, Sixty-third Congress, are instructive.

From these documents it appears that in all 1,479 "projects" are for public buildings; several hundred are in towns under 5,000 population, and 216 in towns under 3,000 population. Sixty-six communities of 10,000 people or more are yet unprovided, while the number of corner crossroads and jerk-water towns that are now being provided is rapidly increasing in order to get enough votes for the bill.

Is it not time to take an accounting of stock? With that end in view I have submitted these few facts gathered from official reports which are of special interest in days of plum distribution through the imposition of war taxes.

A hasty analysis of the 1913 public-buildings bill has been given, because it is important for us to understand where public moneys have been wasted in the past when we seek to measure the 1916 bill before us.

Waste, extravagance, and political pull have governed public-buildings bills in recent years, according to facts presented by the Public Buildings Commission. In the bill before us the same method of pork-barrel construction has been pursued, and "profligate waste wrung from the people by oppressive taxation" seems to be a cardinal virtue with those who stand sponsors for the 1916 bill.

Let us first examine into the method of distribution to congressional districts in order to secure votes for the 1916 bill.

Needless to say, the list of districts or Members is not mentioned by way of individual criticism, but to disclose the vice of the system.

MEMBERS MUST INTRODUCE BILLS.

The only present method of securing building appropriations is by this omnibus bill. However important may be a public building from a Government point of view, irrespective of local desires, Members have no other alternative than that of submitting their requests to the Public Buildings Committee. As stated in the discussion of the wasteful river and harbor bills, Representatives in Congress do not require any defenders of their standards of public or private honesty. No one familiar with the facts will question the high character of Members individually and collectively. Neither does any Member profit financially by measures passed by Congress. If this statement is subject to exception, it is so rare as not to affect the general high estimate of those called upon to serve in either branch of Congress.

We are, however, bound to vicious practices, and one of the most pernicious is the omnibus public-buildings bill. Every constituency may desire a "Government monument," as these public buildings have been airily termed by their defenders. Constituencies are frequently urged to press their claims by interested local parties, and sometimes Representatives are persuaded to join in the omnibus bill by the allowance of some local item in order to insure their support. The system is vicious, wasteful, and notorious. It has become a public scandal and finds few apologists. In presenting the facts disclosed by this bill, it is also with the purpose of offering a substitute measure for the present method, not alone because of profligate waste now incurred but because of the legislative travesty and fundamental wrong comprehended in the average omnibus public-buildings bill.

Every Member must determine his own standards, and I do not presume to question individual acts or motives. I shall not do so in the bill under consideration, but in order to insure correct knowledge of the means of public-buildings distribution I herewith submit tables that were presented in the Senate last session which I have not had opportunity to personally verify. If incorrect in any particular, the House Committee on Public Buildings should rectify misstatements made in other parliamentary bodies.

States listed alphabetically, districts, and amounts set apart in the 1916 public-buildings bill are shown by tabulation:

ALABAMA (10 DISTRICTS).

Location.	Representative.	District.	Amount.
Extensions, remodeling, etc.:
Mobile	Gray	1st district	$100,000
New buildings on sites acquired or authorized:
Greenville	Dent	2d district	30,000
Union Springs	Steagal	3d district	30,000
Sylacauga	Blackmon	4th district	30,000
Albertville	Burnett	7th district	25,000
Attalla	Burnett	7th district	30,000
New sites and buildings:
Athens	Almon	8th district	35,000
New sites only:
Montgomery	Dent	2d district	175,000
Ozark	Steagal	3d district	5,000
Sheffield	Almon	8th district	5,000

In dividing up the proposed 1916 plums it will be found by a coincidence that the second district gets two, the third district two, the seventh district two, the eighth district two, and the first and fourth one each. An analysis of the population and other items of interest will be found elsewhere in my remarks.

ALASKA.

Location.	Representative.	District.	Appropriation.
Increase in limit of cost:
Juneau	Wickersham	Delegate	$300,000
Special legislation:
Sitka (grant lands owned by Government to Territory as home for aged).

ARIZONA.

Location.	Representative.	District.	Appropriation.
Increase in limit of cost:
Globe	Hayden	At large	$25,000
New sites only:
Bisbee	do	do	25,000
Flagstaff	do	do	7,000
Yuma	do	do	6,000
Special legislation:
Nogales	do	do	120,000

Arizona scores five times in the 1916 bill and is well remembered.

The last census gives Flagstaff, Nogales, and Yuma about 2,000 population each, yet these villages are cared for in addition to other cities named. In the average district are many cities that could qualify with larger population than in Flagstaff, Nogales, and Yuma, while in the average State scores of cities of larger relative population would be pleased to receive similar evidence of their Uncle Sam's favor. It is submitted that in view of present costs of maintenance these Arizona items come under the Democratic platform's denunciation of "profligate waste wrung from the people by oppressive taxation."

ARKANSAS (7 DISTRICTS).

Location.	Representative.	District.	Appropriation.
New buildings on sites acquired or authorized:
Forest City	Caraway	1st district	$25,000
Brinkley	Oldfield	2d district	25,000
Conway	Jacoway	5th district	40,000
Stuttgart	Taylor	6th district	30,000
Eldorado	Goodwin	7th district	25,000
New sites only:
Blytheville	Caraway	1st district	9,000
Van Buren	Wingo	4th district	6,000
Little Rock	Jacoway	5th district	175,000

It must be conceded that the distribution is fairly generous to Arkansas. The first district, with Forest City of 2,484 inhabitants and Blytheville with 3,849 souls, is taken in blythe and gay. The second district only gets one chance at the grab bag, but Brinkley's 1,740 people are happy in having landed a $25,000 plum in addition to a $5,000 building site. In 1890 Brinkley had 1,510 people, and in 1910, after a period of 20 prosperous years, Brinkley registered 1,740, or an annual increase of 11 souls per year. Brinkley's gross receipts reached $6,752 in 1910, or less than one-half the amount recommended by Mr. Burleson's report. The fourth district has Van Buren, 3,878 souls; the fifth gets two whacks at the Treasury, one for Little Rock and the other for Conway, 2,794 souls. The sixth district gets Stuttgart, with 2,740 watchful waiters, and the seventh is given $25,000 for Eldorado, with 4,202 souls. Incidentally, seven-eighths of the Arkansas haul is barred by Mr. Burleson's report, but as Arkansas received about $1,000,000 in the 1916 river and harbor bill for an insignificant commerce, it may be following the precedent there set, in demanding its share of this omnibus bill.

CALIFORNIA (11 DISTRICTS).

Location.	Representative.	District.	Appropriation.
Extensions, remodeling, etc.:
Sacramento	Curry	3d district	$50,000
New buildings on sites acquired or authorized:
San Francisco	Kahn	4th district	600,000
Oakland	Elston	6th district	650,000
Modiste	Church	7th district	65,000
Long Beach	Randall	9th district	200,000
San Bernardino	Kittner	11th district	70,000
New sites and buildings:
Petaluma	Kent	1st district	60,000
New sites only:
Placerville	Raker	2d district	10,000
Susanville	do	do	10,000
San Jose	Hayes	8th district	15,000
San Mateo	do	do	15,000
Santa Monica	Stephens	10th district	15,000
Venice	do	do	1000 0
Redlands	Kittner	11th district	30,000

California's items are mathematically well distributed. Ten of its eleven districts are represented in the bill, and thus, according to all rules of the game, 10 votes are secured for the 8 Arkansas items and the 10 Alabama items. Placerville, with its 1,914 souls, and Susanville, with its 688 watchful waiting villagers, according to the 1910 census, will be able to purchase suitable sites in these enterprising second district villages with their $10,000 allotments. In fact, these towns are among the prize movievilles of the great Pacific Coast State. In proportion to their size they move the largest haul contained in the bill for two building sites, and for the longest distance, to wit, across the continent. In justice to California it may be said that nearly all of its items are for cities of over 4,000 inhabitants, but Burleson's report protested against appropriations for such cities, and vigorously opposed paying for any sites before an appropriation was made for buildings.

COLORADO (4 DISTRICTS).

Location.	Representative.	District.	Appropriation.
New buildings on sites acquired or authorized:
Sterling	Timberlake	2d district	$55,000
Canon City	Keating	3d district	55,000
Montrose	Taylor	4th district	150,000

Colorado is modest, but then Colorado never had much practice in the public purse; its distinguished delegation has not yet learned the ropes. Next year it may seek a few thousands for Bush Creek or Pawnee Creek in order to float battleships up to Denver. When its delegation once gets started the appetite will grow, for in the money-grab game there is no limit excepting the bottom of the Federal Treasury and the blue sky above.

CONNECTICUT (5 DISTRICTS).

Location.	Representative.	District.	Appropriation.
New buildings on sites acquired or authorized:
Manchester	Oakey	1st district	$40,000
New sites and buildings:
Norwalk	Hill	4th district	140,000
Winsted	Glynn	5th district	60,000
New sites only:
Essex	Freeman	2d district	6,000

Connecticut paid $1,283,695 into the individual income-tax fund in 1915. Florida paid $229,509 for the same fiscal year, and Georgia paid $440,600. In the river and harbor roll of grab Florida and Georgia secured many hauls for every single one given to Connecticut. Florida and Georgia follow on the heels of Connecticut with public buildings, and although their combined individual income-tax contribution does not reach half that paid by Connecticut the State of wooden nutmegs has been badly distanced in the legislative race both in river and harbor allotments and public buildings for jerk-water stations.

DELAWARE (1 DISTRICT).

Location.	Representative.	District.	Appropriation.
New building on site acquired or authorized:
Newark	Miller	At large	$30,000

Delaware only has one Representative, and it must be admitted Delaware can not cut as much public-buildings hay as Arizona; but as the Arizona Member spells his politics differently this may account for Flagstaff, Nogales, and Yuma. Newark, Del., with its 1,913 souls, has not quite reached the size of the three Arizona villages, according to the 1910 census, but how many cities of 4,000 inhabitants in the country are unprovided when Burleson's report in 1913 showed 284 cities of 5,000 people or over where no post-office building had been built or authorized? Probably a couple of thousand cities of 4,000 inhabitants have been unprovided, but under the present system of political pull it is not material what size or importance is possessed by any town provided the Representative's vote is secured for the bill. Burleson protested against cities under 5,000 inhabitants in the bill, but Burleson's report does not affect the construction of the 1916 public-buildings bill. An analysis of this bill by Treasury officials shows that Burleson's limitations are far too liberal, judging by estimates of increased expenses which are in part submitted elsewhere.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Location.	Representative.	District.	Appropriation.

Armory, National Guard	Dyer	12th district, Missouri.	800,000

FLORIDA (4 DISTRICTS).

Location.	Representative.	District.	Appropriation.
New buildings on sites acquired or authorized:
Lake City	Clark	2d district	$35,000
Kissimmee	Sears	4th district	35,000
New sites and buildings:
Clearwater	Sparkman	1st district	40,000
New sites only:
Arcadia	do	do	5,000
Monticello	Clark	2d district	5,000
Perry	do	do	5,000
West Palm Beach	Sears	4th district	10,000

The 1913 public-buildings bill carried 11 items for Florida's four districts.

When the river and harbor bill was before the House, the Oklawaha River in Florida was included for an authorized expenditure of $733,000. On that occasion a rhymster unburdened himself of the following from Mother Goose down to date:

We have a crooked creek, that has a crooked name,
And grabs a crooked million, while in a crooked game,
To make a crooked water power run up a crooked hill,
It crooks your Uncle Samuel through a crooked river bill.

No pride of authorship went with the stanza, and the same is true of another, discovered in an ancient cryptogram of Bacon on bacon. It would seem that he was no mean prophet when we analyze the 1913 public-buildings bill and the 1916 public-buildings bill before us. His deciphered baconic prophecy reads:

There was a crooked crossroads, and a crooked Jim Crow town,
That swiped two crooked building grabs and crooked the public brown.
Each first tried crooked private bills, but crooked bills slept still,
'Till all passed together in a crooked building bill.

Let it be said this was not directed toward appropriations in any particular State so far as appears.

Presumably Bacon did not mean that Representatives receive personal benefit from appropriations. Constituencies demand that Members bring home the bacon, so the Kissimmee River and Kissimmee village are found in both river and public-buildings bills. All the Representative gets is kicks when he fails to secure the amount locally demanded. Clearwater Crossroads, with only 1,171 souls, gets $40,000 in the public-buildings grab, and running true to form and name it gets $38,000 for a shallow water front, with $52,000 more to follow.

Further comment on Florida items may be improper, because two distinguished statesmen from that State, or one-half of its total, through a peculiar coincidence, are chairmen of the River and Harbor and Public Building Committees.

GEORGIA (12 DISTRICTS).

Location.	Representative.	District.	Appropriation.
New buildings on sites acquired or authorized:
Waynesboro	Edwards	1st district	$25,000
Rossville	Lee	7th district	25,000
Monroe	Tribble	8th district	30,000
Sandersville	Vinson	10th district	30,000
New sites only:
Blakeley	Park	2d district	6,000
Cairo	do	do	6,000
Pelham	do	do	6,000
Ashburn	Crisp	3d district	5,000
Cuthbert	do	do	6,000
Decatur	Howard	5th district	8,000
East Point	do	do	8,000
Jackson	Wise	6th district	5,000
Thomaston	do	do	5,000
Covington	Tribble	8th district	5,000
Commerce	Bell	9th district	5,000
Winder	do	do	5,000
Boxley	Walker	11th district	5,000
Fort Valley	Hughes	12th district	8,000
Hawkinsville	do	do	8,000

I will not presume to comment further upon the amounts allotted to each State and method of distribution beyond calling attention to the fact that practically every Georgia item goes to some small village against the protest contained in the Burleson report. More significant, the items are distributed among 10 of the 12 districts, and thereby insures generous support for a bill which has never been seriously opposed in past years. Permit me to say at this point that this bill and similar bills will probably be opposed, irrespective of the party standing sponsor for such legislation. This prediction is not made as a warning, but the public has awakened to the fact that such bills are constructed on wrong principles, reek with "profligate waste," and are vicious in character. The end of pork barrels will be in sight when a national budget system is put in force.

New sites only:
Lewistown	Chiperfield	At large	5,000

Unthinking Members point with astonishment to the large appropriation recommended for Chicago of $4,250,000. The business man quickly discovers that Chicago's receipts last year, 1915, reached $19,650,961.89, or four and one-half times the total appropriation provided. It is less than $2 per capita, and if further argument is needed there is no other course to pursue. No buildings can be rented or other provision made to care for a great public necessity. On the other hand, we find, same page:

Location.	Appropriation.	Population.	Rental.	Per Capita.
East Moline	$45,000	2,665	$576	$17
Pittsfield	35,000	2,095	750	17
Galva	45,000	2,498	450	18

Not one of these cities reached the 5,000 limit in population or $1,000 annual rental urged by Mr. Burleson, and only one reached the annual receipts. Yet as an investment Chicago brings back in one year through receipts four and a half times the total amount appropriated for that city. Speaking generally, it will be discovered that Illinois is one of the smallest offenders among the States, and while it has 4 villages under 3,000 population in the 1916 bill North Carolina has 13 such villages in the same bill.

INDIANA (13 DISTRICTS).

Location.	Representative.	District.	Appropriation.

No detailed analysis of distribution will be attempted beyond a brief statement of facts in each case.

IOWA (11 DISTRICTS).

Location.	Representative.	District.	Appropriation.
Extensions, remodeling, etc.:
Shenandoah	Towner	8th district	$14,000
Sioux City	Steele	11th district	335,000
New buildings on sites acquired or authorized:
Fairfield	Kennedy	1st district	50,000
Marengo	Hull	2d district	30,000
Oelwein	Haugen	4th district	40,000
Newton	Ramseyer	6th district	55,000
New sites and buildings:
Eagle Grove	Sweet	3d district	35,000
Knoxville	Dowell	7th district	40,000
Corning	Towner	8th district	35,000
Harlan	Green	9th district	35,000
Algona	Woods	10th district	45,000
New sites only:
Mount Pleasant	Kennedy	1st district	7,500
Indianola	Dowell	7th district	5,000

The fifth Iowa district, by a peculiar situation disclosed, was omitted from the bill. A good angel must have ignored the district when allotments were made.

Possibly the builders of the bill sought to have this omission counterbalance an extravagant grab by Marengo, which gets $30,000, has a population of 1,786, annual rental of $425, and annual receipts of $7,502.33. It is also noteworthy that every Member of the Iowa delegation, with one exception, fearlessly opposed the 1916 river and harbor pork barrel, notwithstanding the distribution above noted.

KANSAS (8 DISTRICTS).

Location.	Representative.	District.	Appropriation.
Extensions—remodeling, etc.:
Fort Scott	Taggart	2d district	$5,000
New buildings on sites acquired or authorized:
Holton	Anthony	1st district	35,000
New sites and buildings:

Junction City	Helvering	5th district	55,000
Norton	Connelly	6th district	35,000
Dodge City	Shouse	7th district	60,000
Wellington	Ayres	8th district	15,000
New sites only:
Oswego	Campbell	3d district	5,000
Wichita	Ayres	8th district	75,000

The effort to cover Kansas in order to secure the delegation's vote is apparent at a glance. Comparative need by the Government in States or districts has no necessary part in such distribution.

One two, three, four, five, six, seven, eight,
Potent arguments to swing the State.

KENTUCKY (11 DISTRICTS).

Location.	Representative.	District.	Appropriation.
Increase in limit of cost:

Stanford	Helm	8th district	5,000
Pineville	Powers	11th district	5,000
New sites and buildings:
Hazard	Langley	10th district	40,000

This analysis indicates a generous method of distribution in order to insure support for the bill. Twelve of the above 13 items in Kentucky are for villages under 4,000 inhabitants, none over 5,000, 10 under 3,000, and 1 reached just 537 souls at the time of the last census. Elsewhere I give a brief analysis of that particular phase of the bill.

Some comparisons are made elsewhere showing the generous treatment afforded Missouri. Only one brief note is here offered. In addition to caring for nearly every Missouri district, the second district enjoys the proud distinction of corralling four luscious plums, present and prospective, among which are noted:

Location.	Population.	Receipts.	Rental.
Milan	2,191	$6,684	$500
Paris	1,474	7,037	540
Salisbury	1,834	7,438	500

Match it if you can in the 1916 bill.

"To keep the outs out, in our State of 'Show me,'
We mustn't count pork as expense," sez he.

The corrupt-practices act seems to be a dead letter when no limit is fixed on Government aid. Why not have the corrupt-practices act properly limit the items to be allowed each Member in public-buildings bills to one single piece of bacon? The President urges that the corrupt-practices act be amended. To Missouri's second district should go the honor of suggesting this amendment.

In passing, it may be noted that for mathematical perfection North Carolina always brightly shines, 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10. Read over the list of grabs for small cross-roads towns, and then say which one of the 10 districts in Secretary Daniels's State was overlooked, and also predict how many votes will be given to this bill by North Carolina when the roll is called. It may need another boost of war taxes by the Ways and Means Committee, but why worry when North Carolina holds the key to such legislation. It may also seem politically significant, as shown above, that Wilson is the first to raise the limit. But Wilson is peculiarly the one town with over 5,000 population, while 13 of the 16 North Carolina items are in towns under 3,000 people.

A brief comment in passing is again offered. In 13 Southern States an incomplete statement of income tax for fiscal year to June 30, 1915, is reported at $4,855,902. In 13 Northern States $65,308,684, or for every dollar paid by the 13 Southern States $13 was paid by 13 Northern States. Sectionalism is not absent in the 1916 bill, as evidenced by every page of the bill. Take the above items for illustration. Not one complies with Burleson's report or even Chairman CLARK's report:

Location.	Population.	Rental.	Receipts.
Rogersville	1,242	$190	$5,466
Huntingdon	1,112	360	4,156
Lafollette	2,816	425	5,426
Lenoir	3,392	500	5,986
Rockwood	3,660	360	5,858
McMinnville	2,299	540	8,724
Lewisburg	1,830	360	9,431
Dickson	1,850	425	7,451
Brownsville	2,882	660	8,111

In the Public Buildings Commission's report, signed by Chairman CLARK, occurs the recommendation that no public building be authorized where annual receipts are less than $10,000 per year, and in the consideration of each project "a comparison of rental values for suitable quarters, together with cost of maintenance and operation, including interest at 3 per cent * * * shall be made in order that it may be determined whether its erection would be a desirable investment or not." Not one item meets that condition. All are "profligate waste wrung from the people by oppressive taxation."

Who pays these extravagant bills? I have given facts to show how bad this bill is. How can we support it?

[1] Subpost office and site. [2] Courthouse and other branches.

Elsewhere will be shown a brief analysis of the Texas items, but here it is sufficient to say that three-fourths of the above 16 items are located in villages under 4,000 people, one-half in villages under 3,000 people, and one-quarter in crossroads under 2,000 people. In the 1913 bill the 18 Texas districts gobbled up 28 projects. In this symmetrically built pork barrel every district has been cared for, with several notable exceptions.

Dallas, of Trinity River fame, gets a modest $1,800,000, but the same criticism which covers nearly every State's allotment is, first, that the items are allotted, and, second, that they are distributed without reference to Government interests or needs. Texas items are no exception to the rule.

What can be said to justify buildings in many of the above, including San Benito, with no population given in 1910, and rent of $15 per month; or Henderson, with no population given in 1910, and rent of $25 per month; or Alvin, with 1,453 population in 1910, and rent of $100 per year; or Lockhart, with 2,945 population in 1910, and rent of $660 per year?

What a commentary on "profligate waste" is offered by Texas and by practically every other State.

The first analysis of the 1916 bill just offered is to show its method of preparation, the skill in distribution of items, and the generally objectionable character of the 1916 omnibus public-buildings bill.

An important finding of the Public Buildings Commission in this connection occurs when, on page 82, the statement is made that in 284 cities in 1910, each having a population of 5,000 or over, no post-office building had been built or authorized; and this is coupled with the statement that in 508 cities of the United States postal receipts reached over $10,000 at offices in private quarters, but at the time of that report, April 30, 1914, and consequently up to the present time none of these cities have been provided for in the six omnibus bills the first of which was passed in 1902 and which in the aggregate have authorized over $150,000,000 for public buildings.

Leaving out of consideration the insistance by General Burleson that minimum receipts should not be less than $15,000 per annum, and the further demonstrable fact by the Treasury Department that even this figure is far too low if Government business interests are to be considered, we may well ask what has been the method of preparing omnibus bills in the past?

Why have these 508 cities and the 284 cities been ignored in past bills, and why have hundreds of country crossroads elbowed the larger towns out of the way? On this subject the commission provides some interesting statistics as follows:

SECTIONAL DISCRIMINATION.

The favored States that had provided buildings with Federal money in all of the cities of 5,000 inhabitants or over, according to the report, are as follows:

Arkansas, Delaware, Florida, Georgia, Idaho, Iowa, Maryland, Mississippi, Nebraska, Nevada, New Mexico, North Carolina, North Dakota, South Carolina, South Dakota, Tennessee, Utah, and West Virginia.

Among States having only one city of 5,000 people waiting for one of Uncle Sam's monuments, are the following:

Alabama, Arizona, Colorado, Kansas, Louisiana, Montana, Oregon, Virginia, and Wyoming.

States having only two cities unprovided are Kentucky, Oklahoma, Texas, and Washington.

In other words, the 30 States named were so well taken care of by the Public Buildings Committee that only 17 cities existed in the entire list with a population of 5,000 or more which were unprovided with Government buildings, whereas the remaining 18 States have 267 cities of 5,000 population or over without Government monuments.

It is interesting to note the sectional distribution of these plums.

All towns of 5,000 population have been provided by law in the States of Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, Maryland, Mississippi, North Carolina, South Carolina, and Tennessee.

States having only one shorn lamb left out in the cold include Alabama, Louisiana, and Virginia.

States possessing two deserted lamblets in 1913 include Kentucky, Texas, and Oklahoma.

I do not overlook the fact that several Northern States with aggressive Members have cleaned up waste places in their States in past years, and, it is immaterial where located, the method of congressional distribution speaks for itself.

Another interesting statement appears on page 77 of the report put forth by the Public Buildings Commission last session, and I invite attention to the preceding list when comparisons are made.

There are 508 cities in the United States where local post-office receipts reach $10,000 or more annually which are not provided with public buildings.

States which have no such city unprovided include Arkansas, Georgia, Kentucky, Mississippi, North Carolina, South Carolina, Tennessee, and Virginia.

States with one shorn lamb, Alabama.

States with two shorn lambs, Florida and Louisiana.

In the foregoing 11 States just 5 cities with receipts of $10,000 or over are unprovided out of 508 cities throughout the country. States that have a generous grist of such cities left out in the cold by the Public Buildings Committee are:

Cities with $10,000 receipts.

Pennsylvania	77
New York	56
Massachusetts	40
Michigan	21
Indiana	17
Iowa	17
New Jersey	25
Wisconsin	22
Ohio	39
California	33
Illinois	30

Eleven Northern States have unprovided 377 cities of that class.

Eleven Southern States have unprovided 5 cities of that class.

The rule may not be enforced on sectional lines, but at the risk of being criticized for sectionalism, as in the case of the river and harbor bill, I set forth official statistics, leaving to the individual Member such deduction as he cares to make.

In the case of river and harbor bills I showed that approximately one-half of the appropriations, which now average annually over $40,000,000 for all our waterways, goes to Southern States, although less than 2 per cent of our actual waterway commerce is handled by those States and less than 7 per cent of the total contributions to the Federal Treasury come from those 13 States.

The showing with the $50,000,000 so-called flood-control bill for the reclamation of 16,000,000 acres of land along the Mississippi River is of the same general character. Possibly the fact that 31 chairmen of important House committees out of 32 come from the 13 States of the solid South creates a suspicion that sectionalism is not absent in appropriation bills.

As previously stated, 13 Southern States contributed income taxes to the Federal Treasury in 1915 reaching $4,855,902, whereas 13 Northern States contributed $65,308,684, or 13 to 1.

In the distribution of building items in the allotment to States, or in the omnibus 1916 public-building bill, the splendid political symmetry of the barrel is not affected by the needs of Government or by the comparative size of States or taxes contributed. For this reason New York and Missouri are a standoff, although New York is nearly three times as large politically and eighteen times as large in tax contributions. Alabama and Michigan furnish food for thought, while Massachusetts and Kentucky pair off in items. Other States are briefly compared to show how the builders labored to give every favored State an equal allotment on the vote basis.

In order to cover some districts it was found necessary to build Government monuments in unknown villages, crossroads, and jerk-water junctions, but nothing has stumped the committee. These comparisons are offered in order to demonstrate the injustice to the Government and States brought about by an omnibus bill that presumably has never been excelled in its tribute to profligate waste.

The disproportion in size of towns in the foregoing comparison is not so striking as will appear in other cases, but it is significant, and the fact is also worth considering that every Alabama district is cared for on the average, although its contribution to the Federal Treasury does not reach 10 per cent of the amount paid in by Michigan. In other words, it depends upon a symmetrical shaping of the buildings bill to secure votes from practically every district, both North and South.

The foregoing comparison shows where and how the money goes. North Carolina, with slightly more than one-third of the districts contained in Illinois and with about 7 per cent proportionate contribution to the Federal Treasury, gets 16 public buildings for its 10 districts, compared with 13 for Illinois' 27 districts, and of those in North Carolina 15 are under 4,000 population and 6 under 2,000. North Carolina provides the "ways" for profligate waste and Illinois the "means," while North Carolina controls both.

From the Journal of the American Institute of Architects, a New York paper, I find a list of several Florida public-buildings bills which are reported to have been introduced during the present session:

[1] Representative SPARKMAN. [2] Representative CLARK. [3] Site.

Florida's demands upon her Representatives, according to the Public Buildings Commission's report, had all been exhausted down to crossroads and villages, so that the foregoing is explained on the general supposition that these villages are next in order. We will have a continuing lower average population in this process of caring for Florida first, second, and last.

Possibly some excuse could be offered for the indiscretion of a new Member who several years ago introduced two bills for cities larger than 11 of the foregoing 12 projects, but what shall be said of two distinguished Members, with a total of over 30 years' service to their credit, who in the face of the Public Buildings Commission's report introduce 11 such bills?

Eight hundred thousand dollars for an even dozen Florida crossroad villages, with a total 1910 population of 23,871, is their contribution to public-buildings legislation offered this session by the two distinguished Florida chairmen of the River and Harbor and Public Buildings Committees. This statement is not offered by way of individual criticism, but rather because of the fact that to such distinguished gentlemen are assigned the construction of two omnibus bills which enjoy the titles of "pork barrels."

It is only fair to the committee to say that this Florida list was cut down in the 1916 bill, although the four districts are handsomely cared for compared with the allotments made to other States. Possibly this curtailment is due to the fact that in the last public-buildings bill Florida secured 11 items, as has been hereinbefore set forth, or an average of over four items in the last two bills for every one of the four Florida districts. A comparison between Florida and Minnesota is of interest, particularly in view of the comparative contributions to the Federal Treasury made by each State.

Again the comparison is startling between States apportioned the same number of building items. It takes 18 items in the last two bills to appease Florida's 4 districts, whereas 13 items are apportioned to the 10 Minnesota districts. Minnesota furnishes over $8 for every $1 contributed by Florida, and 5 of the Florida items are in villages of less than 2,000 inhabitants. Recent history does not record any protest from Florida against the public buildings or river and harbor bills. The reason is not hard to find.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. FREAR. Certainly; I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. JAMES. Does climate have anything to do with the southern appetite for "pork"?

Mr. FREAR. I do not know whether it has in that particular. I think it is the same condition of climate that affects the Brazos and Trinity, and some of the other streams which have acquired quite a reputation for cooling currency down in that part of the country.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman permit me to correct him?

Mr. FREAR. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. LONGWORTH. The gentleman stated that Ohio had 21 districts; it has 22.

Villages under 4,000	6	16
Cities over 5,000	10	5

The foregoing comparisons have been made to show first that, as stated, crossroads throughout the South are paired off with larger cities in the North. For illustration, Missouri has 16 out of 21 items in towns under 4,000, and 13 items in towns under 3,000. While New York has six and four, respectively. New York contributes $16 to the Federal Treasury for every dollar paid in by Missouri, but in the race for profligate public-buildings waste Missouri equals its record on waterway appropriations.

Further comparisons can be made to show the sectional character of the bill, but it is submitted that it is immaterial where the waste occurs, whether North or South it should be subject to the same criticism.

The foregoing allotment to States is also presented to indicate the symmetry of the omnibus buildings bill. One of the most significant facts disclosed by the statement relates to the general character of towns, crossroads, and flag stations that are included in the list. Although difficult to compile in the limited time afforded for investigation, I have presented a few comparisons of appropriations given to Northern and Southern States. In the first comparison it may be noted that nine-tenths of the Alabama and three-fourths of the Michigan items would be barred under the requirement urged by Postmaster General Burleson that only cities of 5,000 inhabitants or over be considered, and then only where the post-office receipts exceeded $15,000 annually and annual rental charge reaches over $1,000. Such a limit would prevent the passage of any omnibus public-buildings bill, because practically all the projects in Alabama and most of those in Michigan could not qualify. In this single illustration appears the fundamental weakness of providing public buildings by political-pull methods.

A casual examination shows how the same principle has been invoked to provide many southern crossroad towns in other States with Government monuments in order to secure buildings to meet Government needs in northern cities. The comparison speaks for itself. Income-tax comparisons are those collected only from individuals. The total income-tax payments are not at hand, but it is believed they will preserve the same relative difference in amounts.

It has been repeatedly suggested that Representatives owe to their constituencies all they can get for their districts and that their efficiency is so measured. It is further urged that districts generally will reward or punish Representatives according to the proportion of plums secured for their respective districts.

Every Member desires to perform his full duty by and for his district, but the oath of office contemplates public service not circumscribed by congressional district boundaries, nor does it follow that pork-getting proclivities determine public usefulness, popularity, nor estimate of ability held by the average district.

The River and Harbor Committee of 21 members may properly be held to include those who in past years have abundantly cared for their constituencies, yet nearly one-third of that committee, including several of its oldest members, are to be retired by the primaries or election of 1916, indicating that widespread popularity does not necessarily follow the ability to get something for one's district whatever reason determined results.

DISTRICTS PREFER PUBLIC ECONOMY TO LOCAL PORK.

Measured by such token, I would be relegated to private life, because, with 125 miles of the greatest inland rivers in the country bordering on my district, I have repeatedly opposed waterway and other forms of public waste. Possibly this accounts for a statement published during the campaign in one of the leading Democratic papers of my State, that—

> The Democratic national committee considers Representative FREAR'S district vulnerable, and is preparing to send a half dozen prominent speakers into the district to help the Democratic candidate. * * * In no other Wisconsin Republican congressional district is the Democratic committee thus concentrating its orators.

Money and speakers were generously shoved into the district by the committee during the recent campaign, in a vigorous effort to carry it. Plum getting, however, is not a necessary asset in the tenth Wisconsin district, which gave about 14,000 majority, or more than double its usual vote in indorsement of its Representative's course, and several thousand more than was given to the head of the ticket. Vulnerability does not ordinarily come through efforts to stop extravagance and waste, otherwise the Democratic national committee would have had something to show for its money and "orators" in this Wisconsin district. What is true of that district is true of the great majority of districts throughout the country where constituencies do not ask Representatives to support dishonest bills as a price for local appropriations.

Apologists for omnibus bills urge that the construction of public buildings by the Government is ordinarily a matter of business economy.

The 1913 public-buildings scandal was put through the House with only 20 minutes allowed for discussion of its four hundred and odd projects. Blindfolded, bound, and gagged, as has been stated. On February 17, 1913, the chairman of the Public Buildings Committee, Mr. CLARK, said:

SENSELESS RETRENCHMENT!

As a Democrat, I believe in retrenchment in Government expenditures, but I believe in some common-sense retrenchment and not in the senseless retrenchment demanded by the yellow journals of the land and the alleged economists in this House. * * *

I want to live to see the day when the Government of the United States will not have a single officer or employee in rented quarters. * * * From a business standpoint I am convinced it will be infinitely cheaper for the Government to own all of the property necessary for the transaction of its business than it will be to pay rent."

On page 8 of the report of the Public Buildings Committee, signed by Chairman CLARK shortly afterwards, appears this statement:

It is recommended that the present law that no building shall be authorized when the post-office receipts are less than $10,000 per year be continued. In the consideration of each project a comparison of rental value for suitable quarters, together with the cost of maintenance and operation, including interest at 3 per cent on the investment for the building proposed, shall be made in order that it may be determined whether its erection would be a desirable or proper investment.

Again the report, signed by Chairman CLARK, says (p. 8):

A general examination of sites and buildings authorized but not consummated has been made, and the commission is satisfied that some appropriations and authorizations have been made which are not justified. Other authorizations are too large. These authorizations were, it is believed, the result of the present unsatisfactory system of providing for and constructing public buildings.

NO LIMIT TO POST-OFFICE RECEIPTS REQUIRED.

I have quoted the commission's report to show that in the first public-buildings bill offered after the report was made the joke limit law on annual receipts is repeatedly violated, and in the estimates of proposed expense to be incurred the Treasury Department shows that over 80 per cent of the items in the bill, apart from a few improvements on existing buildings, are extravagant and wasteful. These figures conclusively show that it is not "infinitely cheaper for the Government to own all its property for the transaction of its business," but that it is grossly more extravagant and wasteful to establish Government buildings in country crossroads. If 2 and 2 make 4, then the Treasury Department makes an unanswerable argument against Chairman CLARK'S 1913 effusion.

If the present system of providing for and constructing public buildings is unsatisfactory, as declared by Chairman CLARK in his Public Buildings Commission's report just quoted, then why not change the scandalous system instead of seeking to put through another notorious bill, worse in character, if that be possible, than any of its predecessors—a bill that reeks with "profligate waste wrung from the people by oppressive taxation."

That is not a yellow-journal statement, but is conclusively proven by the report of the Treasury Department, the minority report of Gen. Burleson, and, in fact, by the Public Buildings Commission's report signed by Chairman CLARK, because the Treasury Department has analyzed the present and proposed cost on the basis urged by the Clark report, as I desire to show.

Herewith I present a significant analysis of portions of the public-buildings bill furnished by the Treasury Department, wherein is disclosed the large waste that will result to the Government by constructing buildings in hundreds of little towns all over the country. An annual average charge upon the Federal Treasury of between $3,000 and $4,000 will be incurred, whereas the cost to the Government under present conditions, according to the report, averages less than 25 per cent of the profligate waste that will be assumed under this bill. It should also be borne in mind that this list only affects a portion of the wasteful projects contained in the 1916 bill:

ANALYSES OF SECTIONS 3, 4, AND 5 OF PUBLIC-BUILDINGS BILL (1916) OF PLACES WHERE POSTAL RECEIPTS ARE LESS THAN $15,000.

NOTE.—Explanation of analyses of sections 3, 4, and 5 of public-buildings bill of places where postal receipts are less than $15,000.

"Place" indicates location of proposed building.

"Estimate" is the amount that the department estimated would be the cost of the project at the place named.

"Bill" is the amount provided in the omnibus bill for the place indicated.

"Interest" is the estimated interest on the amount named in said omnibus bill, with furnishing added.

"Depreciation" is the estimated annual depreciation on this same amount less amount paid for site.

"Janitor" and "Supplies" are, respectively, estimated annual cost for janitor service and supplies in each instance.

"Total" is the sum of the four previous columns, namely, "Interest," "Depreciation," "Janitor," and "Supplies."

[1] This total is not the sum of the previous columns of interest, depreciation, janitor, and supplies, for the reason that in 18 of the places named certain estimates were made as to the probable cost of upkeep for buildings which it was presumed would eventually be constructed on the sites only which the bills provided for. In these cases no estimates were made on buildings, as none were contemplated in the bills. The total of these 18 places amounts to $65,000, which, deducted from the above total, leaves a balance of $227,592.50, which is the total of the columns named where buildings were estimated upon.

In order to show the carnival of waste covered by the 1916 public-buildings bill introduced by Chairman CLARK on behalf of the committee I have just presented this significant analysis of items, reaching nearly 200 in number, wherein an official estimate has been prepared of the probable annual carrying charges of public buildings in the towns named.

The sites and buildings of 100 of these items furnish an initial cost of between four and five million dollars, although the sites for the first 59 items do not appear in the totals. Under our covering-up style of dribbling appropriations these 59 sites have already been bought in jerk-water crossroads and Jim Crow towns scattered all over the continent. It is probable that not one in a dozen of these vacant sites could be resold for one-half the amount paid by Uncle Samuel. For that reason earnest protests are encountered against abandoning any wasteful project or in refusing to erect buildings wherever located, now that a site has been purchased.

We are in the position of Pat's well-remembered preparedness. All that he needed in order to secure a smoke was the loan of a pipe and a little tobacco; he had the match. We have the sites for the first 59 items. Over $2,000,000 will be spent on the buildings on these sites, according to the appropriations, and then some.

ENORMOUSLY WASTEFUL MAINTENANCE CHARGES.

The original cost is not the most extravagant part of this public-buildings program. The Public Buildings Commission included some of the ablest authorities in the country, and with them was associated the present chairman of the Public Buildings Committee, Representative CLARK. That commission found in its report that the highest rental paid by the Government for any one of the 508 post offices having over $10,000 annual receipts and occupying leased quarters was $2,580 and the lowest annual rental $151. At 378 offices the rental is less than $1,000 annually, while for 4,320 post offices of all classes and branches the average annual rental in 1913 was $824. It will also be remembered that many of the "Government monuments" proposed in this public-buildings bill are for towns where the receipts are far below $10,000 annually, and in some cases do not reach half that amount. A large majority of the buildings are for cities of less than 5,000 inhabitants, and 90 per cent presumably are to be in towns where the rental is less than $1,000 annually.

The 59 public buildings first named in the last analysis herewith presented will make an annual burden upon the Treasury of $228,241 for buildings alone, or an average of $3,868 for each separate item. In 1913 the average rental for 4,320 post offices reached $824, so that if that average was reached in the 59 projects first named an average increase of over $3,000, or a profligate waste of over 350 per cent will be recorded. Expressed differently it means jumping a total rental on these 59 items, based on a $824 average, from $48,616 to $228,241 annually. In a short time this item of waste will overtake the original cost of construction because it is a continuing burden.

The analysis of comparative cost of the first 59 items also applies to the remaining items set forth in the last statement, which in all presumably carries an increased annual carrying charge of over a half million dollars apart from the original investment for "Government monuments." Have I made this plain? A brief examination of the bill, aided by these tabulated statements, will reveal the character of "profligate waste wrung from the people by oppressive taxation," which is proposed by an administration which in 1912 so vociferously denounced extravagance.

WHERE IS THE MONEY COMING FROM TO MEET SUCH EXTRAVAGANCES?

A word of warning to our Democratic friends. You are appropriating lavishly from a depleted Treasury. Under present conditions you are doubly taxing incomes in an effort to save your face financially.

Your chief prophet and spellbinder, who once pledged his candidate to only one presidential term, now predicts that prohibition shall become nation wide. I am speaking only of the financial side of the problem of running a Government when I remind you that approximately $250,000,000 of annual receipts used for meeting Federal expenditures comes from license or excise fees. What do you propose to do with such profligate waste bills as this public-building scandal, when, after scraping the bottom of the Federal Treasury to meet the waste of 1916, you now are providing for more private waterway waste, more private-land reclamation grabs, more public-buildings waste, and other schemes of like character. Practically one-third of the net revenue of the Government may be forfeited by the Treasury in a loss of excise fees. Many States throughout the country have already declared for State-wide prohibition, thereby reducing present Government license fees. We can not blind ourselves to the trend of public sentiment. Based strictly on the financial aspect of the case how can we stupidly continue to vote for these public-building and sectional-waterway grafts in view of the present and prospective condition of the Federal Treasury? Leaving out of consideration the vice that lays at the foundation of such omnibus bills and the potent influence exercised over other legislation by such public scandals, how can we close our eyes to the imperative necessity of lopping off "profligate waste" disclosed in the bill before us?

Mr. Speaker, when the omnibus river and harbor bill was opposed because of its inherent vice and waste, I offered a constructive measure, which I trust will receive consideration by the next Congress. Had the fortunes of politics given to the Republican Party the reins of power I am sure some such measure would have found favor, because that party was pledged to a budget system of which the proposed waterway bill could have been made a comprehensive and economical part. In addition it would give an impetus to actual inland-waterway navigation, providing its recommendations were followed. That waterway bill offers a genuine constructive program for all those who sincerely desire improvement of actual navigation. It removes pork appropriations from waterways but gives what the country has a right to demand, value received for waterway expenditures.

No criticism is of material service unless some constructive proposal is offered as a substitute. I am not ambitious to provide such a measure for public buildings, and realize that every obstacle to any change will be interposed by genuine lovers of political plums. However, I can not believe the people of the country are willing to be flimflammed much longer by such vicious, extravagant bills, and with the purpose of presenting a tentative measure that will insure needed public buildings and avoid local grabbing at public expense, I submit the following:

A BILL (NO. 18450) PROVIDING FOR A PUBLIC BUILDING COMMISSION.

A commission composed of the Secretary of the Treasury, the Postmaster General, and the Attorney General is hereby created whose duty it shall be to receive and investigate all applications for Government public buildings wherever located. The commission may provide rules concerning the size of communities, post-office receipts, and rental paid by the Government in determining where public buildings are to be constructed, and shall determine the character, cost, and plans of every public building.

The commission shall annually prepare a report of its findings and recommendations and the same shall be embodied in the report of the Secretary of the Treasury and of the Postmaster General. The amounts required to provide for the purchase of sites, construction of buildings, and purchase of needed equipment shall be included and made a part of the regular supply bills submitted by the Secretary of the Treasury to Congress.

In addition to the analyses already submitted, a further statement of facts is offered relative to conditions surrounding the 400 different projects included in the proposed 1916 public-buildings bill.

A bare statement of facts herein contained is enough to condemn the bill, and I ask its careful consideration by those who are called upon to vote for or against the bill's passage.

PROFLIGATE WASTE VERSUS RETRENCHMENT.

Never in the history of this country have conditions generally called for greater public economy. No sane man is deceived by the present fictitious national prosperity created by foreign conditions, and never before has the necessity for public retrenchment been more imperative.

We are confronted by a depleted Treasury, by oppressive taxes never before equaled in times of peace, by burdensome appropriations for legitimate Government needs and public defense. Then by what right do we approve notoriously wasteful and extravagant bills? I have performed what I believe to be a duty in opposing this bill. Needless to say, it is a disagreeable task and, I realize, will invite protests from those who have important measures contained in the pending bill. Public improvements are necessary and they should be carried on without hindrance, but this does not justify criminal waste in order to build Government monuments at hundreds of crossroads throughout the country. Let us exercise a small part of the economy and business judgment which men employ in the conduct of business enterprises. Place such public improvements in the hands of reputable officials connected with the administration responsible for expenditures and we will reach an end of extravagance and pork-barrel scandals.

Based on ordinarily good business judgment, I offer a further statement concerning the 1916 public-buildings bill which without argument is sufficient to condemn 80 per cent of the items contained in this bill. Is it any exaggeration to say that one-half of the $35,000,000 appropriation provided by the bill is unparalleled extravagance and "profligate waste wrung from the people by oppressive taxation."

Eldorado Springs, Mo., $5,000	2,503	7,626.21	390
Ely, Nev., $5,000	2,055	8,315.16	900
Essex, Conn., $6,000	2,745	8,087.39	240

Just 1 item in the last 14 noted meets the minimum of population, receipts, and rental urged by Mr. Burleson when the Government's business interests are considered. His estimates have been questioned by those who insist the limits are too low and ought to be raised. By the Treasury estimates they are too small by half, as heretofore shown.

Lafollette, Tenn., $6,000	2,816	5,425.91	425

Two of the foregoing 14 items meet the limits urged by Burleson for profitable buildings. The rest are wasteful. Think of Greer, Indianola (Miss.), Jackson, and other items, all of which are included in the 1916 bill.

McMinnville, Tenn., $5,000	2,299	8,724.74	540

Only 1 of the last 15 items can profitably be considered by the Government, according to Mr. Burleson. "Government monuments" in crossroads from Nevada to North Carolina are provided in the 1916 bill.

Pascagoula, Miss., $5,000	3,379	6,179.94	514
Pelham, Ga., $6,000	1,880	6,719.12	None.

Only 1 item in the last 15 meets limits fixed by Mr. Burleson for profitable or excusable construction by the Government. In this judgment he is sustained by Treasury estimates which have been presented, of carrying charges after buildings have been erected.

San Benito, Tex., $6,000	Not given.	8,199.12	180
Sanford, N. C., $7,000	2,282	9,568.04	500

Just 2, or at most 3, of the last 15 items are in the class rated as profitable to the Government. Perry's victory over the British has nothing on the Florida Perry's capture of Congress. San Benito, with $180 rental, will be increased over 2,000 per cent before the annual cost of the proposed monument is completed.

Wellsville, N. Y., $12,500	4,382	21,834.16	815

Two only of the last 15 items can be justified, according to Mr. Burleson. In all others the population, receipts, and rental do not warrant public buildings. This does not deter Susanville's 688 souls from making their demand for a $10,000 site. "Profligate waste," thy name is Susanville.

[1] Not listed

Wichita and possibly one or two others qualify under Mr. Burleson's estimate of justified building at Government expense, but in order to get through the bill needs the vote of Representatives interested in Government monuments that are to be built in Williamston and on down to Yuma. That is the vice of omnibus or pork-barrel legislation.

The last few items reach a higher average. But what shall be said of such items as Hazard, where the annual charge against the Government of $250 will be increased to $3,937, according to Treasury authorities, when we have constructed a Government monument in Hazard and at a per capita cost of $56 to the Government? There are many others.

Less than half of the foregoing items meet the requirement urged by Mr. Burleson as to population, receipts, and rent. The annual cost of a $70,000-structure averages over $4,000, according to the Treasury authorities. On that basis not 10 per cent would be profitable investments for the Government.

Although the average has improved among the recent items, it has not been large enough to excuse over half of the items which fail to reach the limits urged by Mr Burleson or the limit of profitable construction shown by Treasury officials. In fact, the future expense of 90 per cent of the structures will cost the Government approximately 300 per cent increase, according to Treasury estimates.

SECTION 3.

City and amount.	Population.	Receipts for 1915.	Annual rental.
Albertville, Ala., $25,000	1,544	$5,663.04	$500.00
Alva, Okla, $45,000	3,688	15,853.05	624.00
Attalla, Ala., $30,000	2,513	4,610.21	460.00
Aurora, Mo., $65,000	4,148	51,210.15	720.00
Barbourville, Ky., $25,000	1,633	4,532.95	406.00
Bath, N. Y., $50,000	3,884	24,992.62	1,220.00
Benton Harbor, Mich., $80,000	9,185	54,702.56	2,000.00
Binghamton, N. Y., $500,000	48,443	281,439.83	3,840.00
Brinkley, Ark., $25,000	1,740	6,114.53	550.00
Bronx, N. Y., $850,000	431,980	168,601.06	8,698.56
Boyne City, Mich., $30,000	5,218	11,063.17	762.00
Canon City, Colo., $55,000	5,162	23,383.58	1,600.00
Carlinville, Ill., $30,000	3,616	12,566.28	660.00
Central City, Ky., $30,000	2,545	5,707.92	500.00
Coleman, Tex., $30,000	3,046	10,723.84	876.00
Conway, Ark., $40,000	2,794	13,126.17	644.00
Crockett, Tex., $25,000	3,947	7,801.03	632.00

The average is smaller and the profligate waste greater when only 5 out of 17 items reach the limit urged by Mr. Burleson and Treasury officials. Only two pass the Treasury estimates.

City and amount.	Population.	Receipts for 1915.	Annual rental.
Decatur, Ind., $45,000	4,471	$17,009.73	$1,420
Dillon, S. C., $25,000	1,757	7,733.63	400
Duluth, Minn., $300,000	78,466	429,124.11	2,740
Edenton, N. C., $45,000	2,789	8,861.03	660

Fairfield, Iowa, $50,000	4,970	28,798.31	750
Falmouth, Ky., $30,000	1,180	5,638.24	340
Fargo, N. Dak., $250,000	14,331	241,282.87	192
Forest City, Ark., $25,000	2,484	9,687.77	460
Georgetown, Tex., $30,000	3,096	12,281.22	984
Green River, Wyo., $25,000	1,313	4,370.18	600
Greensburg, Ind., $45,000	5,420	18,477.35	876
Greenville, Ala., $30,000	3,377	9,294.81	480
Highland, Ill., $25,000	2,675	9,611.45	650
Hobart, Okla., $40,000	3,845	14,134.97	884
Holton, Kans., $35,000	2,842	12,501.30	750
Huntingdon, Tenn., $25,000	1,112	4,156.60	360

Only 3 out of the last 18 is a small average to meet Burleson's liberal figures. These buildings will average an increased cost annually of from 300 to 500 per cent, according to the Treasury Department.

City and amount.	Population.	Receipts for 1915.	Annual rental.
Huntsville, Tex., $30,000	2,072	$10,707.61	$900
Kissimmee, Fla., $35,000	2,157	12,048.85	420
Kittanning, Pa., $50,000	4,311	24,526.51	1,420
Lake City, Fla., $35,000	5,032	11,203.32	660
Lancaster, Pa., $250,000	47,227	185,543.28	None.
Lebanon, Ind., $45,000	5,474	18,287.34	1,180
Lenoir, N. C., $30,000	3,364	9,827.27	846
Linton, Ind., $35,000	5,906	11,988.51	1,150
Long Beach, Cal., $200,000	17,809	99,319.04	100
Lumberton, N. C., $30,000	2,230	12,433.98	780
Lyons, N. Y., $40,000	4,460	16,460.72	860
Madisonville, Ky., $40,000	4,966	12,615.03	660
Manchester, Conn., $40,000	13,641	10,462.38	425
Marengo, Iowa, $30,000	1,786	7,502.33	480
Modesto, Cal., $65,000	4,034	34,634.82	840
Monroe, Ga., $30,000	3,029	7,361.51	450
Montrose, Colo., $150,000	3,254	17,919.54	1,504

Only 2 out of 17 get past Burleson's estimates in the foregoing. Remember, he is sustained by the Treasury. Not one can be built profitably by the Government, according to Treasury estimates.

City and amount.	Population.	Receipts for 1915.	Annual rental.
Mount Airy, N. C., $55,000	3,844	$11,692.02	$360
Morgan City, La., $40,000	5,477	8,370.63	960
Mountain Grove, Mo., $40,000	1,722	12,836.07	960
Mount Olive, N. C., $30,000	1,071	5,679.28	420
Mount Vernon, Ind., $40,000	5,563	13,233.74	600
Murray, Ky., $25,000	2,089	5,531.11	240
Napoleon, Ohio, $35,000	4,007	12,854.36	660

Newark, Del., $30,000	1,913	11,388.31	1,110
Newcastle, Wyo., $25,000	975	4,174.70	None.
New Martinsville, W. Va., $40,000	2,176	10,538.29	622
Newton, Iowa, $55,000	4,616	32,156.54	1,440
Niles, Ohio, $55,000	8,361	26,674.27	1,104
Nyack, N. Y., $50,000	4,619	25,257.19	824
Oakland, Cal., $650,000	147,199	509,256.09	840
Oelwien, Iowa, $40,000	6,028	16,333.03	1,260
Oneida, N. Y., $55,000	8,317	33,153.88	1,900
Paris, Tex., $170,000	11,269	46,498.85	.....
Passaic, N. J., $125,000	54,773	124,972.43	4,905

Here the average is better, but still less than half would be passed by Burleson's limit. The limit determined by Treasury estimates of proposed increased expenses would exclude 90 per cent of the last 18 items.

City and amount.	Population.	Receipts for 1915.	Annual rental.
Pikeville, Ky., $35,000	1,280	$6,149.72	$332

Tyrone, Pa., $80,000	7,176	98,485.58	2,450
Union Springs, Ala., $25,000	4,055	7,027.98	None.

Some items of profligate waste are enthroned in the 17 items last named. Four pass muster limit urged by Burleson. Not more than one would be justified from Treasury estimates.

City and amount.	Population.	Receipts for 1915.	Annual rental.
Unionville, Mo., $30,000	2,000	$6,950.44	$450
Urbana, Ohio, $50,000	7,739	22,967.85	1,084

Waynesboro, Ga., $25,000	2,729	7,022.26	400
Wellington, Kans., $15,000	7,034	21,073.98	None.

In more than 90 per cent of above items it would be more economical to continue on present rental basis than to build. This is not a proper rule to adhere to in public affairs, but what possible defense can be offered to over 80 per cent of the proposed Government monuments that fail to pass the limit fixed by Burleson and are shown by the Treasury statement to be wasteful?

In conclusion, I offer the brief estimate of such bills expressed by Representative FITZGERALD, chairman of the Appropriations Committee, the only chairman of a single important committee of the House who comes from a northern State. On February 17, 1913, he said in debate on the public-buildings bill, as previously stated:

I denounce as indefensible this method of passing a public-building bill. * * * It can not be defended from any standpoint of public necessity.

No one ever seriously claims the bill is to meet any "public necessity," but it is a time-honored bill for meeting hundreds of political necessities. Again I submit a tentative proposition that will relieve us from all responsibility for further annoyance with petty matters that now aggregate $35,000,000 in the 1916 bill.

Mr. PLATT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FREAR. Surely.

Mr. PLATT. I notice the gentleman uses the word "city" all through his very interesting address in reference to very small towns of 5,000 and under. In the State of New York we have no cities of less than 10,000 inhabitants. It would strengthen the gentleman's speech to use the word "village" for the small towns.

Mr. FREAR. The gentleman from New York will find, if he cares to examine the report, that some of the towns in the 1916 bill are under 1,000. I thank him for the suggestion.

Mr. PLATT. They certainly ought not to be referred to as cities.

Mr. FREAR. I cheerfully accept the correction.

Mr. KELLEY. I did not have the privilege of hearing all of the gentleman's address, and I am wondering whether or not he has outlined some relief from this system.

Mr. FREAR. I have offered bill No. 18450, which provides relief. If adopted by this Congress, no delay will be incurred in needed public-building construction and Congress will immediately escape from a ridiculous and indefensible custom. It reads as follows:

A BILL PROVIDING FOR A PUBLIC BUILDINGS COMMISSION.

A commission composed of the Secretary of the Treasury, the Postmaster General, and the Attorney General is hereby created, whose duty it shall be to receive and investigate all applications for Government public buildings wherever located. The commission may provide rules concerning the size of communities, post-office receipts, and rental paid by the Government in determining where public buildings are to be constructed, and shall determine the character, cost, and plans of every public building.

The commission shall annually prepare a report of its findings and recommendations, and the same shall be embodied in the report of the Secretary of the Treasury and of the Postmaster General. The amounts required to provide for the purchase of sites, construction of buildings, and purchase of needed equipment shall be included and made a part of the regular supply bills submitted by the Secretary of the Treasury to Congress.

I thank you, gentlemen.

SECRETARY MCADOO PRESENTS REPORT—ESTIMATES GOVERNMENT FINANCES WILL SHOW $115,000,000 BALANCE JUNE 30, 1917—BIG DEFICIT YEAR LATER.

Secretary McAdoo's annual report of the Government's finances, presented to Congress to-day, estimates that the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, will show a balance of $115,000,000 in the general fund, but that the figures a year later, June 30, 1918, will show a deficit in the general fund of $185,000,000.

OMNIBUS BILLS FOR BUILDING SHOULD BE DONE AWAY WITH, SECRETARY M'ADOO'S BELIEF.

An emphatic recommendation that all "pork" be eliminated from the public buildings business of the Government is made by Secretary McAdoo of the Treasury Department in his annual report. The policy of authorizing post offices and Federal buildings in wholesale groups, known as "omnibus building bills," he urges should be abandoned, and that Congress adopt some other policy whereby buildings shall be authorized only in cities and towns where they are justified by the needs of the community, and at reasonable cost.

This recommendation is expected to start something in Congress. It is generally understood that an effort is to be made during the present session to get through another omnibus bill, carrying appropriations of about $35,000,000, mainly for post-office buildings in small villages throughout the country.

In fact this omnibus building bill was introduced in the House by Representative FRANK CLARK, of Florida, last July. At that time Mr. CLARK stated that he expected to put the measure through Congress at this session. If such an effort is made it will doubtless precipitate a spirited fight.

SOME HAVE LOST TASTE FOR PORK.

It is well known that many members in both Houses of Congress have completely lost their taste for "pork," and will resist to the last ditch the passage of the bill in its present form. But should the advocates of the measure succeed in forcing it through both House and Senate, it is said that the President will veto it.

Following are extracts from the section of the report of Secretary McAdoo dealing with the subject of public buildings:

"Common sense and business judgment would seem to demand that structures for the transaction of Government business should be authorized only in localities where they are imperatively needed, and that buildings should not be erected where no public necessity can be shown. This result could be accomplished by divorcing the public-buildings question from all local or political considerations and authorizing no public buildings until a thorough and intelligent investigation of each proposed building or project has been made by this department and a full report thereon has been submitted to the Congress. If such reports were followed by the introduction and passage of separate measures to cover each proposed building project, the abuses and evils of the omnibus-bill method would be eradicated.

NEEDLESS BUILDINGS ERECTED.

"I am convinced that the methods pursued by the Congress for the past 15 years of providing Federal buildings through so-called omnibus public-buildings bills have resulted in the construction of many public buildings in small towns and localities where they are not needed, and at a cost which is clearly unjustified by any actual requirements of the communities in which they are erected. The conclusion is irresistible that authorizations for public buildings in these small communities are too frequently dictated by local reasons and without regard to the best interests of the Government.

"In the past two decades the Congress has authorized and appropriated approximately $180,000,000 for public buildings, and the major part of this great sum has been expended on costly structures in small localities, where neither the Government business nor the convenience of the people justified their construction; and while the initial cost of these buildings represents a large waste of public funds, this is not the worst of it. The most serious aspect is this: The annual operation and maintenance of these buildings impose on the Treasury a permanent and constantly increasing burden."

ASSISTANT SECRETARY NEWTON IS RENDERING VALUABLE SERVICE.

Assistant Secretary Newton, in charge of public buildings, and who has made a resolute effort to curtail the waste in construction of needless buildings, made this further comment on the Secretary's report:

"There has never been a time when there was so urgent a need for large appropriations for public buildings as now. In nearly every city and large town the existing Federal buildings have been outgrown, and both the Government service and the people are sorely in need of relief.

"But the omnibus bills do not provide this relief. The major part of the authorizations in these bills are for post offices in country villages where every postal facility and convenience are adequately provided in rented quarters, at rentals ranging from $100 to $1,000 annually, whereas the cost of maintaining a Government-owned building averages about $4,000 annually.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE—MARKETING OF FOOD PRODUCTS.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for a change of reference of the House resolution 389, directing the Federal Trade Commission to investigate and report to the House of Representatives the facts relating to the production, marketing, and distribution of food products in the United States, together with any violations of the antitrust laws in connection therewith, and recommendations for greater economy and efficiency in the marketing of food products and the punishment and prevention of extortion in the prices thereof, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce to the Committee on the Judiciary. This request is made because the resolution involves a violation of the antitrust laws:

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. RAINEY). The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent that House resolution 389——

Mr. FARR. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman if they expect to report on the resolution at this session?

Mr. BORLAND. I can not speak for the committee, but I hope to have a report on it at a very early date.

Mr. FARR. It is the gentleman's resolution?

Mr. BORLAND. I assure the gentleman I hope to have an early report on it.

Mr. FARR. Is it the gentleman's resolution?

Mr. BORLAND. Yes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent that the reference of House resolution 389 be changed from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce to the Committee on the Judiciary. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

SENATE.

FRIDAY, December 8, 1916.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, the King of Kings, the Lord of Lords, Thou dost preside with uncontrolled authority and power over the destiny of the nations of the earth. We believe Thou hast laid Thy hand upon us and given us a place among the nations. Thou hast lavished upon us with a prodigality of love and mercy that amazes the world the gifts of Thy grace and of Thy providence. We pray that Thou mayst lead us forth with a message to the world and an influence upon the governments of earth. We pray that we may take forth with us the inspiration of Thy spirit and of Thy truth that all our work begun, continued, and ended in Thee may accomplish the Divine purpose and plan in our national life. For Christ's sake. Amen.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

SENATOR FROM MASSACHUSETTS.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the certificate of the governor of Massachusetts certifying to the election of HENRY CABOT LODGE as a Senator from that State for the term of six years beginning March 4, 1917, which will be inserted in the RECORD and placed on the files.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. LODGE. I present certain resolutions adopted at a mass meeting in Boston, Mass., in regard to the deportation of Belgians. The resolutions are very brief. I ask that they may be printed in the RECORD with the names of the signers without reading.

There being no objection, the resolutions were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE AMERICAN RIGHTS LEAGUE,
Boston, Mass., December 4, 1916.

Hon. HENRY CABOT LODGE.

DEAR SIR: I have the honor to transmit to you the resolutions adopted at a mass meeting on the German deportations from Belgium held in Tremont Temple, Boston, Tuesday, November 28. This meeting, attended by more than 2,500 Massachusetts citizens, was addressed by the presiding officer, the Hon. Nathan Matthews, Moorfield Storey, Lorin F. Deland, and the Rev. George A. Gordon. The resolutions, adopted without a dissenting vote, are as follows:

"Whereas the civilized world has been shocked by uncontradicted reports from northern France and Belgium of the deportation into bondage of many thousands from the noncombatant populace, so renewing the cruelties of ancient Babylon and Nineveh.

"Resolved, That we, American citizens, assembled in public meeting at Tremont Temple, in Boston, express our abhorrence of this fresh outrage against international law and common humanity, deliberately perpetrated by the Imperial German Government, and give our sympathy to the victims of this policy of 'frightfulness.'

"Resolved, That we urge upon our Massachusetts Members of Congress to support the President of the United States in every measure he undertakes to maintain America's traditional position as the friend of freedom and the champion of all the oppressed."

For the committee.

Yours, very respectfully. HENRY COPLEY GREENE,
Secretary.

Larz Anderson, John Graham Brooks, Winston Churchill, John S. Codman, Samuel McC. Crothers, Lorin F. Deland, Edward W. Emerson, William Endicott, W. Cameron Forbes, Worthington C. Ford, Paul H. Hanus, Herbert Jaques, E. S. Mansfield, August de Meldunaer, Joseph H. O'Neil, George H. Palmer, Charles S. Rackemann, William K. Richardson, Henry M. Rogers, Ellery Sedgwick, William T. Sedgwick, H. Langford Warren, Barrett Wendell, Franz E. Zerrahn.

Mr. FLETCHER. I present a letter and accompanying petition from citizens of Tallahassee, Fla., asking that they be included in the provisions of the Adamson eight-hour law. I ask that the letter and the body of the petition be printed in the RECORD and that they be referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

There being no objection, the letter and petition were referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TALLAHASSEE, FLA., December 5, 1916.

Hon. D. U. FLETCHER,

DEAR SIR: I am handing you herewith a petition which speaks for itself, with the request that you will kindly give it due consideration. We in the maintenance of way department believe that we are entitled to the operation of the eight-hour law as well as other departments of the railway.

Thanking you in advance for what you may be able to do for us,

Yours, truly,

T. N. GODBOLD.

To the honorable the Members of the Senate and House of Representatives in the United States Congress assembled, greeting:

We, the undersigned citizens and voters, do respectfully petition your honorable body to include the employees in the maintenance of way department of American railways in the workings of the eight-hour day. We respectfully submit for your consideration the following facts:

1. That the number of employees affected is in excess of 400,000.

2. That their work is of a most strenuous nature, rough, dirty, and laborious, and has to be performed often under the most unfavorable conditions; in heat and cold, summer and winter, rain or shine, these men are exposed to all kinds of inclement weather conditions by night and day, as they are subject to a call at any time, and in case of severe storm they are expected to go on duty without a call except as their experience shall dictate that same is necessary to preserve intact the tracks and bridges for the safety of which they are held responsible.

3. That at certain times, owing to the strenuous nature of their employment, men are often physically unable to stand the strain, and as a consequence in a few years are broken in health and unable to continue longer at this work.

4. For the preservation of health and prolongation of life, aside from any pecuniary consideration, we deem an eight-hour day an actual necessity.

5. At the present time, although these men must serve an apprenticeship of from three to seven years to become proficient in the trade to earn a foreman's position, their department is one of the poorest paid in the entire service, while their duties and responsibilities are among the most exacting.

Wherefore we pray you to give our petition consideration and grant them the relief the aforesaid employees so earnestly desire.

J. C. MONTFORD
(And others).

Mr. FERNALD presented petitions of sundry citizens of the State of Maine, praying for the inclusion of the maintenance of way employees of railroads within the provisions of the Adamson eight-hour law, which were referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. SHERMAN presented petitions of sundry citizens of Randolph County, Ill., praying for the enactment of legislation to found the Government of the United States on Christianity, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. WEEKS presented memorials of sundry citizens of Boston and Newton, in the State of Massachusetts, remonstrating against the deportation of Belgian citizens by Germany, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a petition of the Board of Aldermen of Medford, Mass., praying for the placing of an embargo on food products and fuel, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a petition of Local Branch No. 12, National Association of Letter Carriers, of Worcester, Mass., praying for the enactment of legislation to increase the compensation of letter carriers, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

Mr. OLIVER presented petitions of sundry citizens of Pittsburgh, Edgewood, and Imperial, all in the State of Pennsylvania, praying for the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution to prohibit polygamy, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a petition of Local Union No. 2296, United Mine Workers of America, of Crenshaw, Pa., praying for the appointment of a commission to investigate the increased cost of living, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

CAPT. HARVEY H. YOUNG.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 10049) for the relief of Capt. Harvey H. Young, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 873) thereon.

By Mr. HARDWICK:
A bill (S. 7239) to amend the act of September 3 and September 5, 1916, entitled "An act to establish an eight-hour day for employees of carriers engaged in interstate and foreign commerce," and for other purposes; to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

DRY DOCK AT PUGET SOUND.

Mr. JONES. I submit an amendment proposing to appropriate $500,000 for beginning the construction of a dry dock at the Puget Sound Navy Yard of such capacity as will accommodate not only the present but the reasonable future needs of the Navy, to cost not to exceed $3,000,000. I desire to have the amendment included in the naval appropriation bill for the year 1918, and I ask that it be received, printed, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, that action will be taken.

ADDRESS BY ROBERT R. PRENTIS.

Mr. SWANSON. I ask unanimous consent to have printed as a public document the address of Robert R. Prentis, president of the National Association of Railway Commissioners, delivered November 14, 1916, at a meeting of the Association of State Commissioners in Washington, D. C.

The matter is now pending in Congress as to the relative power that should be given to the State railway commissions and the Interstate Commerce Commission. It is a very able address, and I ask that it be printed as a public document.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that the address be referred to the Committee on Printing, because I gave notice at the last session that I would insist that all such requests should go first to that committee.

Mr. SWANSON. I have no objection to that course.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The address will be referred to the Committee on Printing.

STOCK-RAISING HOMESTEADS.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The morning business is closed.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. On Tuesday last the Chair appointed conferees on the bill (H. R. 407) to provide for stock-raising homesteads, and for other purposes, and the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS] was appointed as one of the conferees. I have a letter from him in which he states that he will not be able to be here before the 1st of January. As it is important that the conferees should meet and agree on a report, I ask that in place of the Senator from Montana I, as the ranking member, be appointed in his absence.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection to the request? The Chair hears none. The Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS] will be excused from service upon the committee of conference, and the Chair appoints in his place the Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH]. So the conferees on the part of the Senate will be the Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH], the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS], and the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT].

PROHIBITION IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 1082) to prevent the manufacture and sale of alcoholic liquors in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the calendar under Rule VIII is in order and the motion is out of order until 1 o'clock. I ask unanimous consent that we now proceed with the calendar under Rule VIII and consider bills to which there is no objection. Then the Senator from Texas at 1 o'clock can make his motion if he desires to do so at that time.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Is not the motion to proceed to the consideration of a measure in order at this time?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is in order now.

Mr. SHEPPARD. That is my motion.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The morning business is closed.

Mr. SMOOT. Is the morning business closed?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is.

Mr. SMOOT. Then, of course, the motion is in order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Texas moves to proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 1082.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with amendments.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be read.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I ask that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There are committee amendments?

Mr. SHEPPARD. There are committee amendments.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Texas asks that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with and that the bill be read for action upon the amendments of the committee. Is there any objection?

Mr. GRONNA. I should like to have the bill read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be read.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I desire to state to Senators that there is on the desk of every Senator a reprint of the bill with the amendments which I proposed in small capitals.

Mr. SMOOT. So that we may understand the reading of the bill, I will ask the Senator having it in charge whether it is his intention to strike out the words of the bill in brackets and to insert in their place the words in italics and in capitals.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I shall move to insert the words in italics and small capitals for those in brackets.

Mr. SMOOT. That is the intention of the Senator having the bill in charge?

Mr. SHEPPARD. It is.

The Secretary read the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Certain committee amendments are proposed to the bill, which will be stated by the Secretary.

The SECRETARY. On page 3, line 19, after the words "person who is," the committee propose to insert the words "known to him to be."

Mr. GALLINGER. What page and line is that?

The SECRETARY. On page 3, line 19, after the words "person who is," it is proposed to insert "known to him to be."

Mr. GALLINGER. I do not find that in this reprint.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I should like to inquire from what bill the Secretary is reading. The bill I have on my desk seems to be differently paged.

Mr. GALLINGER. It was reprinted on yesterday, and I should think we ought to take it as reprinted.

Mr. CLARK. It is impossible to follow.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Yes; it is pretty hard to follow, but the Chair would be of the opinion that it is the business of the Secretary to deal with the bill as reported by the committee.

Mr. SMOOT. Let the Secretary read the bill as reported by the committee now for amendment, and when the proper place is reached in the bill then offer the amendment. Then we can follow it; otherwise we can not do it.

The SECRETARY. The particular amendment occurs in the reprint on page 4, line 16. After the words "person who is," on line 16 of the reprint, page 4, it is proposed to insert "known to him to be," so that if amended it will read:

If any wholesale druggist, owner of a wholesale drug store, registered pharmacist, clerk, or other employee of such store shall upon such affidavit or otherwise, sell or give away such alcohol to any person who is known to him to be of intemperate habits or is addicted to the use of any narcotic drug—

And so forth.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. Also in section 6, on line 7, page 13, of the reprint, in the original copy on page 5 at the end of line 19, after the word "denomination" and the comma, it is proposed to insert:

or when any ambassador or minister of a foreign country duly credited to the United States of America and maintaining an official residence in the District of Columbia desires alcoholic liquors for use in such residence, and for no other purpose.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I move that the word "sixteen," on line 4, page 1, be changed to "seventeen."

The VICE PRESIDENT. Let us finish the committee amendments first.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I understood that the committee amendments had been concluded.

The VICE PRESIDENT. No; not yet.

The SECRETARY. On page 6, in section 7, in the fifth line——

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, what page is that?

The SECRETARY. Page 14, line 13, of the reprint, page 6, line 22, of the original bill, in the fifth line of section 7, after the words "District of Columbia" and the comma, it is proposed to insert the words "knowing the same to be such," so that if amended it will read:

That it shall be unlawful for any common or other carrier, express company, or any person to deliver to any person, company, corporation, club, or association or order, his, or its agents, clerks or employees, any prohibited alcoholic liquors in the District of Columbia, knowing the same to be such—

And so forth.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator having the bill in charge just what words the proposed amendment refers to?

Mr. SHEPPARD. To the words "prohibited alcoholic liquors."

Mr. CLARK. I should like to ask if it is not a question whether it would refer to the words "for prohibited purposes" in the line above, or to the "person, company, corporation, club, or association" to whom it is delivered. It seems to me that that is very ambiguous.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Will the Senator suggest what he would like to have in the place of those words?

Mr. CLARK. I would not like to have anything particularly, except that I would like to have it definitely stated just to what the words refer; whether it is the intention of the committee to have the words refer to the "common carrier known to be such" or the "company, corporation, club, or association * * * or its agents, clerks, or employees known to be such," or whether it is intended to have them refer to the "liquors for prohibited purposes."

Mr. SHEPPARD. The words "prohibited alcoholic liquors" occur in very close proximity to the words "knowing the same to be such," and they are between the words to which the Senator refers and the words "knowing the same to be such."

Mr. CLARK. Yes; but the Senator will observe that the punctuation separates them—the comma after the word "Columbia."

Mr. SHEPPARD. Suppose I should move to strike out the comma; would that be satisfactory to the Senator?

Mr. CLARK. Anything is satisfactory to me that makes the purpose clear. I am simply calling attention to what I think is an ambiguity.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I appreciate the force of what the Senator says, and I ask that the comma be stricken out.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out the comma after the words "District of Columbia," on line 22.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Now, Mr. President, have the committee amendments been disposed of?

The VICE PRESIDENT. They are now disposed of.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I move that the word "seventeen" be substituted for the word "sixteen," in line 4, page 1.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Where it reads "anno Domini nineteen hundred and sixteen," it is proposed to strike out "sixteen" and insert in lieu thereof the word "seventeen."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Now, Mr. President, I ask that the amendments contained in the reprint be first considered. They are not committee amendments, but they were proposed by me subsequently to the introduction of the bill. The main effect of the amendments is to make the bill apply to the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors for beverage purposes, and to eliminate the personal-use feature. The bill, as originally introduced, prohibited the personal use or storage for such use of intoxicating liquors and the giving away of the same. The effect of these amendments is to eliminate that feature and to modify certain other portions of the bill, which I shall be glad to explain if any Senator should desire.

The SECRETARY. First, it is proposed, on page 1, lines 7 and 8, to strike out the words "store, or deposit" and the comma after the word "deposit," so that, if amended, it will read:

That on and after the 1st day of November, anno Domini 1917, no person or persons, or any house, company, association, club, or corporation, his, its, or their agents, officers, clerks, or servants, directly or indirectly, in the District of Columbia shall manufacture, sell, offer for sale, keep for sale, traffic in, barter, or exchange for goods or merchandise, or solicit or receive orders—

And so forth.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, line 2, after the word "liquors," it is proposed to strike out the comma and the words "give away the same, or import the same therein, except as hereinafter provided"; also after the word "alcoholic," in line 1, to insert "or other prohibited," so that it will read "alcoholic or other prohibited liquors."

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Texas what the effect or purpose of that amendment is.

Mr. SHEPPARD. The purpose is to include malt liquors.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. But what is the purpose of striking out certain portions of the paragraph?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I explained a moment ago that the purpose is to do away with that part of the bill which prohibits the personal use of intoxicating liquors and the keeping of the same or the giving away of the same. It makes the bill apply solely to the manufacture and sale of liquors for beverage purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. It is also proposed to insert the following words in lieu of the words stricken out:

For beverage purposes or for any other than scientific, medicinal, pharmaceutical, mechanical, sacramental, or other nonbeverage purposes.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. In the reprint, page 2, line 10, after the word "bitters" and the comma, it is proposed to strike out the words "pure grain," and insert before the word "alcohol" the word "ethyl," so that, if amended, it will read:

Wherever the term "alcoholic liquors" is used in this act it shall be deemed to include whisky, brandy, rum, gin, wine, ale, porter, beer, cordials, hard or fermented cider, alcoholic bitters, ethyl alcohol—

And so forth.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. And after the word "alcohol" and the comma it is proposed to strike out the words "and all malt and other liquors which contain one-half of 1 per cent by volume of alcohol or more," and insert "all malt liquors, and all other alcoholic liquors."

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. On page 2 of the reprint, beginning with line 24——

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, before that is reached I want to move an amendment. On line 12 of page 2 of the original bill, or line 19 of page 2 of the reprinted bill, it provides, as it is now, "and * * * shall be fined not less than $300 nor more than $1,000." I am heartily in favor of this bill being administered properly, and for that reason I think the words "less than $300 nor" should be stricken out, so as to leave it to read "shall be fined not more than $1,000."

It has been the experience of nearly every prosecutor of crimes that where you have a high minimum penalty you are not going to get a conviction at all. Jurors will often refuse to convict if a heavy penalty is sure to be imposed. Bootleggers often escape punishment. Therefore, in the interest of getting convictions where the evidence is good, it seems to me there ought to be no minimum. On that account I move to strike out the words "less than $300 nor."

Mr. SHEPPARD. That is acceptable to me.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out the words "less than $300 nor," so that it will read "shall be fined not more than $1,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. It is now proposed by the Senator from Texas in the reprint, page 2, beginning on line 24 with the words "wood alcohol," to strike out all down to and including the words "such oath" on page 3, line 23, and to insert:

Of methyl alcohol, or of ethyl alcohol for scientific, medicinal, pharmaceutical, or mechanical purposes, nor to prevent the sale of alcoholic or other prohibited liquors by druggists for medicinal purposes on prescriptions of physicians under the regulations set out in section 3 of this act: Provided, That the manufacture and sale of ethyl alcohol or of alcoholic liquors for sacramental purposes within the District of Columbia shall be restricted to manufacturers and druggists licensed, respectively, to make and sell such alcohol and alcoholic or other prohibited liquors, as hereinafter provided, for scientific, mechanical, pharmaceutical, medicinal, or sacramental purposes only.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of Mr. SHEPPARD was to strike out section 3 in the following words:

SEC. 3. If any wholesale druggist, owner of a wholesale drug store, registered pharmacist, clerk, or other employee of such store, shall upon such affidavit, or otherwise, sell or give away such alcohol to any person who is known to him to be of intemperate habits or is addicted to the use of any narcotic drug, or sell or give the same to anyone to be used for any purpose other than that named in said affidavit he shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and if convicted punished by fine of not less than $100 nor more than $500 and be confined in the District jail or workhouse not less than 30 days nor more than 6 months. In any prosecution against a wholesale druggist, owner of a wholesale drug store, registered pharmacist, clerk, or employee, for selling or giving liquor contrary to law, if a sale or gift be proven, it shall be presumed that the same was unlawful in the absence of satisfactory proof to the contrary, and the presentation of such affiadvit by the defendant at the time of the trial for such sale or gift shall be sufficient to rebut the presumption arising from the proof of such sale or gift: Provided, That such druggist, owner of a drug store, registered pharmacist, clerk, or employee shall have complied with all other provisions of this act relating to a sale or gift.

And to insert in lieu thereof the following:

SEC. 3. That regularly licensed and registered druggists or pharmacists in the District of Columbia shall not sell alcoholic or other prohibited liquors nor compound nor mix any composition thereof, nor sell any malt extract or other proprietary medicines containing alcohol, except such compounds, compositions, malt extracts, or proprietary medicines be so medicated as to be medicinal preparations or compounds unfit for use as beverages, except upon a written and bona fide prescription of a duly licensed and regularly practicing physician in the District of Columbia, whose name shall be signed thereto. Such prescription shall contain a statement that the disease of the patient requires such a prescription, shall be numbered in the order of receiving, and shall be canceled by writing on it the word "Canceled" and the date on which it was presented and filled, and kept on file in consecutive order, subject to public inspection at all times during business hours. No such prescription shall be filled more than once. Every druggist or pharmacist selling intoxicating liquors as herein provided shall keep a book provided for the purpose, and shall enter therein at the time of every sale a true record of the date of the sale, the name of the purchaser, who shall sign his name in said book as a part of the entry, his residence (giving the street and house number, if there be such), the kind and quantity and price of such liquor, the purpose for which it was sold, and the name of the physician giving the prescription therefor. Such book shall be open to public inspection during business hours, and shall be in form substantially as follows:

Date.	Name of purchaser.	Residence.	Kind and quantity.	Purpose of use.	Price.	Name of physician.	Signature of purchaser.

Said book shall be produced before the Commissioners of the District of Columbia or the courts when required, and shall also contain a statement of the kind and amount of alcoholic and other prohibited liquors on hand when this act shall go into effect, and thereafter such druggist or pharmacist shall, on the order of the court or the Commissioners of the District, make a statement of the amount of intoxicating liquor sold or used in any manner since the last statement and the amount on hand at the date when such court or commissioners require such statement: Provided, That ethyl alcohol may be sold without a physician's prescription for mechanical, medicinal, pharmaceutical, or scientific purposes by registered and licensed druggists or pharmacists, or by licensed manufacturers, each and all of whom shall keep a book for the purpose of registering such sales in a similar manner and form as required for the sale of other alcoholic and other prohibited liquors by the provisions of this section: Provided further, That any person who shall make any false statement as to the purpose or use of alcohol purchased under the provisions of this section shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and be fined for each offense not less than $50 nor more than $300, and in default of the payment of such fine shall be imprisoned in the jail or workhouse of said District not less than 30 days nor more than 6 months.

Any druggist or pharmacist who shall sell or dispense any alcoholic or other prohibited liquors, except in such manner as provided in this section, or who shall fail or refuse to keep the record herein required, or who shall refill any prescription, or who shall violate any other provisions of this act, shall be guilty of illegal selling, and upon conviction thereof shall be subject to the penalties prescribed in section 1 of this act. Upon a second conviction for said offense, in addition to the penalties prescribed in said section 1, it shall be a part of the judgment of conviction that the license of such druggist or pharmacist to practice pharmacy shall be revoked, and the court before which such person is tried and convicted shall cause a certified copy of such judgment of conviction to be certified to the board having authority to issue license to practice pharmacy in the District of Columbia.

Any physician who shall prescribe any alcoholic or other prohibited liquor except for treatment of disease, which, after his own personal diagnosis, he shall deem to require such treatment, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be fined not less than $100 nor more than $500, and in default of payment of said fine shall be imprisoned in the District jail or workhouse for not less than 30 nor more than 90 days, and upon a second conviction for said offense, in addition to the penalty above provided, it shall be a part of the judgment of conviction that the license of such physician to practice medicine be revoked, and the court before which such physician is tried and convicted shall cause a certified copy of such judgment of conviction to be certified to the board having authority to issue licenses to practice medicine in the District of Columbia.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I should like to move an amendment in line 5, page 8, of the reprint, to strike out the words "less than 30 days nor." It seems to me that that is in line with the other amendment that I proposed. It is very difficult to get a conviction where there is a minimum prescribed. It would then read:

Shall be imprisoned in the jail or workhouse of said District not more than six months.

This is offered in the interest of the enforcement of the act. It seems to me that is in line with the other amendment.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, I am not going to object to that since the Senator in charge of the bill has, I understand, accepted it; but I really think there ought to be a minimum punishment provided for in the law. If you happen to have a judge inclined to the sale of whisky and opposed to the spirit of this act, he would not make it very unprofitable or disagreeable to the man to violate the law. I can, without a great stretch of the imagination, see how the violation of the law could be encouraged by a dishonest judge. I think there ought to be some penalty attached which the judge could not set aside or overlook. I prefer that the Congress rather than the court should make the law and fix the punishment for its violation.

Mr. SHAFROTH. The experience in nearly all prosecutions shows the difficulty of getting a conviction, especially in the bootlegging cases. They evade it, and they get an acquittal in many instances on the very ground that you have got to imprison the man for a certain period of time. It has been the experience of nearly all prosecutors that when you have a provision of that kind you do not have the chances of conviction that you do where the fine is one not exceeding a certain amount.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Will the Senator yield to me just there?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes, sir.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I have known instances where it has been less expensive to violate the prohibition law and sell liquor under such terms as the Senator proposes to this bill than it would be to pay a license. If the justice of the peace or the court are in favor of the sale of liquor, they can make it cheaper to conduct a saloon in violation of law than to pay for the regular license.

Mr. SHAFROTH. They can not do that if there is any enforcement of the law. Of course if there is no enforcement of the law it might be done. I presume that the officers will discharge their duty in the interest of the proper enforcement of this law, and it seems to me that this amendment to the amendment should be adopted.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Believing as I do that alcohol is the most insidious poison and the most destructive enemy to the human race, and feeling also that the city of Washington, the Capital of the greatest Nation in all of the annals of time, should be a model government, a city set upon a hill, a beneficient example to the people of the entire Republic, I would not permit anything in this bill that would leave a doubt of its purposes or fail in any way to bring about the condition so much desired and so much needed. Let the law fix moderate punishment for the crime committed without aggravation and leave to the discretion of the judge to increase the punishment when the bad purpose or motive is revealed.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, while I disagree with the Senator from Colorado and agree with the Senator from Mississippi that there ought to be a minimum penalty, in order that the bill may conform in all parts I suggest to the Senator from Colorado that he had better also move an amendment on page 9 of the reprint, lines 6 and 7, where it reads, "shall be fined not less than $100 nor more than $500." In order that it may all be in the same line the Senator, I think, ought to offer the same amendment on page 9 of the reprint.

Mr. SHAFROTH. We have not reached that part of it yet.

Mr. SMOOT. That is a part of the amendment that we are going to adopt now.

Mr. SHAFROTH. That is true, but this part which precedes it it seems should come first.

Mr. SMOOT. The item to which I have just called the Senator's attention is in the same amendment and will be adopted at the same time. It is all one amendment.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I move, then, also in lines 6 and 7 of the reprint, that the minimum fine fixed there be omitted, so as to let it read, "shall be fined not more than $500."

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Does not the Senator think a minimum fine of $100 is little enough?

Mr. SHAFROTH. It might be. When it gets down low the minimum fine is not of great importance. I really did not intend to move that amendment, although as a matter of fact I believe that the modern tendency is to have a maximum fine and let the court impose such a fine as in its judgment it deems best. I believe you will get convictions in that way. Of course when you have a small minimum fine pretty nearly the same principle is observed.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, for many years in our State the penalty for a man found guilty on the charge of selling intoxicating liquors in violation of law was a fine of not less than $100 nor more than $500, or by imprisonment for not less than 30 nor more than 90 days, or by both such fine and imprisonment, and it did not interfere in any way with the enforcement of the law. Later on the law was amended by inflicting greater punishment and there was a noticeable decrease in the violations of law.

I think the Senator from Colorado is wrong. I think it is better to have a minimum sentence. If a man is convicted of a crime of this kind and is let off with a light sentence he may repeat the crime just as often as he can get off with little punishment. If he is punished severely he will take notice and will not be apt to violate the law the second time.

I hope the amendment of the Senator from Colorado to the amendment will not be agreed to.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from Texas will not agree to these amendments that are being suggested with regard to the minimum sentence. I was sorry that he agreed to accept the striking out of the minimum penalty of $300 for a violation of the act. If we are going to have nothing but a maximum penalty, then the verdict of the jury can be, if the presiding judge desires, practically set aside. He can fine a man 1 cent and imprison him for one minute in jail.

It seems to me the law itself ought to provide a minimum penalty, and it ought to be such an amount that it would not be a financial proposition to violate the law rather than pay a reasonable license. You would make it possible for the court, if the court wanted to do it, to practically nullify the entire law.

The Senator from Texas has already agreed to the striking out of the minimum penalty in the act for selling liquor contrary to the law. It is true the fine may be as high as a thousand dollars, but it may be 5 cents, and a man would make more profit on one sale than he would have to pay.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SHAFROTH. In view of the fact that there is a good deal of opposition to this amendment to the amendment, which will likely produce long discussion, and as the Senator from Texas has concluded that he would rather have the bill expedited in its passage by voting upon it—and I would, too—I wish to withdraw my amendment to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. NORRIS. I move to reconsider the vote by which the $300 minimum penalty on line 19, page 2, of the reprinted bill was stricken out.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Very well; I have no objection to that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey in the chair). Is there objection to the motion made by the Senator from Nebraska? There is no objection, and it is reconsidered. The question now is on the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do not think the Senate understood the question. I understood the Senator from Colorado to say upon reconsideration he would withdraw that amendment.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I did.

Mr. NORRIS. But the amendment had been agreed to, and I have moved to reconsider it. If that motion should prevail, then the original motion on the adoption of the amendment to the amendment is before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that the Senate has reconsidered the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHAFROTH. As it is reconsidered, I withdraw the amendment to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment is withdrawn. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next amendment of the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD] will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 9 of the reprint strike out all of section 4 in the following words:

SEC. 4. If any person who is of intemperate habits or addicted to the use of any narcotic drug shall make the affidavit mentioned in section 2 of this act, or if any person making such affidavit shall use as a beverage, or for any purpose, or at any place, other than that stated in such affidavit, or shall knowingly permit another to do so, said alcohol, or any part thereof, or shall knowingly make any false statement in such affidavit, he shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction be punished by a fine of not less than $100 nor more than $500, or be confined in the District jail or workhouse not less than one nor more than six months for the first offense hereunder; and upon conviction for a second offense he shall be punished by a fine of not less than $200 nor more than $1,000, and shall be confined in the District jail or workhouse for not less than six months.

And to insert in lieu thereof, from line 11, page 10, to line 8, page 11, in the following words:

SEC. 4. That when any minister, pastor, or priest of a religious congregation or church desires wine for sacramental purposes in the usual religious exercises of his denomination, he may apply to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia for a permit, stating the amount desired, for what period, and for what purpose, and said commissioners, if satisfied of the good faith of the application, shall grant a written permit to the applicant permitting the shipment to him, or the purchase by him, of such amount as is shown to be reasonably necessary, which amount shall be stated in the permit, together with the purpose for which it is to be used and the period to be covered by such use; the amount of wine permitted to be shipped or purchased under one permit shall not exceed 5 gallons, and the said permit shall be attached to the outside of the package by the shipper and remain so attached until delivered to the consignee when it shall be canceled by the carrier. Said permit shall be void after 20 days, and shall not be used for more than one shipment.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Before that amendment is agreed to I wish to move to insert the amendment on page 13 of the reprint, lines 8 to 12, after the word "denomination," in line 14, or page 10.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 10 of the reprint, line 14, after the word "denomination" and the comma, insert the following words:

Or when any ambassador or minister of a foreign country duly credited to the United States of America and maintaining an official residence in the District of Columbia desires alcoholic liquors for use in such residence, and for no other purpose.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment of Mr. SHEPPARD was, on page 11, to strike out section 5, in the following words:

SEC. 5. Wholesale druggists desiring to deal in alcohol for scientific or mechanical purposes, as heretofore provided, shall on or before the 1st day of November of each year obtain a license from the Commissioners of the District of Columbia for the year beginning November 1, upon the payment of $25, which money shall be deposited with other license funds of the District. The said commissioners shall make necessary regulations governing the purchase and sale of alcohol by wholesale druggists in accordance with this act, and shall limit the number of licenses to wholesale druggists to not more than five, and may consider petitions for or protests against the granting of such licenses.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

SEC. 5. Any person, company, or corporation desiring to manufacture alcoholic or other prohibited liquors for the purposes permitted in this act shall on or before the 1st day of November of each year obtain a license from the Commissioners of the District of Columbia for the year beginning November 1 upon the the payment of $100, which money shall be deposited with other license funds of the District. Druggists, wholesale or retail, desiring to sell alcoholic or other prohibited liquors for the purposes permitted in this act shall obtain a license in the same way for the same period, the fee for wholesale druggists being $25, for retail druggists $10. The commissioners shall have power to refuse or revoke all licenses referred to in this section if doubtful of the good faith of the licensee and his intention to comply with this act. Manufacturers licensed according to this section shall sell alcoholic and other prohibited liquors to druggists only, and only to such druggists as are licensed under the terms of this section. No others than druggists and manufacturers licensed according to this section may manufacture or sell alcoholic and other prohibited liquors in the District of Columbia, and these only for the purposes permitted by this act. Violations of this section shall be prescribed by fine of not less than $300 nor more than $1,000 and by imprisonment in the District jail or workhouse for not less than 30 days nor more than 1 year.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Texas to the peculiar language, as I deem it, in line 21, on page 12 of the bill, where it reads:

Violations of this section shall be prescribed by fine of not less than $300 nor more than $1,000.

Mr. VARDAMAN. The language should be "shall be punished."

Mr. SHEPPARD. That is a typographical error. I move that the word "punished" be substituted for the word "prescribed."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 12, line 22, after the word "be," it is proposed to strike out the word "prescribed" and to insert in lieu thereof the word "punished," so as to read:

Violations of this section shall be punished by fine of not less than $300 nor more than $1,000.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out section 6, as follows:

SEC. 6. That when any wholesale druggist, licensed as provided in the previous section, desires to sell or keep for sale pure grain alcohol, or when any minister, pastor, or priest of a religious congregation or church desires wine for sacramental purposes in the usual religious exercises of his denomination, he may apply to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia for a permit, stating the amount desired, for what period and for what purpose, and said commissioners, if satisfied of the good faith of the application, shall grant a written permit to the applicant permitting the shipment to him of such amount as is shown to be reasonably necessary, which amount shall be stated in the permit, together with the purpose for which it is to be used, and in the case of wine the period to be covered by such use: Provided, That the amount of wine permitted to be shipped shall not exceed 5 gallons at one time, and in case of shipment of either alcohol or wine said permit shall be attached to the package by the shipper and remain attached until delivered to the consignee. The fee for issuing said permit shall be 25 cents, paid to the collector of taxes for the District of Columbia. Said permit shall be void after 20 days from date, and shall not be used for more than one shipment. The carrier or party making delivery shall keep a record of all such deliveries of wine for said purposes, which record shall, during business hours, be open to public inspection.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 14, line 18, to change the number of section 7 to section 6.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 6, on page 14, line 11, after the word "any," to strike out "prohibited alcoholic"; in line 12, after the word "liquors," to insert "for prohibited purposes"; in line 13, after the name "District of Columbia," to insert "knowing the same to be such"; in line 14, after the words "case of," to strike out the word "legal"; in line 14, after the words "shipments of," to strike out the words "alcohol or wine, as provided in section 6 of this act, it shall be unlawful to deliver the same, whether brought from without the District of Columbia or otherwise, or whether," and to insert "liquors for purposes not prohibited it shall be unlawful to bring the same into the District of Columbia, or to deliver the same therein," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 6. That it shall be unlawful for any common or other carrier, express company, or any person to deliver to any person, company, corporation, club, or association or order, his, or its agents, clerks or employees, any prohibited alcoholic liquors for prohibited purposes in the District of Columbia, knowing the same to be such, and in the case of legal shipments of alcohol or wine, as provided in section 6 of this act, it shall be unlawful to deliver the same, whether brought from without the District of Columbia or otherwise, or whether liquors for purposes not prohibited it shall be unlawful to bring the same into the District of Columbia, or to deliver the same therein, in original packages or otherwise, on any Sunday or on any other day before 6 o'clock a. m. and after 5 o'clock p. m. Any common or other carrier, express company, or any person violating the provisions of this section shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine of not less than $100 or more than $500, or be confined in the District Jail or workhouse not less than one nor more than six months, or by both fine and imprisonment, in the discretion of the court.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator in charge of the bill a question. Many of these amendments I have not previously seen, and I do not follow them under the mode in which the Senator is proposing to amend the bill. Is the importation of liquor into the District of Columbia prohibited?

Mr. SHEPPARD. The importation of liquor into the District of Columbia for the purposes prohibited in this bill is prohibited; that is, for purposes of sale for beverage purposes.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. But it is not prohibited for consumption purposes?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Not for personal consumption.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. In other words, if the Senator desired to send to New York or to Baltimore for liquor to be sent to his house for personal consumption there is no prohibition in this bill against his doing so?

Mr. SHEPPARD. There is not.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. And this amendment is to carry out that purpose?

Mr. SHEPPARD. It prohibits shipments for unlawful purposes and regulates shipments for lawful purposes.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I should like to ask the Senator another question while I am on my feet, though the question is not pertinent to the amendment here. I notice that the bill permits the manufacture of alcohol in the District of Columbia for other than beverage purposes. Will the Senator in charge of the bill explain to me how far that would go?

Mr. SHEPPARD. The manufacture of liquors for scientific, medicinal, pharmaceutical, or mechanical purposes is permitted without limitation in the District.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. And it is prohibited except for those purposes?

Mr. SHEPPARD. No; it is permitted in the District without limitation.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I now understand. I am informed that there is a large factory here for making yeast? Would this bill permit the manufacture of alcohol for that purpose?

Mr. SHEPPARD. It would. The bill permits the manufacture, importation, and sale, without restriction, of denatured or methyl alcohol, and also the manufacture in the District of liquors for any other purposes than beverage purposes.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Under this bill could alcohol be manufactured in the District of Columbia to be exported into the States?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I think it could be, if manufactured for purposes not prohibited.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I should like to know the Senator's view on that question, if he is definitely advised.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Though exportation is not in so many words prohibited, the fact that the manufacture of liquors within the District for beverage purposes is prohibited would include, I think, exportation of such liquors.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. How does the Senator draw the line as to what the alcohol shall be used for when manufactured? For instance, if you manufacture methyl alcohol, that is primarily not to be used for drinking purposes, because it is ordinarily a poison; but if it is ethyl alcohol and it is manufactured, how does the bill distinguish whether it is going to be used for denatured alcohol or mechanical purposes or is going to be used for consumption as a drink?

Mr. SHEPPARD. That will become a question of administration and proof after the law has been adopted.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. What is there in this proposed law, I will ask the Senator to explain to the Senate, which defines that purpose? Without a distinction in the law, I do not see how you are going to have an ascertainment of the facts.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I think the first section sufficiently covers the matter, or covers it in so far as language will permit. Of course, the purpose for which the liquor is manufactured—the real purpose—will be a matter of evidence of proof before administrative officers or before the courts. The manufacture of liquors for beverage purposes within the District of Columbia is prohibited by this bill, and it will be a matter of evidence as to whether the parties undertaking the manufacture of liquor intend to manufacture it for other purposes.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I evidently do not make myself clear to the Senator in charge of the bill. What I wish to call his attention to is, that if you were manufacturing ethyl alcohol or grain alcohol when it comes out of the spigot it is capable of being consumed as a beverage. Whether you manufacture it for mechanical purposes or for denatured alcohol or for a beverage it comes out of the spigot just the same; it is manufactured as grain alcohol and it can be consumed as a beverage.

Mr. SHEPPARD. But the manufacturer would not be permitted to take out a license unless he gave assurance that the liquor was not to be manufactured for beverage purposes.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do.

Mr. WORKS. I should like to ask the Senator from Alabama whether he thinks that the manufacture for exportation purposes should be prohibited by the bill?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. My position on this question—not the question of manufacture—is that I have always believed that each State and each community should decide this question for itself. In my judgment the question involved in this bill is not the question of manufacture, but the question of consumption. What I want to find out is whether the machinery of the bill affects certain enterprises in this District, and if so, how it affects them. I have not as yet got a clear explanation of that point.

Mr. WORKS. I think the Senator from Alabama is quite right about that, and that his inquiry is a very pertinent one. I am of the opinion that there should be an express prohibition in this bill of the manufacture of alcohol for exportation; and I suggest to the Senator from Texas that a very few words will cover that situation by simply adding after the exception the words "but not for exportation." I do not think, if prohibition comes about in the District of Columbia, that this ought to be a place for the manufacture of liquors to be sent out into the States. Of course this is a matter that is local and could be dealt with only by Congress. It does not affect the judgment of the Senator from Alabama that the States separately should deal with the question. I suggest to the Senator from Texas that some such amendment as that which I have suggested ought to be made, so that the matter could be determined by the terms of the bill itself.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. As I said a while ago, so far as my views are concerned, I think the question of the prohibition of the consumption of alcoholic liquors is one for the States themselves to determine. But what I want to find out definitely is, What is the attitude of this bill and whether the proponents of this bill propose to prohibit the consumption of alcoholic liquors in the District and not prohibit the manufacture of alcohol in the District to be shipped to other States? I want to understand as to that. It is not my purpose or desire to interfere with the efforts of the Senator from Texas to perfect his bill along the line that he believes in, and along the line of thought that he desires to present to the Senate and to the country, but my object, when the proper time comes, is to have whatever bill is determined on here as a proper measure submitted to the people of the District of Columbia for their determination. Therefore I do not care to interfere by amendment with the purpose of the Senator from Texas in perfecting his own bill. I do want, however, to know what the attitude of the committee and of the Senator in charge of this bill is in reference to the question of manufacturing liquor in the District, where its consumption is proposed to be prohibited, for exportation and sale somewhere else.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, I have had nothing to do with the preparation of this bill. If I had had any controlling influence over it, I think it would have been in quite different form. I think there are some exceptions made in the bill that ought not to be made. There is no occasion in the world for making any exception as to the manufacture of alcohol for medicinal purposes, because I think the doctors very generally agree now that alcohol has no medicinal qualities at all, and that exception simply opens the door to the sale of intoxicating liquors in that form that ought not to be allowed; but I am not going to antagonize the bill on that account or attempt to remove that defect, as I regard it. I think, however, the question ought to be definitely settled as to whether we are to forbid the manufacture of alcohol or alcoholic liquors for the purpose of exportation. I think that door ought to be closed absolutely.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I should like to suggest to the Senator from California that the language, as it seems to me, is very plain and very clear, and that it would exclude the manufacture of alcohol for export purposes. I do not believe that it is necessary to insert an express prohibition to that effect. I will read the provision which I have in mind:

That on and after the 1st day of November, A. D. 1917, no person or persons, or any house, company, association, club, or corporation, his, its, or their agents, officers, clerks, or servants, directly or indirectly, in the District of Columbia shall manufacture, sell, offer for sale, keep for sale, traffic in, barter, or exchange for goods or merchandise, or solicit or receive orders for the purchase of any alcoholic or other prohibited liquors.

Mr. WORKS. Except——

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes; there is an exception, which reads "for any other than scientific, medicinal, pharmaceutical, mechanical, sacramental, or other nonbeverage purposes"; but it seems to me that the language is so plain as to exclude the manufacture of alcohol for beverage purposes for exportation as well as for use as a beverage in the District of Columbia.

Mr. WORKS. Let me ask the Senator if it is his purpose to allow by this bill the manufacture of alcohol to be exported for the excepted purposes, or ought that to be confined to the District? That feature of it is not covered at all.

Mr. SHAFROTH. It seems to me that under this bill a manufacturer may be permitted to make alcohol for the excepted purposes. Of course, a very strict watch would be required to be kept to see that it is used only for such purposes; but, as a matter of fact, it seems to me no distinction is made as to the purpose for which it can be manufactured either for export or for use in the District of Columbia.

Mr. WORKS. Suppose it is manufactured and shipped out of the District; what control have we of it then?

Mr. SHAFROTH. It may be that we will have difficulty in following it up. Nevertheless, there is such a thing as following it.

Mr. WORKS. I do not think there ought to be any difficulty about it at all. The manufacture of it for exportation for any and every purpose ought to be prohibited.

Mr. SHAFROTH. It seems to me there ought to be the same line pursued as to the people of the District and outsiders, and therefore the use of alcohol for beverage purposes being the thing that is prohibited, the privilege, if it can be so called, of the exceptions ought to apply to persons outside of the District as well as to those inside of the District.

Mr. WORKS. I am extremely sorry that the friends of this bill should take any such attitude as that respecting it.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Well, that seems to me the interpretation to be placed upon it from the language as reported by the committee.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I do not think the language to which the Senator from Colorado refers would justify the conclusion he has reached, and I should like to have the question decided before I offer my amendment to the bill, which will propose to submit it to a vote of the people of the District as to whether or not it shall be put into effect. This first paragraph as amended and as it stands now reads in this way:

That on and after the 1st day of November A. D. 1917, no person or persons, or any house, company, association, club, or corporation, his, its, or their agents, officers, clerks, or servants, directly or indirectly, in the District of Columbia shall manufacture, sell, offer for sale, keep for sale, traffic in, barter, or exchange for goods or merchandise, or solicit or receive orders for the purchase of any alcoholic or other prohibited liquors for beverage purposes or for any other than scientific, medicinal, pharmaceutical, mechanical, sacramental, or other nonbeverage purposes.

Of course, the exception is so broad that there can not be any question that the manufacture of alcohol except for beverage purposes is permitted under the terms of this bill, for it excepts nonbeverage purposes, but prohibits the manufacture, sale, purchase, or trafficking in of liquor for beverage purposes.

I do not see anything in this bill that prohibits the manufacture of grain alcohol, and that is the only kind of alcohol involved, because, so far as I know, there is no wood alcohol or methyl alcohol manufactured in the District. There is nothing in this bill that would prohibit the manufacture of grain alcohol if the manufacturer of the alcohol declares that he is not manufacturing it for beverage purposes. There need merely be such a declaration on his part. There are no provisions in this bill to denature this alcohol if it is manufactured. There are no provisions in this bill to limit its control if it is used for mechanical purposes, as the Government of the United States now limits the control of taxed alcohol when the tax is exempted and it is used for mechanical purposes. There is no way to follow the manufacture of this alcohol after it has gone out of the hands of the man who distils it, so far as this bill is concerned, that I can see.

I may not have analyzed the bill as carefully as the proponents of the bill have, and that is the reason why I have asked my question. It appears to me, however, that under the terms of this bill you can set up a distillery in Washington, declare that you are not doing it for beverage purposes, ship your liquor across the line to somebody who says he is going to use it for denatured purposes or mechanical purposes or medical purposes, and then he can go on with the sale of it without restriction to anybody that he chooses to sell it to for beverage purposes outside of the District of Columbia. As a matter of fact, under the terms of this bill it appears to me that the manufacturer here in the District can declare that he is not manufacturing the alcohol for beverage purposes.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I yield.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not believe that the manufacturer would even have to declare that he is manufacturing it for nonbeverage purposes. I believe that under the provisions of the bill they can establish a distillery in the District of Columbia and ship all the alcohol they can manufacture, providing it goes out of the District; and I do not think they would even have to declare that it shall go out of the District.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I am inclined to think that myself; but the interpretation that the Senator in charge of the bill put on it was that it would require a declaration on the part of the manufacturer of his purpose in manufacturing it. I agree with the viewpoint of the Senator from Utah, but I say I have not had a chance to study these amendments carefully. Therefore I was taking the interpretation that the Senator in charge of the bill put on it. Under that interpretation you can manufacture the grain alcohol in the District, ship it across the line—and the line is not very far away—and immediately ship it back into the District for anybody to consume who wants to pay for it outside of the District and say he is going to consume it in his own house.

If that is the purpose of the bill, while, as I say, I am not here to correct the bill that the Senator desires to propose—my only purpose is to have a referendum on the subject—I want the Senate to understand what is in the bill before we vote on it, and I want the people in the District of Columbia to understand what is in the bill before we vote on it.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I would suggest to the Senator, in answer to the suggestion made by the Senator from Utah, that the purchaser would not have to make any declaration as to the purpose to which this alcohol was to be devoted. The bill says that he shall not sell it for any other purpose than scientific, mechanical, and similar purposes. Now, if the sale is made in the District of Columbia, it can not be sold as a beverage without violating the law.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Undoubtedly. There is no dispute there. My question was, when he sends it across the line.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Oh, I understand that he can not follow it. I think there ought to be some provision in the bill to prohibit shipment out of the District of Columbia. The terms of the law should be clear and definite, and every provision needful to meet and baffle the circumvention of the shrewd and unscrupulous lawbreaker.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President——

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I should like to ask the Senator whether this language would not be satisfactory to him——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I am not objecting to the language of the bill, if the Senator in charge of the bill desires to put it in the form that it is in. I want to know what the intention is. That is all I am after.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I recognize that there might be a violation of this law after the product is shipped out of the District, and I am going to suggest this kind of amendment——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator yield to the Senator from Kansas before that is done?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Certainly.

Mr. CURTIS. I simply wanted to ask the Senator from Texas, who has charge of the bill, in order to remove all doubt, to agree to an amendment to prohibit the manufacture of liquor in the District for exportation or sale outside of the District.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I think the language of the bill is entirely clear and covers the point; but in order that there may be no question about it, I shall be very glad to accept an amendment of that kind.

Mr. SHAFROTH. That is the amendment which I suggest. After the word "purposes," in line 4 of page 2, I move to insert the words "or shipment from the District of Columbia." The word "export" seemed to refer more particularly to shipments to foreign countries. Consequently, I think that language would be a little better, and I will propose that amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Let us see if the Secretary has that.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The amendment has not yet been proposed, as I understand, but the Senator says that he will propose it.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

Mr. KERN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Alabama yield to me to make a motion with reference to adjournment?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. KERN. I move that when the Senate adjourns to-day it adjourn until Monday next at 12 o'clock meridian.

The motion was agreed to.

PROHIBITION IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 1082) to prevent the manufacture and sale of alcoholic liquors in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I now move that after the word "purposes," in line 4, on page 2, of the reprint, there be inserted "for shipment from the District of Columbia."

Mr. SMOOT. "For shipment outside of the District of Columbia."

Mr. SHAFROTH. Or "for shipment from the District of Columbia." That would be outside.

Mr. SMOOT. I thought the other word was a little the better, but I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the vote whereby the amendment was agreed to will be reconsidered.

The SECRETARY. On page 2 of the reprint, line 4, after the word "purposes," it is proposed to insert the words "for shipment from the District of Columbia."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I ask that that part of the section be now read down to line 6, as it will be with those words included.

Mr. SHAFROTH. There ought to be another amendment following that.

Mr. KENYON. There ought to be some thought given to the amendments at this point, I should think, to formulate them properly.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I would suggest to the Senator that there ought to be a limitation as to that matter, and there ought to be put after the word "purposes," in line 6, the words "in the District of Columbia."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator make that as a motion?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Not until this other matter is disposed of.

Mr. KENYON. I should simply like to have it read as it will appear when the amendment is made.

Mr. SMOOT. Let me suggest to the Senator having the bill in charge that this is a most important thing in the bill. Why can we not pass this section and get it into shape, so that when we do perfect it there will be no question about it?

Mr. VARDAMAN. I think that is a very wise suggestion.

Mr. SMOOT. I think it is of enough importance to give considerable attention to it, and let us get it right first before we adopt any amendments to it at all.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is an amendment pending on page 14, the Chair will say to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. I am only asking that section 1 be passed over until we can agree as to really what the section means, and what amendments ought to be made to make it perfect.

Mr. SHEPPARD. For the present I ask that the reading of the bill, which was interrupted on page 14, be continued, and then, at the conclusion of the reading, we may have arrived at some decision regarding the point that has been debated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Then this part will go over?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I simply ask that the reading be continued.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, that will be done. The pending amendment is on page 14, lines 17 to 20, which has been read by the Secretary.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment was, on page 15, line 5, to change the number of the section from 8 to 7.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 15, line 10, after the word "of," to strike out the word "use"; in line 15, after the word "sell," to strike out "or give away"; and in line 16, before the words "any liquors," to strike out "or giving away," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 7. That every person who shall directly or indirectly keep or maintain by himself or by associating with others, or who shall in any manner aid, assist, or abet in keeping or maintaining any clubhouse, or other place in which any alcoholic liquor is received or kept for the purpose of gift, barter, or sale, or for distribution or division among the members of any club or association by any means whatsoever, or who shall maintain what is commonly known as the "locker system" or other device for evading the provisions of this act, and every person who shall use, barter, sell, or assist or abet in bartering, selling any liquors so received or kept, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof be subject to the penalties prescribed in section 1 of this act; and in all cases the members, shareholders, associates, or employees in any club or association mentioned in this section shall be competent witnesses to prove any violations of the provisions of this section of this act, or of any fact tending thereto; and no person shall be excused from testifying as to any offense committed by another against any of the provisions of this act by reason of his testimony tending to criminate himself, but the testimony given by such person shall in no case be used against him.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 16, to strike out lines 3 to 6, both inclusive, in the following words:

The keeping or giving away of alcoholic liquors, or any schemes or devices whatever, to evade the provisions of this act, shall be deemed as unlawful selling within the provisions of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 16, after line 6, to insert a new section, as follows:

SEC. 8. The keeping or giving away of alcoholic or other prohibited liquors for the purpose of evading the provisions of this act shall be deemed an unlawful selling, subject to the penalties provided in section 1 of this act.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I should like an explanation of that section from the Senator in charge of the bill.

The proposed amendment reads:

The keeping or giving away of alcoholic or other prohibited liquors for the purpose of evading the provisions of this act shall be deemed an unlawful selling, subject to the penalties provided in section 1 of this act.

As I understood the Senator a while ago, he stated that the purpose of this act was to prohibit the sale for beverage purposes and the manufacture for beverage purposes, but that it did not prohibit the importation for consumption or the keeping of liquor for consumption. I should like to understand what is the meaning of this provision under that interpretation, because it says, "the keeping or giving away of alcoholic or other prohibited liquors." Now, if a man had liquor in his house, if he imported it for beverage purposes, for individual consumption, unless he drank it all as soon as it landed in his house he would be keeping it for beverage purposes. Is not the amendment now proposed by the Senator in conflict with what he says is the purpose of the act?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Not at all. If it is a bona fide keeping or a bona fide giving away, there is no violation of the act. That section is intended to prevent evasions of the law under the cloak of keeping intoxicating liquor for pretended personal use or of pretended gift.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. What I am trying to get at is a thorough understanding of this proposition, as it will bear on the amendment which I propose to offer. As I understand, if a citizen of Washington imports from the city of Baltimore into his house liquor for beverage purposes, under the construction placed on this bill by the Senator in charge of it he can keep that liquor in his house indefinitely if he does not sell or barter it, and he can give it to his friends who come into his house to see him. Is that the interpretation of the bill?

Mr. SHEPPARD. That is true.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. And this clause in the bill does not interfere with that purpose?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Not at all, if he is acting in good faith.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, if he was arrested and charged with violating the section, it would be a question of fact for the jury to determine whether or not he had violated it.

Mr. SHEPPARD. That is entirely correct.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment was, on page 16, line 13, before the word "by," to insert "of"; on line 15, after the word "alcoholic," to insert "or other prohibited"; on line 16, after the word "liquors," to insert "for purposes forbidden"; and on line 18, after the word "publish," to insert "or distribute," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 9. That if any person shall advertise or give notice of by signs, billboards, newspapers, periodicals, or otherwise for himself or another the manufacturer, offering for sale, or keeping for sale of alcoholic or other prohibited liquors for purposes forbidden prohibited under this act, or shall circulate or distribute any price list, circulars, or order blanks advertising such liquors, or publish or distribute any newspaper, magazine, periodical, or other written or printed paper in which such advertisements of liquors appear, or shall permit to be posted upon his premises, or premises under his control (including billboards), or shall permit the same to so remain upon such premises, he shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and be fined not less than $100 nor more than $500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 17, line 7, after the word "manufacturing," to strike out "storing or depositing"; in line 8, after the words "keeping for sale," to strike out "or use"; and in line 9, after the word "goods," to strike out "giving away," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 10. That if one or more persons who are competent witnesses shall charge, on oath or affirmation before the corporation counsel of the District of Columbia or any of his assistants duly authorized to act for him, presenting that any person, company, copartnership, association, club, or corporation has or have violated or is violating the provisions of this act by manufacturing, offering for sale, keeping for sale, trafficking in, bartering, exchanging for goods, or otherwise furnishing alcoholic liquor, shall request said corporation counsel or any of his assistants duly authorized to act for him to issue a warrant, said attorney or any of his assistants shall issue such warrant, in which warrant the room, house, building, or other place in which the violation is alleged to have occurred or is occurring shall be specifically described, and said warrant shall be placed in the hands of the captain or acting captain of the police precinct in which the room, house, building, or other place above referred to is located, commanding him to at once thoroughly search said described room, house, building, or other place, and the appurtenances thereof, and if any such be found, to take into his possession and safely keep, to be produced as evidence when required, all alcoholic liquors and all the means of dispensing the same, also all the paraphernalia or part of the paraphernalia of a barroom or other alcoholic liquor establishment, and any United States internal-revenue tax receipt or certificate for the manufacture or sale of alcoholic liquor effective for the period of time covering the alleged offense, and forthwith report all the facts to the corporation counsel of the District of Columbia, and such alcoholic liquor or the means for dispensing same, or the paraphernalia of a barroom or other alcoholic liquor establishment, or any United States internal-revenue tax receipt or certificate for the sale of alcoholic liquor effective as aforesaid, shall be prima facie evidence of the violation of the provisions of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 18, to strike out all of section 11 in the following words:

SEC. 11. That it shall not be necessary, in order to convict any person, company, house, association, club, or corporation, his, its, or their agents, officers, clerks, or servants of manufacturing, importing, or selling alcoholic liquors, to prove the actual manufacture, importing, sale, delivery of, or payment for any alcoholic liquors, but the evidence of having or keeping them in hand, stored or deposited, taking orders for, or offering to sell or barter, or exchanging them for goods or merchandise, or giving them away, shall be sufficient to convict; nor shall it be necessary in a warrant or information to specify the particular kind of alcoholic liquor which is made the subject of a charge of violation of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on line 1, page 19, to change the number of section from 12 to 11, and, on line 4, after the word "car," to strike out "or railroad passenger train or in or upon" and insert "or," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 11. That any person who shall, in the District of Columbia, in any street, or public or private road, alley, or in any public place or building or in or upon any street car or any other vehicle commonly used for the transportation of passengers, or in or about any depot, platform or waiting station, drink any alcoholic liquor of any kind, or if any person shall be drunk or intoxicated in any street, alley, or public or private road or in any railroad passenger train, street car, or any public place or building, or at any public gathering, or if any person shall be drunk or intoxicated and shall disturb the peace of any person anywhere, he shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine of not less than $10 nor more than $100, or by imprisonment for not less than 5 days nor more than 30 days in the workhouse or jail of the District of Columbia, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 19, line 19, to change the number of the section from 13 to 12, and, on line 21, after the words "other than," to strike out "wholesale" and insert "manufacturers or," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 12. The payment of the special tax required of wholesale or retail liquor dealers by the United States by any person or persons other than manufacturers or druggists licensed under section 5 of this act, within the District of Columbia, shall be prima facie evidence that such person or persons are engaged in keeping and selling, offering and exposing for sale alcoholic liquors contrary to the provisions of this act, and a certificate from the collector of internal revenue, his agents, clerks, or deputies showing the payment of such tax, and the name or names of persons to whom issued, and the names of the person or persons, if any, associated with the person to whom such tax receipt is issued, shall be sufficient evidence of the payment of such tax and of the association of such persons for the selling and keeping, offering and exposing for sale of liquors contrary to the provisions of this act in all trials or legal inquiries.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 20, line 11, to change the number of the section from 14 to 13; on line 13, after the word "manufactured," to strike out "stored"; on line 14, before the word "vended," to strike out "or"; on the same line, after the word "vended," to strike out "given away"; and on line 16, after the word "barter," to strike out "give away," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 13. All houses, boathouses, buildings, clubrooms, and places of every description, including drug stores, where alcoholic liquors are manufactured, sold, vended, or furnished contrary to law (including those in which clubs, orders, or associations sell, barter, distribute, or dispense intoxicating liquors to their members, by any means or device whatever, as provided in section 8 of this act) shall be held, taken, and deemed common and public nuisances. And any person who shall maintain, or shall aid or abet, or knowingly be associated with others in maintaining such common and public nuisance, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be subject to the penalties prescribed in section one of this act, and judgment shall be given that such house, building, or other place, or any room therein, be abated or closed up as a place for the sale or keeping of such liquor contrary to law, as the court may determine.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 21, line 4, to change the number of the section from 15 to 14.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 21, line 16, to change the number of the section from 16 to 15.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 21, line 24, to change the number of the section from 17 to 16.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 22, line 8, to change the number of the section from 18 to 17.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 22, line 16, to change the number of the section from 19 to 18.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 23, line 1, to change the number of the section from 20 to 19; on line 7, after the word "selling," to strike out the comma and insert the word "or"; and on the same line, after the word "bartering," to strike out the words "or giving," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 19. Every wife, child, parent, guardian, or employer, or other person who shall be injured in person or property or means of support by any intoxicated person, or in consequence of intoxication, habitual or otherwise, of any person, such wife, child, parent, or guardian shall have a right of action, in his or her own name, against any person who shall, by selling or bartering intoxicating liquors, have caused the intoxication of such person, for all damages actually sustained, as well as for exemplary damages; and a married woman shall have the right to bring suit, prosecute, and control the same, and the amount recovered the same as if unmarried; and all damages recovered by a minor under this act shall be paid either to such minor or to his or her parents, guardian, or next friend, as the court shall direct.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 23, line 15, to change the number of the section from 21 to 20.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 24, line 1, to change the number of the section from 22 to 21.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 26, line 9, to change the number of the section from 26 to 25, and on line 12, after the word "repealed," to insert:

And that the Excise Board for the District of Columbia, provided for and established under the act making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 13, 1914, be, and it is hereby, abolished upon the taking effect of this act.

So as to make the section read:

SEC. 25. That this act shall be in full force and effect on and after the 1st day of November, 1916, and all laws and parts of laws inconsistent herewith be, and they are hereby, repealed. And that the Excise Board for the District of Columbia, provided for and established under the act making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, be, and it is hereby, abolished upon the taking effect of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

DEATH OF REPRESENTATIVE SAMUEL J. TRIBBLE.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, I send to the desk the following privileged resolutions and ask for their adoption.

The resolutions were read, considered by unanimous consent, and unanimously agreed to, as follows:

Senate resolution 285.

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow the announcement of the death of Hon. SAMUEL J. TRIBBLE, late a Representative from the State of Georgia.

Resolved, That a committee of nine Senators be appointed by the Vice President to join a committee appointed on the part of the House of Representatives to take order for superintending the funeral of the deceased.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

The Presiding Officer appointed as the committee under the second resolution Mr. SMITH of Georgia, Mr. HARDWICK, Mr. BRYAN, Mr. JOHNSON of Maine, Mr. ASHURST, Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota, Mr. NORRIS, Mr. STERLING, and Mr. FERNALD.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, I move as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was unanimously agreed to; and (at 2 o'clock p. m.) the Senate adjourned, the adjournment being until Monday, December 11, 1916, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, December 9, 1916.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Grant us, O most merciful Father, a keener insight into and a broader conception of the things eternal, that we may be inspired to do the work Thou hast given us to do now with patience, endurance, and efficiency, and be prepared to meet the changes in the things temporal with perfect faith and confidence in the overruling of Thy providence for the good of mankind. Our hearts are profoundly touched by the sudden and unexpected death of a Member of this body. Comfort his colleagues and friends, especially the bereaved wife and children, with the precious promises of the immortality of the soul, that they may look forward with bright anticipations to a reunion in the realm where sorrows never enter and where the continuity of life is not broken, but flows on to larger and nobler existence. And all praise shall be Thine, in the spirit of Him, who said, "I am the resurrection and the life. He that believeth on me shall never die." Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Thursday, December 7, 1916, was read and approved.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas, by direction of the Committee on Indian Affairs, submitted the bill (H. R. 18453) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, which was read a first and second time and, with the accompanying report (No. 1208), was ordered printed and referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, I reserve all points of order on the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas reserves all points of order on the bill.

RESIGNATIONS FROM COMMITTEES.

Mr. ADAMSON rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. ADAMSON. I wish to make a privileged announcement to the House.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold that for a moment?

Mr. ADAMSON. Yes; I will yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. KITCHIN. I understand, Mr. Speaker, there are some resignations from committees on the Speaker's desk. I have the nominations to fill them.

The SPEAKER. The Chair announces the following resignations from committees, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., December 7, 1916.

Hon. CHAMP CLARK, Speaker.

DEAR SIR: I hereby tender my resignation as a member of the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

Yours, very truly, C. F. CURRY.

WASHINGTON, D. C., December 7, 1916.

Hon. CHAMP CLARK, Speaker.

DEAR SIR: I hereby tender my resignation as a member of the Committee on Roads.

Yours, very truly, JOSEPH WALSH.

WASHINGTON, D. C., December 7, 1916.

Hon. CHAMP CLARK, Speaker.

DEAR SIR: I hereby tender my resignation as a member of the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries and the Committee on Expenditures in the Navy Department.

Yours, very truly, GEO. A. LOUD.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, these resignations will be accepted.

There was no objection.

NOMINATION AND ELECTION OF MEMBERS TO VACANCIES ON COMMITTEES.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I nominate to the various vacancies Members in accordance with the list which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the list of nominations.

The Clerk read as follows:

COMMITTEE NOMINATIONS.

Military Affairs: T. W. HARRISON, of Virginia.
Naval Affairs: GEORGE A. LOUD, of Michigan.
Merchant Marine and Fisheries: GEORGE M. BOWERS, of West Virginia; H. STANLEY BENEDICT, of California.
Judiciary: JOSEPH WALSH, of Massachusetts.
Roads: HARRY C. WOODYARD, of West Virginia.
Expenditures in the Navy Department: H. STANLEY BENEDICT, of California.
Expenditures in the Treasury Department: GEORGE M. BOWERS, of West Virginia.

The SPEAKER. Are there any other nominations?

There were no other nominations.

The Members nominated were elected.

REPORTS BY THE DOORKEEPER.

The SPEAKER laid before the House two reports by the Doorkeeper, one on the sale of waste paper (H. Doc. No. 1715) and the other on property in charge of the Doorkeeper (H. Doc. No. 1716), which were ordered printed and referred to the Committee on Accounts.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. BRITT, by unanimous consent, was granted leave of absence indefinitely, on account of important business.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed the following resolutions:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow the announcement of the death of Hon. SAMUEL J. TRIBBLE, late a Representative from the State of Georgia.

Resolved, That a committee of nine Senators be appointed by the Vice President to join a committee appointed on the part of the House of Representatives to take order for superintending the funeral of the deceased.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased the Senate do now adjourn.

And that in compliance of the foregoing resolutions the Presiding Officer had appointed as the committee under the second resolution Mr. SMITH of Georgia, Mr. HARDWICK, Mr. BRYAN, Mr. JOHNSON of Maine, Mr. ASHURST, Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota, Mr. NORRIS, Mr. STERLING, and Mr. FERNALD.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 706. An act to amend section 260 of an act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the Judiciary," approved March 3, 1911.

THE PHILIPPINE ISLANDS.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] has asked me to yield to him for a moment for some purpose.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, in the year 1910 the Hon. Jacob M. Dickinson, then Secretary of War, made an official trip to the Philippine Islands, and during his journey there he made a number of addresses that I think would be of considerable historic interest. They have not been printed, and I desire to ask unanimous consent to have them printed as a document.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman include in that document the report of Mr. Dickinson that he made upon his return, covering the Philippine Islands situation?

Mr. GARRETT. The report was printed.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Yes; but not as a document. It was printed as all reports of the Secretary of War are printed. It has never been available as a document. It seems to me pertinent to have the report printed in the same document with the addresses to which the gentleman from Tennessee refers.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, I shall have no objection to that; but I will withdraw the request I have made for the present, and will talk with the gentleman about it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee withdraws his request. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON] is recognized.

DEATH OF REPRESENTATIVE TRIBBLE, OF GEORGIA.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, it becomes my sad duty to announce to the House the death of our colleague, the Hon. SAMUEL J. TRIBBLE, a Representative from the State of Georgia, which occurred yesterday morning in this city at 7 o'clock.

It is not my purpose at this time to indulge in any extended remarks touching the services and life and character of our deceased comrade, but at some future time I shall request the House to set apart a day on which an appropriate tribute can be paid to the memory of the deceased. At present I offer the resolutions which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolutions.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 393.

Resolved, That the House has heard with profound sorrow of the death of Hon. SAMUEL J. TRIBBLE, a Representative from the State of Georgia.

Resolved, That a committee of 17 Members of the House, with such Members of the Senate as may be joined, be appointed to attend the funeral.

Resolved, That the Sergeant at Arms of the House be authorized and directed to take such steps as may be necessary for carrying out the provisions of these resolutions, and that the necessary expenses in connection therewith be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolutions.

The resolutions were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will announce the members of the committee appointed on behalf of the House to attend the funeral.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. EDWARDS, Mr. CRISP, Mr. WISE, Mr. BELL, Mr. VINSON, Mr. LOBECK, Mr. GODWIN of North Carolina, Mr. CULLOP, Mr. AUSTIN, Mr. MUDD, Mr. KELLEY, Mr. FARR, Mr. ADAMSON, Mr. HOWARD, Mr. LEE, Mr. WALKER, Mr. HUGHES, and Mr. PARK.

ADJOURNMENT.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the concluding resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect, this House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was unanimously agreed to.

Accordingly (at 12 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Monday, December 11, 1916, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

SENATE.

MONDAY, December 11, 1916.

Rev. Edward King Hardin, of the city of Washington, offered the following prayer:

Our heavenly Father, we pause before the beginning of the work of this day and of this new week to humbly ask that Thy blessing may rest upon us and that we may have the Divine guidance that we so much need. We thank Thee, O Lord, for the privilege of work. We thank Thee that Thou dost give to us the inestimable privilege of becoming coworkers with Thyself in the carrying out and fulfilling of this great task. We remember that it is written in Thy word, "The eyes of Jehovah run to and fro throughout the whole earth, to show Himself strong in the behalf of them whose heart is perfect toward Him." May we fulfill this condition and with clear heads and strong hearts be ready to do the work that God has for us to do, and may we ever by Thy help trust in God and do the right. In Christ's name, we ask it. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the concurrent resolution of the Senate (S. Con. Res. 27) providing for the appointment of a joint congressional committee and authorizing such committee to make the necessary arrangements for the inauguration of the President of the United States on the 5th day of March, 1917.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had appointed as members of the committee on the part of the House to make arrangements for the inaugural ceremonies Mr. RUCKER, Mr. GARRETT, and Mr. MCKINLEY.

The message further announced that the House agrees to the amendments of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 91) authorizing and directing the Department of Labor to make inquiry into the cost of living in the District of Columbia and to report thereon to Congress as early as practicable.

The message also announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 15617) to establish fish-hatching and fish-cultural stations in the States of Alabama, California, Louisiana, Florida, Georgia, South Carolina or North Carolina, Maryland or Virginia, Oregon or Washington, Texas, Oklahoma, Illinois, Washington, Arizona, New Mexico, Michigan, Idaho, Missouri, Pennsylvania, Delaware or New Jersey, and Minnesota, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further communicated to the Senate the intelligence of the death of Hon. SAMUEL J. TRIBBLE, late a Representative from the State of Georgia, and transmitted resolutions of the House thereon.

HOUSE JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled joint resolution (H. J. Res. 91) authorizing and directing the Department of Labor to make inquiry into the cost of living in the District of Columbia and to report thereon to Congress as early as practicable, and it was thereupon signed by the Vice President.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Washington, N. C., praying for an increase in the salaries of post-office clerks, city and rural carriers, and railway mail clerks, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

Mr. KERN presented a memorial of Local Branch, United Mine Workers of America, of Terre Haute, Ind., remonstrating against compulsory arbitration of industrial disputes, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented a petition of Local Branch, United Mine Workers of America, of Terre Haute, Ind., praying for the placing of an embargo on food products, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented petitions of sundry citizens of South Bend, La Fayette, Greencastle, Richmond, Fort Wayne, Evansville, Attica, and Winchester, all in the State of Indiana, praying for prohibition in the District of Columbia, which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented memorials of sundry citizens of Fort Wayne, Ind., remonstrating against prohibition in the District of Columbia, which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. HUGHES presented a petition of the Woman's Club, of Englewood, N. J., praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the dishonest advertising and sale of merchandise, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented petitions of sundry citizens of New Jersey, praying for the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution to prohibit polygamy, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented memorials of sundry citizens of New Jersey, remonstrating against the placing of an embargo on food products, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED.

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. CURTIS:

A bill (S. 7240) to prevent unfair discriminations in the sale of print paper by persons engaged in commerce, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS—ALICE A. RICHEY.

On motion of Mr. HARDING, it was Ordered, That the papers accompanying the bill (S. 4121) granting an increase of pension to Alice A. Richey, Sixty-fourth Congress, first session, be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, no adverse report having been made thereon.

SUPERINTENDENT OF FOLDING ROOM.

Mr. ROBINSON submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 286), which was read and referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Sergeant at Arms of the Senate be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to appoint a superintendent of the folding room, who shall be paid at the rate of $1,600 per annum from the miscellaneous items of the contingent fund of the Senate until otherwise provided by law.

PROHIBITION IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I desire to propose an amendment to Senate bill 1082. Some time ago I offered an amendment providing for a referendum to the voters of the District. Since that time the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD] in charge of the bill has amended it. I desire to have the substitute I now offer to accord with the amendments made to the bill printed and lie on the table.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. GRONNA submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 1082) to prevent the manufacture and sale of alcoholic liquors in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

H. R. 15617. An act to establish fish-hatching and fish-cultural stations in the States of Alabama, California, Louisiana, Florida, Georgia, South Carolina or North Carolina, Maryland or Virginia, Oregon or Washington, Texas, Oklahoma, Illinois, Washington, Arizona, New Mexico, Michigan, Idaho, Missouri, Pennsylvania, Delaware or New Jersey, and Minnesota was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Fisheries.

REGULATION OF IMMIGRATION.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The morning business is closed.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 10384, known as the immigration bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from South Carolina.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10384) to regulate the immigration of aliens to, and the residence of aliens in, the United States.

The SECRETARY. August 21, 1916, the bill was taken up on motion and considered as in Committee of the Whole, the committee amendments were agreed to, and the bill was reported to the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is informed by the Secretary that on page 49, at line 8, the amendment which consists in striking out the article "a" was not agreed to as in Committee of the Whole. If there be no objection, the record will now disclose that this amendment has been agreed to. The Chair hears none, and the amendment is now agreed to.

The Chair is also informed that there is an amendment on page 12 which was overlooked as in Committee of the Whole. It will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 12, line 20, after the word "necessary," insert a comma.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment will be agreed to.

Mr. REED. I wish to inquire the exact parliamentary situation. Is the bill now in Committee of the Whole?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is in the Senate. The first question is upon concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole. Afterwards it will be open to further amendment in the Senate.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I would have objected to taking up the bill at this time if I had known the parliamentary situation. In the months that have intervened since adjournment it escaped my recollection that the bill had proceeded to the point the record now discloses it has reached. There has not been at this session any very thorough consideration of the bill. It came up during the somewhat troublous hours of the last session. I do not think the Senate has really had its attention directed to the measure in the way it ought before so important a measure is passed.

I will say to the Senator in charge of the bill that I do not intend to take much of the time in a discussion of the measure. There are some amendments which I think are consistent with, at least, some of the purposes of the bill, which I should like to have the opportunity to present and have considered.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Will the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. OWEN. I should like to suggest to the Senator that I had intended at the conclusion of the morning hour when the bill came up to ask that it be sent back to the committee for the very purpose the Senator has in mind.

Mr. REED. Is the Senator speaking of the immigration bill?

Mr. OWEN. I thought the Senator was speaking of the corrupt-practices bill.

Mr. REED. No; the immigration bill is before the Senate. I was saying to the Senator in charge of the bill I should like to have an opportunity to present these amendments to him on the floor. It now appears that the bill is ready for a vote unless some one desires to speak on it. As far as I am concerned, I do not want to be put to the unpleasant task of talking on the bill and consuming the morning hour. I will ask the Senator from South Carolina if he will be willing to let the bill go over until to-morrow morning and allow me to present these amendments to him? I have already spoken to him about them in a general way. Then we can take up the bill at that time.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, I do not anticipate that the bill will come to an immediate vote. I will say to the Senator from Missouri that there have been no radical changes made in the bill by the Senate committee from the body of the bill as it came over from the House. In one particular we made a change, where we inserted certain lines of longitude and latitude to exclude the zone which it was agreed by a vote of the Senate and the House should be excluded. There has also been, to meet the objection of some who opposed the bill before, a change in the verbiage referring to the literacy test that I think will meet some of the objections heretofore made to it. I also think that the provisions of the bill in reference to political offenses have been so worked out that they will meet, in part at least, certain objections of the Executive, who vetoed the bill when it went to him before.

The amendment to which the Senator from Missouri has called my attention seems to be one that could be readily prepared and put before the Senate upon its merits. The bill has been so often before both Houses in all its essential features that it would be a waste of time, it seems to me—except on the part of those, if there be any such, who might wish to defeat the bill—to prolong the debate. The committee embodied that amendment so as to perfect the verbiage of the text without affecting the principle in the bill as it came from the other House, which, I think, embodies in better form the principle of the old bill No. 6060. The amendment to which the Senator refers, I think, could be offered on its merits to-day. It is very easy to find the section to which it would naturally belong.

I am sure the Senator understands my position as to the crowded condition of work in the other House. It is essential that bills which are going to pass should be promptly considered and passed. For that reason I called this bill up this morning. I should be very glad to have considered, and I am sure that the Senate would consider with interest, any amendment that the Senator from Missouri might offer looking to the perfection of the measure.

Mr. REED. Well, Mr. President, I could not prepare the two amendments which I have in mind while I am sitting on the floor, with the Senate prepared to vote on the bill, in the hour and a half that remains for discussion. I shall not undertake to do it in that length of time. The matters involved are too important to be dealt with in that way.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, I had overlooked one suggestion that I should be glad on this occasion to mention to the Senator from Missouri. If I understood the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] aright, he intends at the hour of 2 o'clock, when the bill, which is the unfinished business, shall come up, to move to recommit that bill, which will then give this bill possibly the right of way of to-day after 2 o'clock. I had intended, the unfinished business notwithstanding, to move to continue the consideration of this bill until it be passed. I think that we perhaps shall have all of the day on this bill. I think there are others who are going to discuss the amendments which are in the bill, and I should certainly anticipate that the Senator from Missouri would have all of to-day and possibly some time to-morrow in which to prepare and discuss his amendments.

Mr. REED. All right, if I shall have that time; but of course I do not know what may happen. Here is a bill which has reached a point where the roll call is likely to occur at any minute on its final passage. I did not know that or I should have objected to the bill being considered this morning. I have already made my statement with reference to that matter. In my judgment, nothing will be gained in the saving of time by now refusing a reasonable concession and allowing the bill to go over until to-morrow morning. If it does go over until to-morrow morning, I shall then be ready to present whatever I desire. I wish to examine the bill now in its amended form.

As the Senator from South Carolina knows, this bill came up in the last hours of the last session, when there was a great deal to divert attention from it. We then had most important matters before us, and the attention of most Members was directed to those other matters. What amendments were made to this bill I do not know. They may all be wise; they may be such amendments as I should be entirely satisfied with, but they may not accord with my judgment, and I must exercise my own judgment, of course. All I am asking for is a reasonable amount of time—a few hours—in which to go over the bill and prepare whatever amendments I desire to submit. If the Senator now desires to insist upon forcing the bill on, of course I think the discussion will be longer than it would be otherwise.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, in reply to the Senator from Missouri, I desire to say that it has been indicated to me that there are other minor amendments which perhaps will be offered to the bill. As I understand the status of the bill now, it is still in Committee of the Whole and open to further amendment, if I understood the Chair aright.

Mr. REED. No; the bill is in the Senate and open to amendment.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. The bill is in the Senate and open to amendment. It has been indicated to me that there might be other amendments. I should dislike to lose the position of the bill parliamentarily, because it is of such importance, and yet I should not like arbitrarily to foreclose the opportunity of amendment to those who in good faith might desire to offer amendments.

Mr. REED. Then, I suggest to the Senator from South Carolina, if he will pardon me, to let amendments be called for, and if any are offered we can discuss them; but if none are offered, then I ask the Senator to let the bill go over until to-morrow morning, with the understanding that it shall not lose its place.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I should like to ask the Chair a question for information. The bill has now been taken up in the morning hour, as I understand. At 2 o'clock is the proper time, as I understand, when a bill can be made the unfinished business. Without committing myself, I want to ask the Chair, If this bill were now laid aside, would it be in order for me to move at 2 o'clock that it be made the unfinished business and then be temporarily laid aside?

Mr. GALLINGER. It would not be.

The VICE PRESIDENT. No one can make unfinished business. Unfinished business is the business that is pending at the close of the session of the Senate. In order, at 2 o'clock or at any other time, the Senator from South Carolina may obtain the floor to move to take up this bill or any other bill.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Then, Mr. President, I ask that the consideration of the bill before the Senate be proceeded with now, and I think other amendments may be offered.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry. I should like to know just what is the position of the bill now? I think it was taken up at the close of the last session, when I was not present.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill is now in the Senate. The pending question is on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole. It should be understood, of course, that if these amendments are concurred in they are not again amendable in the Senate, but the bill in all other respects will be open to amendment in the Senate.

Mr. WORKS. I should like to ask the Senator having the bill in charge what was done with the amendment found on page 7 of the bill, which affects immigration from Japan into this country?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. That amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WORKS. I think it most unfortunate, Mr. President, that that amendment should have been agreed to. I may desire to take some steps to have the vote by which it was agreed to reconsidered.

The Senate may remember that some time back I submitted some remarks upon that very question. I have never been quite able to understand what the purport or the effect of that amendment really is. It may be that the Commissioner of Immigration may be able to determine what it means; the Committee on Immigration may understand it; but it is so complicated, and I think so inadvisable, that I may desire, before the discussion of the bill is concluded, to have that matter reconsidered.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. If the Senator from California will allow me, I think I can give him an explanation of that amendment, which was satisfactory at least to the committee.

Mr. WORKS. I should like very much to have some explanation of the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Just a moment. Let there be no doubt about the parliamentary situation. If there is to be a separate vote on this particular amendment, it must be reserved and a separate vote taken on it. The only interest the Chair has in the matter is to be sure that the parliamentary situation be understood.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. May I ask, for information, as to any of the amendments which were adopted as in Committee of the Whole, would it be in order to have a separate vote on them in the Senate?

The VICE PRESIDENT. If a separate vote is reserved, undoubtedly there can be such vote had in the Senate.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, I shall take the precaution now of making that reservation. I am not sure that I shall desire to follow it up, but in order to protect my rights I shall reserve the right to call for a separate vote upon that amendment. If in the meantime the chairman of the committee can so explain the amendment as to satisfy my mind on the subject, it will not be necessary for me to take that step.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, in reference to the action of the committee I will say that there were quite a number of little nationalities occupying islands contiguous to the Asiatic coast, the inhabitants of which would make undesirable immigrants to this country. The committee, without designating these nations or peoples by name or going into details, found that it was possible by reference to longitudinal and latitudinal lines to exclude, without specific reference to them by name or nationality, those who have proven their undesirability.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, I shall be glad to have the Senator state to the Senate just what effect the fixing of these lines would have upon immigration from Japan into this country.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I was coming to that point. We have a passport agreement with Japan, which is generally known as a "gentlemen's agreement," reference to which is made in the law of 1907 and reiterated in the present bill. We say "unless otherwise provided for by treaty." The gentlemen's agreement up to the present has had the binding force of a treaty, and we have provided in relation to any infringement of that agreement, in these words, found on page 11 of the pending bill:

> Provided further, That whenever the President shall be satisfied that passports issued by any foreign Government to its citizens or subjects to go to any country other than the United States, or to any insular possession of the United States or to the Canal Zone, are being used for the purpose of enabling the holder to come to the continental territory of the United States to the detriment of labor conditions therein, the President shall refuse to permit such citizens or subjects of the country issuing such passports to enter the continental territory of the United States from such other country or from such insular possession or from the Canal Zone.

There was some complaint that, after we had entered into this agreement with Japan, laborers, citizens of that country, were being sent across to the Philippine Islands and from the Philippine Islands to continental United States; but, so far as I am informed, Japan is keeping religiously her passport agreement with the United States. We provide in this bill that the exclusion act, unless otherwise provided for by treaty, shall obtain in the territory over which we have jurisdiction. We are attempting to keep faith with Japan under our agreement in view of the fact that it is alleged that Japan is keeping faith on her part.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, it is very evident to my mind that the chairman of the committee has entirely misconceived the purpose of this amendment, because the preservation of the rights of Japan under the secret or "gentlemen's agreement" which was made was provided for in the House amendment. The House provision has been stricken out, although there was no occasion for amending the bill in that particular at all. The provision in the House bill was as follows, in defining those who should be excluded from admission:

> Hindus and persons who can not become eligible, under existing law, to become citizens of the United States by naturalization, unless otherwise provided for by existing agreements as to passports, or by existing treaties, conventions, or agreements or by treaties, conventions, or agreements that may hereafter be entered into.

That preserved all of the rights of the respective nations under the so-called "gentlemen's agreement" by which really we turned over to the Government of Japan the right to determine who shall come into this country. The language in the House bill has been stricken out, and there has been substituted the provision to which I have referred and which the Senator has attempted to explain.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, if the Senator from California will allow me, the amendment has been reported on exactly the grounds that we have enumerated; the Japanese nation is in the same category as certain other nations. To be perfectly explicit, we have in force the Chinese exclusion act and a treaty safeguarding its provisions. I presume the conditions under which the so-called "gentlemen's agreement" was brought about are more or less known to all the Members of the Senate. The Japanese Government insisted that it would keep its agreement and insisted also that we did not have a specific treaty in reference to them at the time when we entered into the agreement. We agreed then to enter into a "gentlemen's agreement" without a treaty——

Mr. WORKS. Let me ask the Senator another question.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Just let me finish this sentence. We agreed to enter into that agreement in lieu of a treaty, because we had with them a treaty in which was incorporated the favored-nation clause.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, that was all provided for in the language included in the House bill, and there was no occasion for making this amendment to cover any such purpose as that.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. And it was to that very thing that our attention was called. Japan objected that we were breaking the agreement in that we were classing her citizens, right or wrong, with others, which was the very thing that she had resented, and which gave rise to the agreement, and in good faith we had to keep it. So long as she was keeping it, we should keep it until a treaty could be negotiated that could be openly referred to as a treaty, but the committee thought that, as we did want to exclude the Hindus and others, the provision in regard to longitudinal and latitudinal lines should be incorporated in the bill. They have no reference to Japan whatever. It is a mistake to think that reference to the longitudinal and latitudinal lines was incorporated in the bill in order to relieve an embarrassment in reference to Japan. It was not; the reference was made in order, without calling the names of any of the little nations, to cover islands situated near the coast or off the coast of Asia.

Mr. WORKS. Let me ask the Senator another question. Suppose there were no existing agreement with Japan or suppose that it should be abrogated, would this bill as it now stands admit immigrants from Japan?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. That would be true of any country if our treaty were abrogated. It would be true of China.

Mr. WORKS. I should be glad if the Senator would answer my question. In view of that fact, if there should be at any time no agreement at all on the subject between the two nations, then would they be entitled to come in under this bill?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. They would, just the same as in the case of China, for instance. Let me tell the Senator the situation, so that he may understand it. We have an existing treaty with China which was referred to here. If that treaty should be abrogated, outside of any legislation to the contrary, they might come in. We have no treaty with any of these little nations in the excluded territory. If to-morrow they were to enter into an agreement with us, under the terms of this bill, their people could come in. For instance, say, we have none with Turkey. Suppose Turkey were to make an agreement. She is in the geographically excluded territory. Suppose she were to make an agreement with America to-morrow granting her citizens all the rights of the favored-nation clause. The bill says "unless otherwise provided by treaty." It does not say treaties existing now, treaties made to-morrow or next day, but "by treaty." When that treaty is ratified, then her citizens can come in. Whenever Japan abrogates the gentlemen's agreement, then it is for us to have either a treaty with her incorporating this, or some statutory enactment forbidding them to come.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator a moment to ask if it is not true that this provision in the bill as it is now framed will absolutely abrogate the so-called gentlemen's agreement we now have with Japan? The Senator speaks of its abrogation by the Japanese Government, but it seems to me that the amendment proposed by the committee absolutely does away with it.

Let me call the Senator's attention to my reason for believing that. Article I of the treaty with Japan, which was signed on the 21st day of February, 1911, provides:

> The citizens or subjects of each of the high contracting parties shall have liberty to enter, travel, and reside in the territories of the other to carry on trade, wholesale and retail, to own or lease and occupy houses, manufactories, warehouses, and shops, to employ agents of their choice, to lease land for residential and commercial purposes, and generally to do anything incident to or necessary for trade upon the same terms as native citizens or subjects, submitting themselves to the laws and regulations there established.

The treaty has the favored-nation clause in it. There is nothing in it to restrict Japanese immigration except the so-called gentlemen's agreement.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. That is all.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Now, then, you practically do away with the gentlemen's agreement by lines 10 to 23, on page 7 of the bill, because this treaty does protect the Japanese Government and its proposed immigrants to this country. There is nothing in the treaty that excludes them. They are only excluded by the gentlemen's agreement, and yet the proposed Senate amendment says "unless otherwise provided for by existing treaty." The existing treaty does provide for their admission whenever they see fit to come, laboring or any other classes of Japanese.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I want to call the Senator's attention to the fact that the amendment to which he refers has no reference to Japan. We are excluding another territory which was included by the House. An objection was made to the Hindus, so called; but we left out any reference to Japan on the very ground that it was not in the form of a treaty, but a gentlemen's agreement. They objected to being put in a convention in the same category with certain others, and we agreed that we would not put them there; but in effect they were there, and we agreed that as long as they observed the agreement we would observe it. They have observed it, and they objected to our referring to it as a binding treaty. It was binding so far as the good faith of one nation to another was concerned without being expressed in the formal language of a treaty. They said: "We do not want you to put us in that category, publicly expressed, but we will keep this agreement." They have kept it and we have provided in this bill that the others shall be excluded by this longitudinal and latitudinal provision. Now, we are simply keeping faith with Japan.

Mr. WORKS and Mr. LODGE addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I do.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, I should like the Senate to understand that, by the admission of the chairman of the committee, this bill will leave the exclusion of the Japanese entirely and absolutely to the gentlemen's agreement, and that whenever that gentlemen's agreement is abrogated in any way by Japan or by this country, then the doors are absolutely open to the entry of Japanese into this country. This bill is intended to do that very thing out of consideration for Japan. Now, I think we ought to be thinking a little about the interests of our own country.

By this gentlemen's agreement we have absolutely turned over to the Japanese nation the right to say who of their subjects shall enter this country, and we have no control over it. That is bad enough. I think the Japanese Government has kept faith with us under that agreement, so far as I have been able to determine, fairly well, at least; but we are absolutely at the mercy of Japan. She can admit or exclude her subjects as she pleases, and we have no control over it. We are proposing now by this bill to make it worse by passing a bill that will admit all of the Japanese if that agreement should be violated by Japan or should be abrogated. Now, I do not think we ought to place ourselves in any such position as that; so I have protested against it.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, the Senator from California makes a mistake on one point. If this bill should not become law, or if it should become law with this amendment, we should be left exactly as we are to-day. This amendment does not change the existing condition at all.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, that is precisely what I am objecting to. I do not want that.

Mr. LODGE. One moment. What changes the existing condition is the clause in the language which has been stricken out. That, if it became law, would change the existing condition.

Mr. WORKS. That is exactly what I desire.

Mr. LODGE. Precisely; but if this amendment should be substituted by the Senate, we should be left exactly as we are to-day. The situation as it is to-day rests on the treaty which the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] cited between the United States and Japan, which was proclaimed on the 5th of April, 1911. The gentlemen's agreement was not put into the treaty. The understanding between the Governments was that that gentlemen's agreement, as it is called—the passport amendment of our law—should remain in force during the life of the treaty—that is, during 12 years—but in order to protect us in case the gentlemen's agreement was abandoned a clause was put into article 17 giving either of the contracting parties the right to terminate the treaty on six months' notice within the 12 years of its life. That power to terminate on six months' notice at any time within the 12 years was specifically put in in order to protect us in case the gentlemen's agreement was not maintained.

All I desired to call attention to was that the substitution of the amendment of the committee for the language of the House does not alter the situation as it exists to-day. The original language of the House bill, which has been stricken out, does alter the situation, because it excludes all persons who under our laws can not be naturalized. That is not in any law to-day, and it leaves us no worse and no better off than we are at this moment to adopt this amendment.

If I may be pardoned for a moment longer, the amendment is an extremely awkward one. It was put in at the request of the executive department of the Government—the State Department. They believed it necessary that it should be embodied. To put it in plain language, it excludes all Asiatic immigration not now excluded by gentlemen's agreement or by treaty.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. In what treaty or law does that gentlemen's agreement appear?

Mr. LODGE. None. It does not appear in any treaty or any law.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. As I construe the proposed amendment, I am in thorough accord with the Senator from California, and I differ from the Senator from Massachusetts as to the effect of it. Section 3 of the bill that is under consideration provides:

> That the following classes of aliens shall be excluded from admission into the United States: * * * Unless otherwise provided for by existing treaties, persons who are natives—

And so forth.

Now, the Japanese are absolutely protected under the only treaty that we have. The gentlemen's agreement is not a part of the treaty.

Mr. LODGE. Certainly not.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. So that the treaty we have with Japan absolutely protects them, and if we adopt the proposed amendment here we simply throw down the bars, and Japan will say, "We are protected by treaty, and our citizens are entitled to admission to the United States under the new immigration bill."

Mr. LODGE. We certainly do not alter the situation. We are under the treaty to-day. If we adopt that amendment, we remain under the treaty. There is no change. The change is in that provision of the House bill which is new law. The adoption of that does not alter the condition. We are under the treaty to-day. If that bill should fail here in the Senate, it would be just the same in result as if that amendment were adopted. It would not alter the situation.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I should like to suggest to the Senator from Massachusetts that the treaty to which the Senator from Oregon refers is existing now.

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. And existing with the gentlemen's agreement with Japan. Our only remedy is either to abrogate the treaty or to have it amended so as to leave out the favored-nation clause, or to adopt the proposed amendment, which on our part, in the opinion of the committee, would be tantamount to amending the Japanese treaty. Now, the Japanese Government says: "We will in effect abrogate the favored-nation clause so far as our citizens are concerned, provided you will not officially and openly put it that way."

Mr. LODGE. If I may repeat what I said, Mr. President, the treaty does not mention the gentlemen's agreement. It is not part of the treaty. The Senator from California admits that Japan has lived up to that agreement. If she ceased to live up to that agreement, then in six months we could terminate this treaty and pass any legislation we choose.

My point, however, is that this amendment does not alter the situation as it exists to-day at all. If the treaty with Japan lets down the bars, they are down now. This amendment does not change it in any respect; but that treaty proceeds and is framed on the theory that the gentlemen's agreement, the passport amendment of our law, will be maintained. As long as it is maintained we have a practical exclusion. When they cease to maintain it we can, under the treaty, terminate the treaty and make any laws we choose; but this amendment does not alter the situation at all.

At the risk of being wearisome, I repeat, the new legislation is that proposed in the House bill. That does change the situation, but it is not on the statute book. It never has been on the statute book, and it was embodied in this bill for the first time. It was in the bill when it was vetoed. It had passed both Houses of Congress. It is in the bill again to-day and has been stricken out. The provision there about persons not capable of naturalization has been stricken out of the bill for the reasons which I have tried to explain.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, both the chairman of the committee and the Senator from Massachusetts either misunderstand the effect of the provision in the House bill or they are misconstruing it. That provision in the bill does not interfere with this gentlemen's agreement at all. It preserves it in force.

Mr. LODGE. It does not; that is perfectly true. It preserves it in force in so many words. My point was that it changed existing law. It is new legislation, and it would have the effect that if the Japanese Government rescinded the gentlemen's agreement they would all be excluded under that law if it became law.

Mr. WORKS. And so they should be, if that agreement is abrogated. That is what I am contending for.

Mr. LODGE. But that could be done in six months under the terms of the treaty.

Mr. WORKS. Oh, well, it is not necessary that we should wait six months to do it.

Mr. BRADY. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator from Massachusetts if there is any doubt that the United States could terminate that treaty in six months if this legislation should be passed?

Mr. LODGE. Not the slightest. It does not affect the treaty at all.

Mr. WORKS. We could enact this statute now, which would have that effect immediately, if the treaty should be abrogated or in any way set aside. Why not do it now instead of waiting six months after the Japanese Government has violated the agreement?

Mr. LODGE. The view is, Mr. President, that while they are carrying out that agreement in good faith it is not very civil, I will say, on our part to exclude them by a statute just as if they had violated the agreement.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, it does not do any such thing as that.

Mr. LODGE. Why, certainly it does. The moment you pass the House bill as it stands the gentlemen's agreement is a dead letter.

Mr. WORKS. If the House bill stands, the contract we have made with Japan is respected and preserved in force; and that provision of the bill would only take effect in case that agreement were either abrogated or violated by Japan. Now, what objection can there be to that?

Mr. LODGE. It excludes them whether there is a gentlemen's agreement or not.

Mr. WORKS. It does not exclude them so long as the gentlemen's agreement is in force.

Mr. LODGE. The gentlemen's agreement excludes them.

Mr. WORKS. The gentlemen's agreement does not exclude them. It prescribes that the Japanese Government shall determine who shall come to this country.

Mr. LODGE. Yes; certainly.

Mr. WORKS. It does not exclude them.

Mr. LODGE. But in practice it excludes them.

Mr. WORKS. Well, if it is carried out, and so long as it is, it does.

Mr. LODGE. It does, in practice, exclude them.

Mr. WORKS. Therefore that agreement is preserved in force; and so long as that is done this provision does not take effect, by the language of the House bill. The trouble about it is that we are proposing now to legislate in such a way as to leave the door open, after that gentlemen's agreement is set aside in any way, to the immigration of Japanese without any limitation whatever. I do not think that door ought to be left open.

Mr. LODGE. The treaty leaves it open.

Mr. WORKS. That may be.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, it occurs to me that this discussion is involving our treaty rights with friendly nations, and it does seem to me it would be more in keeping with what has been the practice of the Senate if the discussion were behind closed doors. Therefore, I move that the doors of the Senate be closed for the purpose of discussing this branch of the pending bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is the motion seconded?

Mr. SAULSBURY. I second the motion.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Sergeant at Arms will clear the galleries and close the doors.

The Senate thereupon proceeded to deliberate with closed doors. After one hour and a half the doors were reopened.

CORRUPT PRACTICES.

While the doors were closed,

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JAMES in the chair). The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the bill (H. R. 15842) to revise, amend, and codify the laws relating to publicity of contributions and expenditures made for the purpose of influencing the nomination and election of candidates for the offices of Senator and Representative in the Congress of the United States, extending the same to candidates for nomination and election to the offices of President and Vice President of the United States, limiting the amount which may be expended, providing for the publicity of campaign expenses, and for other purposes.

Mr. OWEN. I ask that the bill be temporarily laid aside.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

REGULATION OF IMMIGRATION.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10384) to regulate the immigration of aliens to, and the residence of aliens in, the United States.

After the doors were reopened,

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Gronna	Overman	Smith, Ga.
Bankhead	Harding	Owen	Smith, Mich.
Beckham	Hitchcock	Page	Smith, S. C.
Borah	Hollis	Phelan	Smoot
Brady	Hughes	Pittman	Sutherland
Brandegee	Husting	Poindexter	Thompson
Chamberlain	James	Pomerene	Tillman
Clapp	Johnson, Me.	Reed	Townsend
Clark	Jones	Robinson	Underwood
Culberson	Kenyon	Saulsbury	Vardaman
Cummins	Kirby	Shafroth	Walsh
Curtis	Lee, Md.	Sheppard	Warren
Dillingham	McCumber	Sherman	Watson
du Pont	McLean	Shields	Weeks
Gallinger	Martin, Va.	Simmons	Works
Gore	Martine, N. J.	Smith, Ariz.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. THOMAS] is detained from the Senate on official business.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. My colleague [Mr. LANE] is unavoidably absent from the Senate to-day on business.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence, on account of illness, of the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL] and the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BROUSSARD].

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I desire to announce the absence of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS], who is detained from the Senate on account of illness.

Mr. CURTIS. I was requested to announce the absence of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING], and the Senator from Maine [Mr. FERNALD] on business of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty-three Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The question is on concurring in the amendment on page 7, upon which the yeas and nays were ordered while the doors were closed.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I regard it unfortunate that this bill should have been taken up and a vote forced under existing conditions. Here is an amendment that certainly very gravely affects our treaty rights and very seriously concerns that part of the country which has been threatened with an immigration invasion from certain countries—from one country in particular, which I will not name in open debate. There is a serious difference of opinion among Senators as to the correct construction of the language of that amendment. There ought to be sufficient time allowed before a vote is taken, so that all Members may have the opportunity to carefully analyze the language.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. REED. I do.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Will the Senator from Missouri allow me to call his attention to the fact that during the closing days of the last session in several caucuses by the majority it was clearly and definitely understood that this bill would be the first bill called up and considered at the convening of this session of Congress? Senators had notice of that fact from the time we adjourned until now.

I also gave notice on last Tuesday of my intention to move to take up the bill, and that I would do so in accordance with the pledge and understanding on both sides of the Chamber, and I have taken occasion to ascertain if that was the understanding. All of us know that that was our agreement; that immediately upon the reconvening of Congress this bill would be brought up and finally disposed of; in fact, that it would be the first one brought up and disposed of. Simply in accordance with that understanding I have taken the action which I have.

Mr. REED. Oh, Mr. President, nothing I have said can be construed by the Senator from South Carolina as any criticism of his conduct in pressing the bill for attention; but it is nevertheless true that the majority of Senators have not given to the particular language of this amendment any thorough consideration or study. Having read it here on the floor of the Senate two or three times, I confess that I am not satisfied as to its meaning. It seems to me there is a great question involved here that ought to be very thoughtfully considered, and I am not willing to take any man's ipse dixit, no matter how much I may respect him or his opinion, when his conclusions concern so grave a matter. Without criticizing anyone, I wish to say there has seemed to be an impatience about driving this bill on that is not usually manifested.

I want to ask the chairman of the committee now to tell me whether the geographical line that is described in the amendment, which I now read, "situate south of the twentieth parallel of latitude north, west of the one hundred and sixtieth meridian of longitude east from Greenwich, and north of the tenth parallel of latitude south," does or does not embrace Africa?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. It does not embrace Africa.

Mr. REED. Well, why is Africa excepted from the exclusion?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. In the first place, it would almost be a dead letter to exclude Africa, because there is no immigration now coming from there; and, in the next place, because there would have to be a considerable number of exceptions if the line were extended to include Africa. A reference to the statistics will show that perhaps for the last 45 or 50 years the number of Africans coming into this country has been practically negligible. I say the statistics will show that; but it is perfectly within the powers of the Senate to run the lines farther on, to make them continuous, if the Senate sees fit to say that no immigrants of African descent shall come to our shores.

Mr. REED. I understood the Senator from South Carolina to state that he will accept an amendment of that kind, but I should have to have the map before me, I think, to frame it.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, if the Senator from Missouri will allow me, I desire to say that I do not think, to reach the point he has in view, a reference to any geographical lines is necessary. If he will glance at the map he will see it would include considerable territory. It would be very awkward to put the necessary descriptive language in the bill when a few words would accomplish what he desires. What we desired to avoid was the naming of all the little islands in the archipelago running along the Asiatic coast and to do what the Senate and the House thought was the proper thing, merely to draw certain geographical lines and to say that none within those lines should come. If the Senator from Missouri will allow me to say so, the present language splendidly fits the occasion and excludes those whom it is desired to exclude without any burdensome language or any invidious distinctions. It fits very nicely, with the exception to which attention has been called, and which can be very easily remedied in conference.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, it may "splendidly fit" the notions of the committee, but nevertheless the language of the amendment does not exclude the natives of Africa. I can see no common sense in a proposition which denies to the inhabitants of Asia the right to land in America and opens the door to all of the inhabitants of Africa. There is only one reason that can be assigned, which is that there are some of the former inhabitants of Africa who now live in this country and who vote. There is not a man on the floor of the Senate who dares make the public assertion that from the standpoint of citizenship the people of Asia are not fully equal to the inhabitants of Africa.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, I will suggest, if the Senator will pardon me, that the natives of both continents should be excluded. I do not think the inhabitants of either are fit for citizenship in this Republic. And I say this not in a spirit of hostility to the black man, or the yellow man, but for the preservation of the purity of the white race in America and the conservation of the white man's civilization, which in turn will redound to the good of all the races of the world.

Mr. REED. That is exactly my opinion, and I move, Mr. President, to amend the amendment by inserting after the word "of," in line 11, page 7, the words "Africa or of," so that the clause will read:

Unless otherwise provided for by existing treaties, persons who are natives of Africa or of islands not possessed by the United States adjacent to the continent of Asia.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SIMMONS in the chair). Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. REED. Certainly.

Mr. VARDAMAN. If the Senator will permit me to interrupt him further, I will suggest that when you eliminate all of Africa you include the English and Dutch and German citizens of that country. Why not just state the races to be eliminated? That is what is wanted, and that, too, without equivocation or tergiversation. It is a question of race rather than a problem in geography.

Mr. REED. Those to whom the Senator from Mississippi refers are not natives of Africa.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Oh, yes; they live there and a great many of them were born there. A part of that continent constitutes a very fine section of the globe.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. REED. I do.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will ask the Senator if he has any data which show to what extent immigration is reaching this country from Africa?

Mr. REED. At the present time?

Mr. GALLINGER. At the present time or during the past 10 years.

Mr. REED. I have not any in my immediate possession; I have seen the figure; it is not large.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is very small, is it not?

Mr. REED. Yes, sir.

Mr. GALLINGER. Negligible, as a matter of fact?

Mr. REED. I hardly think that; but is that the test? If the immigration is small, then there will be a less number of people to complain of a law of exclusion.

Mr. GALLINGER. I would not say that is the test. I think I understand the test the Senator is advocating, and I will take pleasure in voting against it.

Mr. REED. I do not know whether the Senator understands the test that I am advocating. Let me state it to him. I am not including Africa because of any prejudice that I have against any particular race of men. I have no prejudice—and I take it that the committee had no prejudice—against the people who are from Asia and from certain adjacent islands, whom they do undertake to exclude. The reason for the action of the committee is, I believe, exactly the same as the reason I have in offering this amendment. I think the time has come when we ought to keep our country from being filled up with people who are not capable of becoming first-class citizens of the United States; people who, by birth, by environment, by disposition, or by dense ignorance, are not qualified to perform the duties of citizenship.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to interrupt him further?

Mr. REED. I will.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have not recently read this bill; but if I recollect its provisions correctly, the Russian Jew is given a preference in this bill; he does not need even to submit himself to the educational test? Is he an especially desirable citizen?

Mr. REED. I shall be very glad to answer that question. First, however, I think the Senator has his facts wrong. I do not think there is any preference given to the Russian Jew, unless it is claimed that some exception might apply to him more than to others.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes; that is right.

Mr. REED. Because there is more of that race perhaps in a particular situation than there may be of another. But I answer the Senator with great frankness, that the Russian Jew comes from a race and a blood that has been civilized for thousands of years. He springs from a race that gave us our religion and the fundamentals of every one of our laws. He comes from a race that has never been permitted at any time in history to manage its own affairs in any spot of the earth that it has not set up a civilized government in which every one of the great fundamentals necessary to a high civilization has been recognized. The Russian Jew who has come to this country, I am ashamed to say, has sent his children to the public schools to a greater extent than have the native-born population. The figures demonstrate that, and I produced them here in the debate a few months ago.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, once more may I interrupt the Senator?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. REED. I do.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Russian Jew does not send his children to the public schools in any greater proportion than the colored man does when he is given opportunity to do so.

Mr. REED. Oh, yes; vastly greater. The Russian Jew who has come to this country has furnished a smaller percentage of criminals, I again am ashamed to say, than have our native-born population. The Russian Jew who has come to this country has been industrious, frugal, law-abiding, patriotic; and in all the clamor that has occurred in this country in the last 24 months charging disloyalty among those who reside in our land, no living man, to my knowledge, has charged a Jew with thinking more of a foreign country than of this country; and if such a Jew existed he was an exception to the general rule and a disgrace to his race.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me a query, not along this immediate line, but in connection with his amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. POMERENE in the chair). Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. REED. I do.

Mr. CLARK. Has the Senator considered that from Africa, if any immigration should come, it would be perhaps the natives of Africa who are the descendants of Europeans—that is, German, English, Dutch, or Portuguese? It seems to me that that strain would be more apt to immigrate than would the aborigines of the Continent. Does the Senator contemplate shutting up our ports against the entrance of that class of immigrants, and would not his amendment have that effect?

Mr. REED. It would have that effect; and that is the trouble we encounter when we take up a measure in the way we are now treating with this bill. I asked the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] to let the bill lie over until to-morrow, so that some amendments could be prepared. I freely say that I should like to have this amendment so phrased that it would not exclude the Germans, the English, the French, the Portuguese, or other races that are not indigenous to Africa but who are emigrants living in Africa.

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] asked me whether it was not true that the Russian Jew does not send his children to school to any greater extent than the African sends his children to school. Mr. President, I will have to answer that the Senator is in error in the thought that is suggested by his question. It is notoriously true that the degree of illiteracy among the colored people in this country far exceeds the degree of illiteracy among the whites. That is true of the younger generation and it is true in those States where the public schools have been as open to the colored children as they have been to the white children. The figures, the statistics, prove this beyond peradventure of doubt, beyond a shadow of cavil.

I did not offer this amendment for the purpose of raising the old black and white issue in our country. It is claimed here, however, that we are making a good-faith effort to protect the citizenship of our country against an influx of undesirables. If that is true, it seems to me that every effort ought to be made to keep out of this country all people who are not capable of thorough amalgamation into the life of our people and who are not capable of being brought into thorough sympathy with our laws and our institutions. I am prepared to go as far as any man in the Senate to stop a movement—which has gone too far—that has allowed to come to our shores many people who do not add to the general average of American citizenship; but if we are to exclude the Asiatic, which is the proposition brought forward by the committee, then by what line of reasoning are we to admit the African? Every Asiatic nation has had its civilization, some of them older than ours, and from some of those countries, the inhabitants of which will be excluded by the terms of this amendment, we have gained many of the great precepts of our civilization.

In many of these countries the inhabitants of which are to be excluded wonderful architecture still stands to manifest the genius of the past. In many of the countries, whose inhabitants we propose to exclude, there have existed wonderful governments and wonderful men. But if you turn to Africa, the country you do not propose to include in the exclusion, you can not find a single civilization except at the northern extremities; and those civilizations have died centuries ago, and the races that created them have disappeared. The great body of the African race has never developed a civilization of any kind. There is no civilization there now, and never has been.

I do not know upon what theory men proceed who say: "We will go into Asia and exclude the Asiatics, and then we will hold our arms open to the Africans." Is there any good faith back of this measure? Is there any patriotism back of it? Is it really intended to protect our people and our country from undesirables? If so, let us exclude all undesirables.

It is true the amendment I have offered ought to be recast so as not to exclude men who are descendants of European races. I shall write the amendment in that form, so that it shall read: "Not, however, including Europeans or the descendants of Europeans who have emigrated to Africa"; I desire to discuss the amendment as I shall so perfect it. Now, why not exclude the undesirable races of Africa?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me, I think it is only fair that the Senate should have the benefit of the statistics gathered by the committee. It is necessary in justification of the point raised by the Senator from Missouri.

In 95 years the total immigration to this country from Africa was 14,279. The total immigration from Europe was 29,002,796. The total immigration from Asia was 721,735. The percentage of illiteracy—for there is a clause in this bill raising illiteracy as a bar, declaring that the immigrants must speak and write certain languages—the percentage of illiteracy from Africa is 83.

The number of immigrants that have come to this country from Africa in 95 years—14,000—is, as has been said, almost negligible. If the literacy test is adopted in this bill, then it might be fair to say that 83 per cent of those that will yet come here will be excluded by virtue of their illiteracy. That means that 83 per cent of those that came were illiterate. We have no figures that enable us to know the percentage of illiteracy in Africa. Eighty-three per cent of the 14,000 that have already come here were illiterate. If you apply your illiteracy test and cut out 83 per cent, I do not think any very drastic legislation will be necessary to exclude them entirely. Now, I am not saying and I do not want the Senate to understand that I would not vote—and I am going to vote—to exclude alien races that can not, as the Senator from Missouri says, amalgamate with and help and add to the general personnel of the American people.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me, his argument is that only a small number of people from Africa have emigrated to the United States, and that a large percentage of those who have emigrated are illiterates, and consequently that there is no necessity for including Africa in the bill, because so few people would come from that country.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. The Senator misunderstood one word. I do not want to use the expression that there is no necessity. It seemed to the committee that if we were going to put into full force and operation the illiteracy test, in view of the extremely small number that came and the high rate of illiteracy, we practically had prohibition right there, without trying to encumber it with the very difficulty that he finds himself confronted with—namely, that all through Africa there are to-day natives of good white people whom he would be glad to welcome here if they could pass the other requirements.

Mr. REED. The Senator, after the use of many words, really gets to an affirmation of what I just stated. It amounts to this: The Senator thinks there is very little reason to include Africa among the countries which are to be prohibited from sending their people here, because there has been up to this time only a small immigration, and because a large part of that immigration has been illiterate, and therefore will be included within the prohibition of this bill. That goes to the question of degree and not to the question of principle. As for the language of my amendment, it is not difficult to perfect it if I can be permitted to have a few minutes in which to write it out. I now desire to ask the Senator what immigration there has been from the islands that are included within the prohibited or proscribed district.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. The tables that I have hardly give that information accurately. We have China, Japan, India, Turkey in Asia, and other Asia. The total of Asia includes all the islands as well. Perhaps the Senator would like the figure just for Asia itself, including the Mongolian race—the yellow race.

Mr. REED. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. It is 721,735.

Mr. REED. But that is all Asia and does not answer my question, which was, How many have emigrated from the proscribed islands?

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Missouri permit me to ask the chairman of the committee, the Senator who has charge of the bill, a question?

Mr. REED. Certainly.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Will the Senator explain to me why the bill uses the geographical lines described rather than designating by name the races which it is desired to exclude?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. That has been explained here a great many times. It is because there are quite a number of little nationalities, and as we have not called Japan's name we do not want to call the name of any other nation. We do not want to make any invidious comparisons, so we did not refer to any nation. I reckon I really should not have used the name there.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Oh, I think we might as well be candid. You can not fool anybody. It does not pay to be disingenuous.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Well, you have to, diplomatically. We were not calling any names, and in order to avoid calling any names we did what we wanted to do without calling any.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Really, the purpose of this amendment is to exclude people on account of their race rather than their intellectual acquirements. It is not so much a question of book learning as it is a matter of blood. The best educated negro in the world is not as capable of understanding the genius of American institutions as the average illiterate, sound-minded white man; it is not in the strain of blood.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I suspect the Senator is right.

Mr. VARDAMAN. That is what I thought. Mr. President, the purpose is very manifest; and I am most heartily in favor of prohibiting, in so far as we can, the immigration into this country of any people, any race, the amalgamation of which with the white race will tend to lower the standard of manhood and womanhood. It is not a question of intellectual acquirements; it is a question of race. I do not think any student of history will deny the fact that that is a very vital question. I think, if I am correctly informed, that the decadence of the civilizations of the past has been in a large measure due to the amalgamation of superior and inferior races. Nothing could be more undesirable in America than the encouragement of the multiplication of the mongrel in this country. I defy anyone to show an instance where a mongrel race has ever maintained very long a stable form of government or preserved an enlightened civilization. I believe every race is capable of governing itself according to its needs, and I am in favor of permitting every other race to govern itself. But I do not want to vitiate the pure Caucasian blood of America with the blood of the darker races of the Orient or the degenerate races of Europe. If I had my way about it, I would not permit any but the Caucasian races to enjoy the privileges of citizenship in America. We have experimented with the black man in politics and found it a disastrous failure.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, glancing at this map on which the line described in the bill is drawn, I find that it includes all of India and parts of Russia. Am I correct in that?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. The Senator is correct.

Mr. REED. In other words, we propose to run a line—and I want the Senator to know this——

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. But just one moment——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SHEPPARD in the chair). Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. REED. I do.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. The Senator seems not to have been present at the executive session when we discussed this map and these lines. There is no disposition on the part of the committee to exclude Russia, and there will be no difficulty about the adjustment of the territory included between the two latitudinal lines, including a part of Russia. There is at present no treaty with Russia. The bill reads, "except as otherwise provided for by treaty"; and, of course, there will be in process of time a treaty that will take care of that very feature. If it does not, this being a Senate amendment, the committee having the bill in charge will certainly not jeopardize this country by prescribing such longitudinal lines as are there now, when the very purpose of drawing those lines is to avoid the difficulty referred to in executive session.

Mr. REED. I am unable to quite follow the reasoning of the Senator, but I want the Senate to understand—and I am going to try to talk loud enough to be heard by all——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Senators will preserve order.

Mr. REED. I want the Senate to understand that this bill as it now stands with the amendments in it excludes about one-half of Russia and denies to the inhabitants of about one-half of Russia the right to come to the United States; and these men who are so tender about some white men who have immigrated into Africa do not hesitate in excluding scores of millions of white men who live in Russia. Now, it seems to me there is a very large-sized bug under this chip and that this amendment ought to be entitled "An amendment to exclude Jews from the United States," because they are Jews. There is no other reason that can be assigned for including nearly one-half of Russia save that which is implied in the remark of the Senator from New Hampshire, who inquired whether I really thought that a Jew was as desirable a citizen as a colored man from Africa.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. REED. I do.

Mr. GALLINGER. I qualified it by saying "a Russian Jew."

Mr. REED. A Russian Jew—yes; a poor fellow who has worn the chains of an arbitrary Government, who has been denied the opportunities of school life, who has been herded within the pale, who has been dragged to Siberia in shackles, who has endured the horrors of the Siberian mines, whose back has been cut in stripes by the cruel whips of brutal masters, and who has lifted his eyes every morning to the same God to whom the Senator prays and has asked for deliverance. Let it be known now and understood that the Senate committee has brought in an amendment that proposes to exclude people because they have Jewish blood in their veins, and therefore that they have included one-half of the Russian Empire.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri further yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. REED. I do.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator will yield just one moment further, I called attention to the fact that these men were given a preference in this bill; that all other classes that were admitted had to undergo the literacy test, but these people, because they are supposed to have been persecuted, are permitted to come in without submitting themselves to that test. That was the particular point I made in the matter, and I do not think it ought to remain in the bill. That is my judgment.

Mr. REED. And the particular point I am making is that, notwithstanding that provision, which the Senator claims is favorable to the admission of the Jew, the provision of the bill I am now discussing will absolutely bar from our shores every Jew who comes from any place in Russia between the fiftieth and one hundred and twentieth meridian of longitude east from Greenwich. That vast area, over 2,000 miles in width, stretches from the south line of Russia to the Arctic Circle, and embraces all of central Russia and fully one-half of the entire territory of the Russian Empire.

I read the language of the bill. It is provided that no emigrants shall be admitted to the United States who shall come from the "islands not possessed by the United States adjacent to the Continent of Asia, situate south of the twentieth parallel of latitude north, west of the one hundred and sixtieth meridian of longitude east from Greenwich, and north of the tenth parallel of latitude south, or who are natives of any country, province, or dependency situate on the Continent of Asia west of the one hundred and tenth meridian of longitude east from Greenwich and east of the fiftieth meridian of longitude east from Greenwich, except that portion of said territory situate between the fiftieth and the sixty-fourth meridians of longitude east from Greenwich and the twenty-fourth and thirty-eighth parallels of latitude north."

Without the map the language of the bill is meaningless, but with the map which is before me I am able to state that the bill excludes all those who shall emigrate from that great interior of Russia, which stretches from a line drawn north from the Caspian Sea to the Arctic regions to a line drawn north from Lake Baikal. The people of that vast domain are absolutely barred from entering the United States.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. REED. I do.

Mr. WORKS. I should like to ask the Senator whether he understands that the territory he is talking about is occupied exclusively by Jews?

Mr. REED. No, sir.

Mr. WORKS. Are there no other people living there?

Mr. REED. There are other people living there. There are Russians living there. There are Jews living there. There are Polanders living there, as has been suggested by my friend the Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH]. There are doubtless many other races of men living there. But, to put it in a word, it is proposed by this bill to say that the inhabitants of fully one-half of the Russian Empire are barred from coming into this country. No matter what their intellectual attainments, no matter what their moral standards, no matter what their degree of good citizenship may be, they are excluded. Now, why did you not exclude the whole of Russia?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. REED. I do.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. For the simple reason that in the case of the territory included in these lines, as those who are familiar with it and who are charged with cooperating with your committee have declared, the vast majority of the inhabitants are of the very races that we are seeking to exclude in the islands contiguous to the coast of Asia. If the Senator is better informed than I, as a matter of course this has no weight with him; but the information received by the committee was that even were it to stand after we shall have made a treaty with Russia the territory excluded is almost entirely populated by descendants of the Mongolian race.

Mr. REED. What does the Senator mean by saying "even if it should stand after we have made a treaty"? Is his argument, then, that we shall exclude these people by law and shall hereafter admit them by diplomacy, to adopt the phrase of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH]? That is a singular position to take. If we ought to exclude them by law, then we ought to exclude them by treaty. The evil does not exist in the rule under which they are permitted to come, but in the fact of their coming, if there be an evil.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri further yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. REED. I do.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. The Senator was not present in executive session.

Mr. REED. Oh, yes, I was.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Then the Senator missed the point I will bring out now, if it can be said in the open here—that there was and is great difficulty in drawing the line as we had hoped to draw it without the necessity of calling any names. The department drew these lines carefully in regard to the object the Senate had; and changing them will force us largely into the very difficulty that we were seeking to avoid, which was excluding people by calling names.

Now, this is the last I am going to say on this subject. No man shall charge the committee, or me as chairman of it, with trying to discriminate invidiously against the Jews or any worthy citizen. All that we had hoped to do was to try to avoid racial complications as nearly as we could without running into other national complications. That is what we were trying to do. We did our best. Now, it does not lie at the door of the committee nor of the State Department, who collaborated with us, and the other departments, that we have come here and insidiously tried to legislate in a sinister manner in favor of a citizen that might be desirable. We have, as nearly as we were able, drawn these geographical lines to meet the expression of the wish of the House and the Senate and the people of America; and I do not know that we have, except in the imagination of the Senator from Missouri, violated the intent and purpose of the American people in this.

The committee has done what it conceived to be its duty by and with the advice of those charged with the execution and administration of this law. If there is any possible way by which, without running into other difficulties that we consider very grave, we can exactly meet the necessity of dealing in this bill with certain people whom we may wish to come in, we will do it.

The committee has not been trying to force the poor, lacerated Jew out of America. It does not want to do anything to add to his burdens. The fact is that we have so rearranged certain phraseology of the bill as to meet the objection of those who said that it would fall heaviest upon him, namely, in the case of certain discriminations by a nation on account of religion and on account of race. Unless a man is proven to be guilty of a felony, he is not excluded under that peculiar provision of the bill. We did everything we could to keep the bill in a rational and inoffensive form to those who would have a right to be offended. We have done everything we could to make this country an asylum for the oppressed, provided the oppressed are worthy to come to this country or any country and add to its citizenship.

Mr. REED. Well, Mr. President, of course it is a sort of crime to question anything that a committee does in the Senate, particularly if it be the Committee on Immigration. I do not know who advised the committee, and I do not care who advised them. I know that the people of the Mongolian races the Senator speaks of are not all included within the lines the committee draws through Russia, but that they exist as well outside of those.

I can not understand either why the line should be drawn through China, including a part of China in the excluded district and leaving a part of China out of the excluded district. About the same race of people, speaking generally, inhabit all parts of China. They are two races, the original Chinaman and his conqueror, the Manchu; and simply because this committee has seen fit to take a pen and draw two lines on a map and say within that boundary nobody shall come and outside of that boundary everybody shall come if he can pass a literacy test and the health test is no reason why the Senate should follow the particular lines drawn by the committee.

Now, I want Senators to understand, if they can see this map [exhibiting], that it is proposed to exclude every human being, whether he is yellow or white, whether his blood is Jewish or whether it is what is commonly termed Russian, or whether it be Polish, or whether it be a Germanic strain, or any other strain. It is proposed to exclude every individual who resides between that line drawn down through the westerly part of Russia [indicating] and that line drawn down through the easterly part of Russia [indicating] from coming to the United States. As I judge, from my eye, the inhabitants of over one-half of Russia are to be cut off from coming to the United States and those of the rest of the territory of Russia are to be admitted. The people of this eastern part, which embraces eastern Siberia, are to be permitted to come to the United States, but 2,000 miles west of that, toward the more civilized parts of Russia, they are to be excluded.

Now, that may be logical, but I fail to grasp the logic. If we want to exclude the Tartar race, let us exclude it. If we want to exclude the Mongolian, let us exclude him. If we want to exclude the African, let us be big enough to exclude him. But in this territory that is cut out by the bill there are many races and kindreds of men. There are, I have no doubt, men within that territory of the highest intellectual attainments, men of the pure white blood. Why, then, exclude them? Why not face this matter as men and pass a bill that will really protect the citizenship of the United States?

The Senator from South Carolina tells us that he has been "advised by the State Department and others." Will the Senator tell me how many Jews reside within the excluded area in Russia? How many Polanders? How many Swedes and Norwegians who have migrated there or are the descendants of Scandinavian immigrants? How many Germans are there? Of what races is the population composed?

It seems to me that this is a strange way to proceed. If the committee had said, "We propose to exclude all Russians," it might have been logical, whether it was good judgment or not, but to arbitrarily draw a line through a map and say the man who lives on the right side of that line can not come and the man who lives on the left side can, regardless of all other considerations, it seems to me is neither logical nor, in any way, sensible. And the committee is here absolutely without any figures to tell us what these people are who are within the excluded district.

That leads me to observe, Mr. President, what I have felt like saying for a good while. This sovereign Nation has the right to say who shall and who shall not come within its borders, either to abide temporarily or permanently. If we do not possess that attribute of sovereignty, then we have sunk to a point so low that we are beneath the level of contempt. If we can not protect ourselves, if we can not secure our land against an invasion by those who are unfitted for American citizenship, then we have no right to call ourselves an independent Nation.

So far as I am concerned, I do not propose to subordinate the pride of America for the pride of any other nation on the earth. I do not intend to surrender the sovereign prerogatives of the United States of America to the sensitiveness or the pride of some other nation, especially when the question involves the protection of our soil and the preserving of the character of our civilization. I have no fear of giving offense, because there is no just cause for offense. Every nation has from time immemorial possessed the right to determine the class of people who shall live within its borders. It has been a right asserted by the small as well as by the great nations of the earth. It is a right that is peculiarly essential to a government like ours which rests upon the will of the people. If that will be not intelligent and patriotic, the government of necessity must fall.

I have no fear of giving offense, because there will be no just cause for offense; but if any nation, great or small, shall see fit to take offense because the United States of America proposes to protect its own land, then, while desiring to remain at peace and in amity and good will with all the nations of the earth, I would on such a question unhesitatingly register my vote in favor of sustaining the dignity and majesty of my own country.

This bill has reached an unfortunate stage. I have observed in the years that I have been in the Senate that the Senate will listen with attention the first day or so to a bill which is before it, but after a while Senators grow weary; and it is at such a time as that that bills are put through without full consideration by the Senate. We come to regard the subject as having been fully gone over and we get busy with other matters and cease to give close attention.

Reading this amendment as I did and not following it on the map, I assumed that it applied to the inhabitants of a few scattered islands in the Indian Ocean. Following it upon the map I find that it excludes from entrance into the United States the inhabitants of about one-quarter of the Asiatic continent, and that it does not exclude about one-third of the Chinese Empire.

Now, I am wondering why the committee could not have run the line around China. China has no feelings to be hurt. They may be included in our treaty, but they are not included in this bill.

I call the attention of the Senate to the line run down through China leaving outside of it about one-third of the Chinese Empire. Surely the line ought to be changed to include all of China, unless some one now is getting so tender about the rights of those nations which have been going into the western part of China and establishing themselves by fire and sword.

I want the Senators who have come in while I have been speaking to understand that the bill proposes to exclude every human being who lives between these two lines drawn through the map I hold in my hand, and that included within them is about one-half of the Russian Empire. It excludes these men regardless of their race, regardless of their intelligence, regardless of their morals, regardless of their patriotism. It cuts them out absolutely, because, forsooth, the committee took pen in hand and drew two ink lines down through that map.

I want the Senate to understand that the committee does not pretend to know how many Polanders it will exclude, how many Jews will be excluded, how many men of German or Swedish or Norwegian or other descent will be excluded, how many Russians will be excluded. The committee, with serene self-assurance, simply proposes to cut off about one-half of the Russian Empire because it feels so inclined. A few millions of human beings, more or less, do not bother the committee.

I want the Senate to understand that when you pass beyond these lines traced by the magic pen of the committee you enter into eastern Siberia—all of farthest Siberia is open—and under the wise mandate of the committee anybody living there can come, no matter what his race or what his blood, if he can pass a literacy test. Such is the amendment now before the Senate. I undertake to say that until within the last few minutes very few Members of the Senate knew what the amendment accomplishes, and there are yet many who do not know what the amendment means.

Mr. NORRIS. How far south does the line go?

Mr. REED. It goes south to the tenth degree of latitude. It goes through the Indian Ocean to a line that, drawn east and west, runs just north of Australia. It extends to the east, and embraces the Philippine Islands. The Philippines are, however, excepted from the terms of the bill, the Filipinos being permitted by express provision to come to this country.

Mr. President, that brings up another matter. We start with the proposition that we want to protect our country against an influx of undesirables. That is a highly patriotic motive. It is one I am in hearty accord with. I have never been against restricting undesirable foreign immigration. I have been against denying a foreigner the right of sanctuary simply because he has been so unfortunate as to have been denied the opportunity of an education. I will go as far as he who goes farthest to keep out of this country every man who is not fitted for citizenship in the country, whatever his race, his color, or his creed. If we are to apply that rule, then why should we open our doors to the Philippine Islanders? Why should we make it so that men can go to the Philippine Islands and contract for vast numbers of Philippine Islanders and transport them to the Sandwich Islands to take the place of the labor there? Why should we make it so that these Filipinos can come to the United States and in the United States take the places of American workmen?

I have not the slightest hesitation in charging that the Philippine Islander is not morally or intellectually or physically the equal of the Chinaman. We propose to give those islands their independence; we are taking steps in that direction whether we do or do not; what reason is there to open our doors to the Filipino and close them to the Chinaman, open them to the Filipino and close them to the white races of Russia?

Upon what principle is this bill constructed? What reason is there, if we are to protect our shores, for closing the door in the faces of white races of men and opening them to a people that is not a race because it is a conglomeration of many different tribes and peoples and races.

What is the reason, in all good conscience and common sense, in excluding the people of all the contiguous islands, who in blood and disposition and everything else are similar to the Filipinos, and then admitting the Filipino? What is the reason that can be assigned, keeping always in mind that we propose to protect our lands from undesirables? Why should we exclude the Polander, who comes of a proud race with a great history, because that Polander happens to have been born between the two arbitrary lines drawn on this map, and admit the Philippine Islander? If you are excluding the Mongolian race in Russia, if that is your object and purpose, why admit the Philippine Islander, who does not even rise to a point where he can claim that he belongs to any pure race of any kind?

It seems to me this bill ought to go back to the committee, and that the committee ought to exclude undesirables by a proper test. So far as I am concerned, I will gladly vote for a bill that excludes from the United States every man who is not of a pure white blood. I apply that to the yellow race and the brown race and the black race, and I apply it to them not because I hate these races, not because I have any enmity in my heart toward them, but because this civilization we have built up is a civilization peculiar to the race to which we belong.

You can take a hundred white men and shipwreck them on an island where there is no form of government or authority, and they will establish a civilization and a government essentially similar to that which we live under or essentially similar to that of England or of Germany, and they will do it within 30 days' time and will live under it. You can take the same hundred men and you can send them to any one of the countries I have named; they will intermarry with the inhabitants of the land, and they will support that kind of law and order and society which we know in all its great essentials.

Now, without reflecting in the least upon these other races of men, if you were to shipwreck a hundred Chinamen upon an island they would set up a government similar to the Government of China. They would establish a home life similar to the home life of China. They would reproduce the customs of their country, and do it for the plain reason that those customs and those forms of government are the offspring of their own hearts and brains and exist because the Chinamen wanted to make them that way. He sets up his form of life and government in that way because it is a part of his nature, as much as it is for him to write from right to left instead of from left to right; and he is entitled to his form of government. That form of government and that kind of civilization is not our form of government and is not our civilization, and they will no more mix with our government and our civilization than oil and water can be mixed.

And so it is with these other races. The people of India had a wonderful civilization, but it was their civilization. They are a people divided into castes, a people believing in religions that to us seem strange and fantastic, but to them seem natural. They are a people living according to certain habits. They are as unlike us as is the foliage of the tropics unlike that of the Temperate Zone, and their civilization, their habits of thought can no more be transformed into the habits and thoughts of the people of the Occident than the tropic vegetation can be made to grow at the Arctic Circle. They have a civilization that suits them. And again I say, as I said in the case of Chinamen, the religion which they believe, the castes which they acknowledge, the family life which they employ, all exist in their country because it was the natural flower and fruitage of their hearts and souls. Accordingly as long as they have the same minds and the same souls they will cling to that type and kind of civilization. They can no more appreciate a government like ours, or a civilization such as ours, than we can appreciate theirs. They can no more transform themselves into creatures of the Occident than we can make ourselves into children of the Orient.

The same line of argument can be presented now with reference to these inhabitants of the islands of the sea and with reference to the natives of Africa. The native of Africa has sat under a tree content to live off of its fruit, content to occasionally go upon maurauding expeditions, content to set up here and there a sort of barbarous scheme of government, tribal in its nature, content to hunt heads, and in some cases to feed upon human flesh. That is so of the natives of some of the islands of the sea, but that is the method of life they want; it is a part of their nature; it wells up from their hearts. It is as instinctive for them to go upon a marauding expedition as it is for the Anglo-Saxon to build a courthouse and elect a judge. You can not change them; at least, if you do change them, it must be through the course of centuries. You can not change any of these races suddenly. You can set good examples, and you can teach by example, but you can not speedily change the impulses of hearts or the shape of heads.

I am speaking of this question now from the standpoint of American citizenship. This country is great in direct proportion to the greatness of its citizens. The temple of human liberty is supported by myriad pillars; each pillar is an individual man; and as the individual pillar is strong, so is the temple of liberty secure. Therefore, when it is proposed to determine who shall and who shall not come to this country, the touchstone is not the amount of wealth the man may possess; it is not the amount of learning he may have acquired; it is not the titles or the honors he may have gained; the questions are, Does there burn in his bosom a deathless love of liberty? Does his soul long for freedom? Is he willing to devote himself to the maintenance of a government of law? Will he help us to sustain a republic of equality? Is he made of that kind of metal which will cause him in defense of our country to lay his property, his sacred honor, and his life upon its sacred altar? If you will find a man of that kind, he will make a good American citizen, it does not make any difference, sir, whether his ancestors long ago stood with Joshua at the fall of Jericho or whether they long ago established or helped to establish one of the mighty nations of Europe. But it makes every difference whether by instinct he clings to those great fundamentals upon which our civilization rests—the home, the schoolhouse, the courts of law, justice, and liberty.

Now, I protest—protest for the most part to empty benches; protest for the most part to men who do not know the terms of this amendment, and who will vote upon it without knowing; protest for the most part to men who have closed their ears—that there is neither logic nor sense in a bill that proposes to arbitrarily draw two lines through a great kingdom and to exclude those within those two lines and admit those who are without the two lines; that proposes to exclude people from this country by parallels, by latitude, and by longitude; that makes the test where a man was born and not how he was born; that determines a man's qualifications for citizenship by geography; that settles the question of morals by the red line of a map; and which ascertains an individual's patriotism by longitude and latitude.

Look at the map [exhibiting]. If you were born 6 inches on the farther side of it, and are a philosopher and a saint, you can not come to the United States; but if you were born on the hither side, if you have a smattering of education, you can come, no matter though every drop of blood in your veins may have been drawn from an ancestry that never did an honest act in all their course back to Adam. All Africa can come in; it is not excluded. The Barbary pirate is not within the excluded area. Turks can come in; the "unspeakable Turk" has no line of exclusion drawn about him. These gentlemen who massacred Christians and burnt their temples a thousand years ago, and who within the last few months have shown that they have bred true by ravishing, torturing, and burning the Armenian Christians, they are not excluded; they can come here with the blood of murder on their swords, pose as gallant soldiers, pass a literacy test, and come in. The Russian soldier who was born on that side of the line [indicating], and who has spent his life driving back into the midnight of the Siberian mines the unfortunate creatures whom tyranny had sentenced to infernal torture, can come in; but the savant, the poet, the orator, the statesman, the writer, born anywhere in the 2,000-mile stretch between those two lines the committee draws through Russia can not come in. Such is the philosophy of the committee.

Again, if you were born just east of this line [indicating], in farthest Siberia, in darkest Siberia, you can come in; but if you were born just west of this easterly line you can not come in. Truly this is a strange and wonderful thing.

But the committee say there are a good many Tartar races in that part of Russia. I inquired what other races there are, but the committee can not tell us. Neither can they tell us their numbers or the degree of immigration that we may expect. The thing that strikes me as curious and humorous is why they did not reach out and take all of Siberia in; why they cut off a piece of it and left it there as a hallowed spot from which all peoples, nations, races, kindreds, and tongues happening to abide there can emigrate in safety to the United States. I want the Senate to know concerning this matter. All this part of Russia [indicating] is excluded; all this part of China [indicating] is excluded, but all this part of Russia [indicating] is admitted and this part of China which lies east of the committee's easterly line, to wit, about one-third of the Chinese Empire, is not excluded by the bill, although it is excluded under a treaty.

Mr. President, I have directed attention to these incongruities in the hope—perhaps the vain hope—that the Senate will undertake even at this late day to change the structure of this bill so that we will reach the real object that we all, I think, have in mind—the protection of our country from an influx of undesirables from other countries so that good and honest men capable of amalgamation into our life shall not be excluded.

CORRUPT PRACTICES.

Mr. OWEN. I desire to ask permission to make a motion to recommit the unfinished business, the corrupt-practices bill (H. R. 15842) to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, with instructions to report the bill back to the Senate at not later than January 3, 1917. I ask unanimous consent to that effect.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

HARVEY H. YOUNG.

Mr. CUMMINS. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 10049) for the relief of Capt. Harvey H. Young.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the bill.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, or benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers Harvey H. Young, late captain Company C, Ringgold's battalion, Pennsylvania Volunteer Cavalry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been discharged honorably from the military service of the United States: Provided, That other than as set forth above no bounty, pay, pension, or other emolument shall accrue prior to or by reason of the passage of this act.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, the beneficiary of this bill is about 78 years old. His wife is probably upon her deathbed. He has been laboring for more than 50 years under an unjust sentence of a court-martial, rendered under peculiar circumstances during the progress of the Civil War. The evidence submitted to the House committee and also to the Senate committee shows conclusively that he ought to have been exonerated and acquitted of all the charges made against him. I hope that there will be no objection to the passage of the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REGULATION OF IMMIGRATION.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, as I understand, the immigration bill is still before the Senate. If it is not, then I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of that bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from South Carolina.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10384) to regulate the immigration of aliens to, and the residence of aliens in, the United States.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Now, I move that the Senate take a recess until to-morrow at 12 o'clock.

Mr. GALLINGER. Why a recess?

Mr. SMOOT. Morning business will not consume more than 15 minutes, I will say to the Senator from South Carolina.

The VICE PRESIDENT. What time does the Senator fix in his motion for the expiration of the recess?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon to-morrow.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from South Carolina, that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock meridian to-morrow.

Mr. REED. I ask the Senator to make that an adjournment, so that bills can be introduced in the morning hour to-morrow.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from South Carolina.

The motion was rejected.

Mr. REED. I move that the Senate adjourn until 12 o'clock to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 20 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, December 12, 1916, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, December 11, 1916.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

By Thy grace, O God, our Heavenly Father, as revealed in the precepts and glorious example of Thy Son, Jesus Christ, we lift up our hearts to Thee in prayer, that our minds may be illumined and our hearts made strong to meet the duties of life as they unfold themselves hour by hour, day by day; that we may measure up to their requirements and pass on to larger life and nobler service with an approving conscience; in His name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday, December 9, 1916, was read and approved.

LEAVE TO EXTEND REMARKS.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend in the RECORD my remarks on the Coast Guard.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. HICKS] asks unanimous consent to extend in the RECORD his remarks on the subject of the Coast Guard. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting a speech by my colleague, the gentleman from New York, Mr. WILLIAM S. BENNET, on socialism.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by inserting a speech on socialism, made by Hon. WILLIAM S. BENNET, a Member of the House from New York. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering District of Columbia legislation.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering the Indian appropriation bill (H. R. 18453).

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of District of Columbia business, and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STEPHENS] makes a preferential motion, that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to consider the Indian appropriation bill. The vote will be taken first on the motion of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STEPHENS].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky) there were—ayes 69, noes 19.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, pending the announcement of the result of the count, I will ask the gentleman from Texas if he is willing to allow the House to take up—not in Committee of the Whole, but in the House—a little bill that I am sure will provoke no discussion? I know that the bill which I have contemplated taking up—the forum bill—will create a good deal of discussion and probably consume time; but there is one little bill that some colored people desire to have passed, a bill doing away with a cemetery. It is a bill which passed the last House, and which ought to pass, and which will provoke no discussion.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. On the assurance of the gentleman from Kentucky that it will not delay the consideration of the Indian appropriation bill unnecessarily, and if I can do so without forfeiting any rights, I will agree that that bill may be taken up.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. STEPHENS] withholds his motion, and the Chair understands that the gentleman from Kentucky withdraws his point of order.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes.

The SPEAKER. Both are temporarily withdrawn?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes.

CEMETERY OF THE WHITE'S TABERNACLE, NO. 39.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 7621) prohibiting the interment of the body of any person in the cemetery known as the Cemetery of the White's Tabernacle, No. 39, of the Ancient United Order of Sons and Daughters, Brethren and Sisters of Moses, in the District of Columbia.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That from and after the date of the passage of this act, it shall be unlawful to inter the body of any person in the cemetery known as the Cemetery of White's Tabernacle, No. 39, of the Ancient United Order of Sons and Daughters, Brethren and Sisters of Moses, in the District of Columbia and situate in the District of Columbia, to wit: Part of a tract called "Chappell's Vacancy," contained within the following metes and bounds, namely: Beginning for the same at the southeast corner of the land conveyed to Frederick Bangerter by deed recorded in liber No. 785, folio 474, of the land records of the District of Columbia, and running thence north 15¾° east, 20.44 perches; then south 89° east, 3.9 perches; thence south 15¾° west, 20.44 perches; thence north 89° west, 3.9 perches to the point of beginning; and any person or persons violating the provisions of this act, or aiding or abetting its violation, shall be subject to a fine of not less than $100, nor more than $500 for each offense, to be collected as other fines are collected in the District of Columbia.

SEC. 2. That the board of officers of White's Tabernacle, No. 39, of the Ancient United Order of Sons and Daughters, Brethren and Sisters of Moses, in the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, authorized and empowered, under such regulations as the Commissioners of the District of Columbia may prescribe, to disinter and remove all the bodies now buried in said cemetery lot, and to transfer and reinter the same in some other suitable cemetery or cemeteries selected by the said board of officers of White's Tabernacle, No. 39, of the Ancient United Order of Sons and Daughters, Brethren and Sisters of Moses, in the District of Columbia, and at the cost and expense of said order: Provided, That each monument, tombstone, or marker, marking any grave or graves in said described burial ground shall be transferred to mark the grave or graves in which such body or bodies are to be interred, and shall be there placed in position as soon as can be done without danger of settling.

SEC. 3. That in so far as the same shall be inconsistent with the provisions of this act as to the cemetery lot herein described, sections 675 and 680 of the Code of Laws of the District of Columbia shall be, and the same are hereby, declared inoperative, otherwise said sections 675 and 680 to remain unqualified and in full force and effect.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 3, line 3, after the word "Moses," strike out the words "in the District of Columbia."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

LEWIS S. HARRIS—LEAVE TO WITHDRAW PAPERS.

By unanimous consent, at the request of Mr. SCHALL, leave was granted to withdraw from the files of the House without leaving copies the papers in the case of Lewis S. Harris (H. R. 11601, 64th Cong.), no adverse report having been made thereon.

INDIAN APPROPRIATIONS.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STEPHENS] that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to consider the Indian appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, pending my motion I desire to ask the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] what time is desired on that side for general debate. I have no requests over here at all.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I have a request for 1 hour and 20 minutes.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman agree to an hour on a side? I do not know that there will be any time consumed on this side.

Mr. CAMPBELL. If the gentleman will yield to me so that I can have, say, 20 minutes out of his hour, if he has no demands for time——

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. That will be entirely satisfactory. Then we may agree on two hours' general debate?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that general debate on this bill be limited to not to exceed two hours.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. One half to be controlled by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] and the other half by myself.

The SPEAKER. One-half to be controlled by the gentleman from Kansas and one-half by the gentleman from Texas. Is there objection?

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, there is one provision in this bill that may call for some discussion under the five-minute rule. I will ask the gentleman from Texas if he will agree to a reasonable length of time for discussion of that provision under the five-minute rule?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. What does the gentleman consider reasonable?

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. Well, the same length of time that this item has been discussed heretofore.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Ten, fifteen, or twenty-five minutes? I desire to reach some conclusion about the time.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. If the gentleman will state that some reasonable time will be allowed for debate under the five-minute rule when we get to that item, then I shall have no objection. We do not want unnecessary time, I will say to the gentleman, and I do not think we will want as much time as we have had heretofore. It may be that we will not want any discussion at all.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I am willing to yield to the gentleman under the five-minute rule such time as I can, but if anyone should object, of course I could not make an agreement that would bind the House.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. I understand that.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, none of us can hear what is going on between the gentleman from Texas and the gentleman from Mississippi, but if any arrangement is made contrary to that made with the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL], I want to object.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The gentleman from Mississippi says that there is a certain item in this bill that may require more discussion than is allowed under the five-minute rule, and wished me to yield him extra time. I will not raise any objection under the five-minute rule to such discussion, but, of course, he will have to have the House agree with him.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that general debate on this bill shall not exceed two hours, one half of the time to be controlled by him and the other half by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL]. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. GARNER in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 18453) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to dispense with the first reading of the bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I wish to make a brief statement relative to the contents of the bill. It has been only a few months since we had exhaustive hearings on the Indian appropriation bill, and nearly all the items in this bill are the same as the one which we passed in the last Congress but a few months ago. We have had hearings on all the new items that are in this bill and none of the items has been changed in any material respect. This bill will be practically a reenactment of the bill of last year. There is but one exception. The gentleman from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN] had passed through the House, as will be remembered, after several days' discussion, a bill providing for the mining of metalliferous ores under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior. We have adopted that bill as an amendment to this bill to permit the mining of metalliferous ores on Indian reservations.

As I say, a bill of that kind has passed the House two or three times after being recommended by the department. It went to the Senate and was there defeated, but this House last year had presented to it a much better bill, guarded in every respect, modeled, as I understand it, after the bill that had already passed the House for mining on the public domain of the United States. I hope that this amendment, prepared here, having passed the House after full discussion, will pass the House at this time. It takes the place of the one which permitted the Secretary of the Interior under rules and regulations to do the very same thing. We have in this bill better guarded the matter by placing restrictions around it, the same as were placed in the bill relating to mining upon the public domain.

I desire to state that there is nothing that will be more beneficial to the Indians and the people of the United States than to have this amendment incorporated in this bill. It is true that a similar bill is pending in the other body, but if we put it on here as an amendment we will stand a double chance of enacting into law this much-desired measure. I regard it as one of the most beneficial laws that can be placed on the statute books relating to Indian affairs.

At the present time there are several million acres of land in the reservations in the West which have been reported upon as carrying metalliferous ores, and there is no reason why they should be left there to remain forever without being developed. They should be developed and the Indians should have their share as provided in this bill. In that way we will give the Indians on the reservations the right to be employed, and they will be deriving a revenue from their mines; they will also come in contact with white citizens, as they do not now, and it will benefit the Indian children and men able to work on the reservation. It would put them on the highway or road that we desire them to go, to make them useful citizens in the future. I hope there will be no objection to the amendment when it is reached, but that it will become a law.

We have in this bill a well-considered recommendation made by the department, and I have here a report that gives a succinct statement of each item, and I ask that the report of the committee be printed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. COLLIER). The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to print the report upon this bill in the RECORD as a part of his remarks. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The report is as follows:

The Committee on Indian Affairs presents the accompanying bill (H. R. 18453) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and submits in explanation thereof the following:

The items adopted in this bill are estimated for in the Book of Estimates for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and are found on pages 399 to 466, inclusive, aggregating the sum of $12,230,356.67, exclusive of trust funds.

The amount appropriated for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, the current fiscal year, aggregated the sum of $10,967,644.88, exclusive of trust funds.

The estimates for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, exceeds the current law $1,262,711.79.

Your committee have recommended in the accompanying bill appropriations of sums amounting to $10,625,956.67, exclusive of trust funds, thus decreasing the department estimates for the fiscal year 1918 by $1,604,400 and the current law by $341,678.21.

This bill recommends gratuity appropriations payable from the Federal Treasury amounting to $7,146,896.67; appropriations reimbursable from Indian funds, $2,632,700; treaty appropriations, $845,360, exclusive of Indian trust funds in the Treasury to the credit of the Indians, aggregating $1,167,100.

A subcommittee of your committee held hearings on each item in the bill and these hearings have been printed in full, giving separate justifications for each item in the bill, whether such appropriations were gratuity, reimbursable, treaty, or trust funds.

The policies pursued by the present Commissioner of Indian Affairs, in looking after the health of our Indian wards, are very commendable. The money appropriated for irrigation and stock-raising purposes has been wisely and judiciously expended. The Indian Bureau has safeguarded the morals of the Indians in energetically fighting the introduction into the Indian country of all intoxicating liquors. Much progress has been made by the present administration of the Indian affairs in the education of Indian children. The schools are well attended, and the parents of the children, as a rule, are greatly pleased by the advancement of their children in their studies. The hospitals heretofore appropriated for, and in many instances specifically appropriated for in this bill, have fully justified the large Government expenditures of money for their erection, equipment, and maintenance, and it is the information of the committee that, as a general rule, the Indians willingly and voluntarily go to the hospitals for treatment. Nearly all of the Indian population is in the arid and semiarid regions of the West and the large sum appropriated for irrigation is very necessary to successfully farm their allotments. Your committee feels that the large sums we are annually expending on the Indian irrigation systems will in a few years make these Indians largely self-supporting. It is the opinion of your committee that the Indians, under the present Government supervision, are making rapid advancement in every avenue leading to their ultimate happiness and civilization.

The following table shows the separate items carried in this bill, whether gratuity, reimbursable, treaty item, or payable from trust funds, together with a comparison as between the current law, what was estimated for by the department, and what your committee recommends be allowed for the next fiscal year:

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, the news comes from the West through the newspapers that a great deal of useful legislation has reached these Indians in the way of education, and that they have benefited therefrom greatly.

I desire to read now one item coming from Tucson, dated September 25, which shows commendable progress in the red man's welfare in the West:

TUCSON, September 25.

Large numbers of Papago and Yaqui Indians are leaving this locality for the Salt River Valley, where they will pick cotton for the season. Last year Indians averaged $2 a day each, and so the word has spread even into Sonora, and more Indians than ever are available for the work.

That item comes from the Douglas International of September 25, 1916.

The Department of the Interior in the last few years has developed the Sacaton Reservation of Indians into one of the best cotton-growing regions of the whole Southwest, and it is true that this Indian reservation is the first reservation where the cotton business has been proven to be a success. The movement has spread to California. In the Imperial Valley of California the whites have taken up the road that the Indians have not occupied fully, and through the Indian Department they have been shown that this cotton can be produced there. It is the long staple sea island cotton that is worth twice as much as the short staple ordinary cotton raised in the South. I have seen these Indians from the largest to the smallest, only a few years old, making quite a sum of money each day by picking cotton. It is the same as the situation of the white people and the colored man who raise cotton in the South. It gives more labor on the reservation than anything else that could be devised.

This report emphasizes the work of the Indian Bureau relative to the health of the Indians. It is stated that the death rate among the Indians has been cut to 7 to 1,000, when heretofore it was double that amount. The bureau has conducted a campaign to save Indian babies by giving Indian mothers proper care through the hospitals that have been recently built by the Government. A few years ago there was a great movement among humanitarians of the country that was published far and wide in all the publications of the country to the effect that the Indians were dying out, that they were becoming fewer every day. A great deal of truth was contained in that idea and in those statements. It caused Congress to act. Since that time we have built many hospitals in the various regions of the West where they were most needed, after a full investigation by a joint committee of the two Houses of Congress. That committee reported the facts, and the bills have been passed, and the hospitals have been erected, and nurses and doctors are taking care of these Indians in a manner better than ever before.

We have also taken charge of the Indian schools and are conducting them in a different way from what they have been heretofore conducted. A few years ago a proposition was made, encouraged, and enacted into law that the Indians living in a State where there were public free schools might have the benefit of a fund given to them for the purpose of going to the white schools in the neighborhood, that fund supplementing the moneys used by the State for its own schools. A considerable sum of money has been expended along that line. Let me state that nothing could be more beneficial than educating the Indian with the white children wherever the State laws permit it. We find in Oklahoma quite a sum of money has been expended along those lines, with benefits to both races, and we hope this system will be extended.

Indian moneys carried on deposit in the State and national banks, the report says, amount to $20,000,000. This is a matter of very great importance, showing the progress made by these Indians. We estimate the progress made by the white man by the amount of money deposited to the credit of individuals in the counties, cities, and States. New regulations have been made for leasing oil land in the Osage Nation at a rate which, the report estimates, in the first year will pay $700,000 in royalties, and 90,000 acres of Indian lands were sold for $1,666,000. This shows commendable progress, and we hope that the policy that we are pursuing and have pursued for many years will benefit the people—not only the Indians but the people of the whole United States—along the lines I have suggested.

I reserve the remainder of my time, and will now yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Texas yield me 20 minutes of his time?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Yes; out of my time.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Then I have 1 hour and 20 minutes at my disposal. Mr. Chairman, this bill does not originate any new policies or new projects. It simply carries on the work of the Indian Office in the manner in which it has been carried on and provided for in the past. We have been as economical as we could be, consistent with the best service to the Indians.

I have no disposition to take up the time of the committee in adding to the statements made by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STEPHENS], the chairman of the committee. I now yield out of my time one hour to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS].

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman and Members of the House, through the kindness of this membership sufficient time has been granted me under general debate to explain the bill known as the vocational-education bill that we are hoping to have up for consideration and final action sometime in the near future, since it was made in order by unanimous consent the other day. There came to my desk last week a pamphlet entitled "Rebuilding Men." I examined it briefly and found that it was a dissertation upon the movement for the reclaiming of those who have gone wrong and have found a lodgment in our State prisons and penitentiaries, and that the movement was to reclaim these unfortunate people and make out of them men of usefulness. It was claimed by the writer to be one of the greatest movements that the present day knows. While I concede that to reclaim men is important, it seems to me that the "building of men" is of vaster importance than the rebuilding, and, therefore, any legislation that would take up the view of the building up of our youth into the future citizen of the Nation is as important a piece of work as can be done by this or any other body. The bill I wish to explain has this latter purpose in view.

Vocational education has been of interest for years to cities and to the country districts and has received the approval as well as strong indorsement of many superintendents of public schools, of State superintendents of various States, of county superintendents throughout the Nation, these representing the public-school interests of the country. It has also been strongly backed by associations of employers of labor, and in a most remarkable sense by the associations of labor of various characters. It is forcibly supported by many voluntary associations like chambers of commerce and the National Society for Vocational Education. I know of no suggestion in legislation that has met such universal approval as vocational education.

This comes from the conviction that whatever good our present school system has achieved—and it has been great—it is not designed to care for the boy or the girl who leaves school at the age of 14. One of the most startling statements that the Commission on Vocational Education appointed by the Sixty-third Congress made was that 85 per cent of all the children that enter the public schools of the country leave the schools before they reach the age of 16; that not over 8 per cent of those who enter the high school ever get through and take the diploma; that not over 3 per cent of those who graduate in the high school ever enter the college or the university. This is the more startling since most of the effort in the grades is designed to induce the pupils to enter high schools, and most of the emphasis in the high school is to induce the pupil to enter college, as most of the emphasis in college is to lead to the university.

This dominant note may explain the apparent fear of the university man that the vocational education movement may contain an element of danger to the Nation.

When we take into consideration the amount of money that has been expended for our more than 600 colleges and universities and which to many is a standing wonder, then realize the small proportion of those who are educated in the preparatory schools for college entrance enter the college, it seems to be a disproportionate use of funds. I make no criticism upon the work of the college or university; indeed, I very strongly indorse it, but when you realize the amount of money that is expended by taxation for our public-school system and then discover that 93 per cent of those who enter the school leave it before they finish the course, it is a startling fact when it is remembered the effort employed to advance from rank of pupil to that of student. As you go through the country you notice the finest buildings in a city are those devoted to education, an expression of public spirit back of popular education, and yet so small a proportion of our school population ever goes through them. There is a growing conviction that is well defined in the public mind that we ought to do something beyond what we have done for the 93 per cent who leave the schools before they reach the college grade. Whatever fear the educator might have of the recent enthusiasm back of vocational education, he must admit something is wrong.

I recently heard a distinguished university president of a Middle Western State speak upon the theme "The trap," and I listened with much interest to what that significant suggestion meant. He contended that the trap was the tendency to devote too much time to the bread-and-butter side of life, which leads into the workshop too quickly, and that the vocational movement was likely to so operate; that we ought to keep the stimulus before the youth to go into the higher fields of learning, to be in the higher ranges of thinking and activity. He caught the inspiration of Longfellow's Excelsior, to keep the aim high. Whether it be a trap or not, and whether the pupil ought to stop his schooling so early as 14—of course, we know he should not—but whether he should or should not, the facts are that he does. It is no longer a matter of what he ought to do, but, rather, what he does, that faces us. We have got to meet the condition as it is rather than as it ought to be. We know he should not, but we also know that he does go out. The problem is to reach the 93 per cent that are leaving school before graduation to work with their hands to make a living. The Sixty-third Congress authorized the President to appoint a commission to investigate that particular problem, as to how much has been done or is being done by the various States and by the various municipalities for vocational education for the benefit of the boy or girl who leaves school at 14. It was also desired that the public be informed as to how much the Government here through its executive departments has stimulated the States in doing work for these particular classes. That commission was appointed on the 20th of January, 1914. It went into session here in Washington on the 2d day of April. It held daily sessions, forenoon, afternoon, and evening, from the 2d day of April until the 1st day of June. The commission was authorized to spend $15,000. The investigation was limited in its time to the 1st of June. It reported to Congress its findings on that day. That commission had its hearings, before which appeared either the Cabinet officer or his representative selected by him. It had before it educators, business heads, labor leaders, and heads of voluntary bodies. It received information from letters from nearly all the superintendents of the States and various county and city superintendents. That commission made its report on the 1st day of June, within the time limit fixed by Congress, and returned to the Treasury, I want this membership to know, one-third of the amount of money that was voted for that purpose. [Applause.] The report, with hearings, was published in two volumes, Document 1004, the most comprehensive statement yet made in any country on vocational education.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman about three questions, providing he has the time; if not, I do not desire to interrupt him.

Mr. FESS. I have the time, and I will be glad to answer the questions if I am able.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Out of the whole number, how does the gentleman explain that 85 per cent of them quit?

Mr. FESS. There are various suggestions offered, and one of them is this: That the present school system has been largely arranged with reference to college entrance rather than to the entrance into the actual activities of the work-a-day world, where most of them will go, and that the present system, therefore, does not provide the linking of their present education with that they are going to do in the future, and they see no reason to stay, and drop out and go to work at once.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. It is fair to assume that one-half of the 85 per cent are girls—there are 21 boys born in the world for every 20 girls. There is no compulsion on most of them to quit school and go to work, is there?

Mr. FESS. No. Undoubtedly much blame should attach to the negligence, if not the ignorance, of parents.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Now, another question. How can the gentleman explain the fact that such a large per cent of boys appointed to Annapolis and West Point fall down on their entrance examination, and that they fail in spelling, reading, writing, geography, arithmetic, and grammar, the same as they do in the higher branches? What is the matter with the school system?

Mr. FESS. That is a sensitive question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I know; but it goes to the very root of this matter.

Mr. FESS. I am a practical educator.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. So am I; that is, I used to be.

Mr. FESS. I think, frankly speaking, that we devote too much time to what we call the "culture" side, that will express itself in many fads, and not enough time to the fundamentals, what we used to call the three "R's"—"reading, 'riting, and 'rithmetic." [Applause.]

I am a thorough believer that no useful system of education can supersede the irksome toil of learning the simple rudiments well as a basis for higher work. I once heard a great man declare that there was no trouble to secure a successful teacher in the higher subjects, but a very difficult task to find a real success in the teaching of the common branches. That observation is well taken.

Mr. NORTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. Yes.

Mr. NORTON. Is it not a fact we try to cover too much ground; that we are too extensive and not intensive enough in the common-school curriculum?

Mr. FESS. In the educational field more than any other that I know there seems to be an itching to do the thing that will attract attention, and, consequently, one of the things that we are constantly facing is the attempt to enrich the course of study, and every year, under enriching the course of study, we are adding this thing and that thing, with little demonstration of its present or future value.

Fellow Members of the House, I frankly say that the field of education furnishes a greater opportunity for the development of fads and "isms" than any other field of which I know, and, unfortunately, our school population takes up with those things too rapidly and too easily. At one time it was child study, and everybody went wild on it. Some one wrote a book; then others wrote books and monographs. Every man and woman that spoke on the platform addressed himself to the subject, until we had a veritable surfeit of the subject. And then came the adolescent, and everybody went wild over it. Last year it was sex hygiene, and the country was treated to a bedlam of observations. Just now we are taking up the Montessori system, and this District here is going wild over that. Somebody announces a new thing, and everybody seems to think it is the whole thing. I do not know any place else where that operates so rapidly as in the educational field. Why, universities are establishing chairs of special phases of psychology, and if the devotees are embarrassed from a lack of psychological data they will simply create it.

Mr. POWERS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. POWERS. Since there is such a large per cent of the pupils of the country who leave school and go to various employments, and since there is a large amount of our money expended for the purpose of education, and since the gentleman is a practical educator himself, what suggestion would he offer to divest school curriculums as they are now to, in a measure, embrace the field of vocational education?

Mr. FESS. My colleague on the committee has asked a question the answer to which leads me immediately to the bill that is before us. The bill as prepared is to supplement what the present educational system is doing, not especially to take anything away from it, but to add to it an entirely different department. The bill provides that instead of confining our educational activities to the present course, which is largely for college entrance, we should enlarge upon it for vocational reasons, and this enlargement will enter three fields. The first is agricultural development, the second is the development in the trades and industries, and the third is home economics. Federal aid is offered in this bill under three heads. The initial appropriation is $1,500,000 and the maximum after nine years $7,000,000, $3,000,000 ultimately in nine years to be annually appropriated by the Federal Government to pay in part the salaries of the teachers in agricultural subjects and directors and supervisors of agricultural subjects. Three million are ultimately to be annually appropriated for the payment in part of teachers of trades, industrial and home economic subjects. That makes the $6,000,000 to be applied for the payment of salaries. There are $1,000,000 to be annually appropriated for the training of teachers in these three fields—agriculture, trade and industry, and home economics—making the sum total of the Federal appropriation for 1927 and thereafter annually $7,000,000. This appropriation is made upon this basis, that every dollar that the Federal Government appropriates must be matched by the local or State authorities, so that when the ultimate appropriation of $7,000,000 will be made it will be an investment of at least $14,000,000 annually by State and Nation to these three fields—agricultural education, trade and industrial education, and home economics education.

Mr. POWERS. Will the gentleman yield there now?

Mr. FESS. I will.

Mr. POWERS. Would not there be $7,200,000 appropriated?

Mr. FESS. The $200,000, of course, is to go for the administration of the board, and, more than that, there is to be a minimum allotment of $167,000, which adds to the total appropriations, including the $200,000 for administration, $367,000.

Mr. MEEKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. I will.

Mr. MEEKER. Did the committee consider, in connection with this work, the advisability or feasibility of adding another course, namely, a course in the rudimentary elements of American civil government, about which nobody seems to know much these days in school?

Mr. FESS. The Federal Government is assuming that the educational system must be left with the State. The Government will not interfere in any way with the State in a system of education, but simply add a certain amount of money as a stimulus, and then fix a minimum requirement upon which the State can receive the money. It does not specify what should be studied, because that ought to be left with the State, to be approved by the Federal board.

Mr. MEEKER. I beg the gentleman's pardon, but an appropriation for such work would be as legitimate as teaching a man's hand to earn a livelihood in the Government.

Mr. FESS. The educational system must be left with the State. The General Government must not interfere with that.

This bill is written upon that theory. I would oppose the Nation superseding the State in educational matters.

Mr. MEEKER. The gentleman is a practical educator, and I will ask him if it is common to-day in our public-school system that any attention is paid to that side of our civil life?

Mr. FESS. I think every public school in the country gives a course in civics. Civil government is one of the important branches of the course of study.

Mr. MEEKER. The gentleman thinks it does?

Mr. FESS. Yes.

Mr. MEEKER. Under what system of teaching? What authorities are studied in our public schools on American government?

Mr. FESS. Every schoolbook publishing house has various textbooks on the subject.

Mr. MEEKER. What are some of the standards?

Mr. TOWNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. I yield.

Mr. TOWNER. If the gentleman will permit me, I will say to the Representative from Missouri [Mr. MEEKER] that his own State has in its curriculum the teaching of the fundamentals of civil government. And this statement was made by an educator not long ago, and which statement I believe to be true, that every State in the Union now either requires or advises a course in civil government that embraces the fundamental principle of both National and State Government and control. So we are already doing a great deal on that line in the public schools.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, the details of the bill are not numerous and were written to embrace certain principles. When you appropriate a certain sum for agricultural or other purposes to the State there ought to be some method of apportionment so that what would be called the "pork-barrel" element of legislation would be entirely obviated.

We have done that as far as it is possible. For example, the $3,000,000 that is annually to go to agricultural education is to be apportioned to the States in the proportion that the agricultural population of the State holds to the agricultural population of the Nation. That will give to one State a large amount and to another State a small amount simply because one State, like Iowa, for example, is largely agricultural, while another State, like Connecticut, is not largely agricultural. Then the $3,000,000 that will be devoted annually to trade and industrial education will be on the basis that the industrial and trade population of the State will hold to the whole population, industrial and trade, in the Nation. That will give Iowa a small amount of that fund, because not largely industrial, while it gets a large amount of the agricultural fund; but the State of Connecticut will get a large amount of the industrial fund, while it gets a very small amount of the agricultural fund.

But when it comes to apportioning the sums for the training of teachers, it is in proportion that the total population of the State, agricultural and industrial, bears to the total population of the Nation, and it is left to the State to say how much shall be for agriculture and how much shall be for trade and industry, with the limitation that not more than 60 per cent nor less than 20 per cent shall go for either.

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. I yield to my friend.

Mr. SLOAN. I notice in the apportionment that it is based upon the rural and urban population, and reference is constantly made to the census of 1910. Under the census of 1910, if I recall correctly, rural population not only includes those upon the farm, but those in villages and cities under 2,500 inhabitants. Is that arbitrary classification of the census of 1910 followed in your apportionment here?

Mr. FESS. It is; but we make exceptions in this bill that the urban population in towns under 2,500 will be included as rural population.

Mr. SLOAN. As rural?

Mr. FESS. Yes. There will be, as noticed, certain conditions of a minimum to be supplied. For example, the State of Wyoming would get a very small sum—something like $1,000—for agricultural purposes, and it would get the very small sum of $500 for vocational or industrial purposes. Consequently the bill provides for a minimum below which no State will fall, and that minimum is $5,000 up to the year 1923; after that it is to be $10,000. Consequently up to that period there will have to be an additional appropriation beyond the $7,000,000 to make the requirement of the minimum, and the totaling of that, including the grant to each State, is as follows for agricultural teaching:

State.	Rural population.		Allotment, 1915-16.	Maximum allotment, 1923-24.	Special allotment to guarantee $5,000 to each State in 1915-16.	Special allotment to guarantee $10,000 to each State in 1922-23.

In other words, the total additional appropriation to bring the minimum for each State to $5,000 up to the year 1923 and $10,000 after that for both payment of teaching in agricultural and trade subjects and for training teachers would be $167,000.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman state how much Oklahoma will get at that time?

Mr. FESS. Yes. Oklahoma gets $81,300, with no minimum to be made up.

Mr. REAVIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. Yes; I yield.

Mr. REAVIS. The basis of apportionment is the number of children we seek to equip, is it not, as disclosed in comparison with the population?

Mr. FESS. Yes.

Mr. REAVIS. If that be true, why should there be a gratuity to any State? Why should we make a gift over and above the population for the number of children of any of those States?

Mr. FESS. That would enter at once into the question whether Federal aid is justified at all. A great many people think that the States ought to take care of this subject altogether. I think the Federal Government ought to aid, and I will give you my reason for my belief.

Mr. REAVIS. The gentleman evidently does not understand my question. I am not seeking any controversy as to the legitimacy of Federal aid. What I ask is this: If the basis of apportionment is the number of children that we seek to equip, why should not all the apportionment be based upon the number of children rather than make an additional apportionment to some States because of a small population?

Mr. FESS. I can see that the gentleman's contention has some merit and that the apportionment ought to be based upon the number that will be benefited. However, it was much easier for us to take the total population, because the figures could be very easily gathered. I am not sure that there is any inequity suffered in the plan proposed.

Mr. REAVIS. But even taking the total population, why give to some of the States an apportionment greater than they would be entitled to if the apportionment were based upon the total population?

Mr. FESS. Well, to be equitable, it would seem that the better plan would be based upon the population rather than upon the school population. There are some States—I do not know that this as a general statement is true—but there are some States where probably the size of the family is less than it is in other States. I do not know about that, and do not know why it should be. I understand, however, that it is true, and one State under those circumstances would get more than another State under our proposal, but the difference would not appear to be sufficient to warrant much contention either way.

Mr. REAVIS. These children, when they reach maturity in the larger sense, are citizens of the Nation rather than of the States?

Mr. FESS. Yes.

Mr. REAVIS. And the only justification for Federal aid would be their national citizenship. Now, if that be true, and Wyoming, based upon population, would be entitled to but $1,000, why should that State be given $5,000?

Mr. FESS. We believe this, that you can not justifiably grant a sum of money for such a purpose as this to be other than waste unless you make it at least a minimum sum. If you say that the State of Wyoming shall get $1,000 only, rather than $5,000, then it would be so small that there could be no apportionment of it. It would all have to go in one place in order to do any good at all, and that would be partial to some particular portion of the State. In other words, the Federal Government is not justified in making any grant if in such small sums as to be wasted. We prefer to make the minimum large enough so that it will not be frittered away.

Mr. REAVIS. The $1,000 to Wyoming would give to each child in Wyoming the same proportion of this appropriation that each child in Ohio would receive.

Mr. FESS. That is true. But, my friend, when you come to establish a school, you can not have all the necessary equipment for two or three children only. You ought to have a larger number in order to be of value.

Mr. REAVIS. Yet in Ohio and Nebraska, in many of the rural districts, there are schools which have very few scholars.

Mr. FESS. That is true, to the hurt of both of the States, you will admit.

Mr. REAVIS. I will admit that; yes.

Mr. FESS. When we come to speak of the reason why the Government will enter upon Federal aid there are three things to which I want to call your attention: First, there is an army of unemployed juveniles neither in school nor at work, but idle; secondly, there are a great number of improperly employed juveniles at work but not in the proper kind of work; and, thirdly, there is a great mass of imperfectly employed juveniles.

Now, the Government ought to assist in attempting to correct all of that. We ought to make it possible for the person who goes out of school to find proper work and not to join the idle gang. Secondly, we ought to give him vocational guidance so as not to employ him improperly or to put him where he does not belong, and thus drive him into the blind alley; and, thirdly, we ought to think in reference to his ability, so that he will not be imperfectly employed in whatever he is doing but may continue to take the next step upward. Now, is not that a national function as well as a function of the State?

Mr. REAVIS. There is no question about that. I am not disputing that at all. I entirely agree with the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS] and I do not want to divert him from the line of thought he is pursuing, but I would like to ask one further question.

Mr. FESS. Certainly.

Mr. REAVIS. It is stated in the report on this bill, and has also been stated by the gentleman in the course of his remarks, that the school system as now devised is suited to fitting pupils for a college or university education, and he followed that with the statement that but 3 per cent of the graduates of the public schools go through the colleges and universities. Is it not about time that a change should be made in this system so that practical education should be given to the high-school scholars, if only 3 per cent of them take advantage of the higher opportunity?

Mr. FESS. I agree with the gentleman entirely, and I recognize that there is a sort of rivalry or jealousy between the two schools of thinking. There is one group that is afraid to teach or train for work; they think it is sacrificing the ideal to the practical, the cultural to the utilitarian. There is another group that is afraid that if you take pupils into the higher realms of education they will learn nothing practical and will cease to be of use. As one father said, "My son was worth something before he went to college." Those who believe in vocational training say, "Do not try to put everybody through college. The world is full of college men with nothing to do." They have college training, but they do not know anything. That is, they have been trained mentally but they do not know anything practical. That is the claim of the practical man.

Mr. REAVIS. Educated fools.

Mr. FESS. One of the most distinguished college professors whom I know was asked the question why so few literary men went into public life and became active in civic movements, and he replied, "Because they don't know very much." Probably that is true. On the other hand, the man whose life is spent in thinking along cultural lines is afraid that vocational training is going to trap the youth and clip his wings of ambition, and that he will never get into the higher realms where the world yearns to reach; and we have those two jealousies operating among us. You hear it on every side where men and women gather to talk it over. Every time you move on vocational training somebody comes in and warns you against the dangers that lurk along the way. On the other hand, why should we not take the same view of both these schools and ask the Federal Government to stimulate vocational training on the ground that it is cultural? [Applause.] When a man does a piece of work with his hands, he may never have seen a college, but if his work reflects thought and power to see, why is it not in that degree cultural. The man with the chisel on the stone brings out the soul. He works with his hands, but he is an artist. If a man can do a thing with his fingers, why is he not just as cultured as the man who, though he carries a diploma, can not make anything. I think it was Emerson who once said, in substance at least, If a man could make a mousetrap, and make the best one in the world, the world would make a beaten path to his door, for they like a man who can do things. I think the time is here when America ought to cultivate as well as stimulate the idea that there is not so much difference between the fellow who is working with his brains alone and the fellow who is working with his hands directed by his brains. One is as honorable as the other, and the idea that a man should avoid going into work with his hands because it unranks or disarranges him in society is an idea that we have got to get away from. In other words, it seems to me that the crying need of this hour is to dignify labor, is to make the man who works with his hands feel himself in any company just as honorable as the man who works with his head. It was Carlisle, as I recall it, who said that there is a perennial nobleness in work and an abiding hope for the man who is willing to work; it was Russell Lowell who said, He who stands with arms akimbo set, waiting for occasion to mark out his way, will die with his task unfulfilled. The world will angrily shove him aside, to make room for him who will take his work and stand by it.

It is not the worker who is pitied. It is he who does not make connection of hand and brain. It is the untrained whose daily toil reflects no thought. The Federal Government should attempt to connect the hand with the brain in all human endeavor.

Mr. Chairman, this bill is looking to the American population of 14 and over who will have to work with their hands, and it is looking to make them trained workers, so that they will feel a dignity in what they are doing and not be ashamed of it, and be not only satisfied as citizens in a degree, but will meet the approval of their fellow citizens. In order to do this we have got to have three kinds of schools. We will have the all-day school, the part-time school, and the evening school. The all-day school provided in this bill will require Federal aid to be limited to children of from 14 to 18, nothing below that, on the ground that no child under 14 has yet gotten a general education sufficient to go into some useful vocation. The Government will not and should not furnish that general education, but the State ought to supply that supplemental education prior to 14. Then when the child becomes 14, he can enter the all-day school provided by this act, which requires this school to be nine months in the year, and it also requires that there shall be 30 hours during each week. It also requires that at least one-half of his time in the all-day school shall be spent in the practical work in the shop. Do I get that before the committee so that it is understood?

The all-day school must not dissociate the recitation in the schoolroom from the work in the shop. The shop is the laboratory and the schoolroom is for the study and recitation of the principles to be applied in his practical work in after life. No Federal aid will be allowed to go to a pupil that will study all the time and work none of the time. This bill is written to articulate the boys thinking in the schoolroom with his working in the shop. For example, in the college we devote so many hours to laboratory work, and during laboratory days we do not have the recitation; the recitation deals with principles and the laboratory with the application of those principles.

When a boy is going on the farm he is going to be taught in the classroom the principles; then he must go to the farm a part of the year—in this bill we fix the time at six months—either on the school farm supplied by the school or upon his own home farm from which he comes. That is the reason why we enlarge beyond teachers. The bill says the payment of salaries to teachers—that is, in the classroom; and the supervisors or directors are for the field work or the demonstration work, and six months the bill says shall be devoted to demonstration work.

We permit the pupil in the classroom in the winter to study principles and in the fall and spring he is out in the field making a demonstration of the things he studies in the winter. The same correlation between study and demonstration is required in the trades and industries and home economics.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. Yes; I yield.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. I want to ask if the amount appropriated is not so small that it will be impossible to carry the work into the rural schools? There are isolated all over the country tens of thousands of one-room school buildings. How is it proposed to benefit the school, itself incapable of establishing financially any sort of system for practical education?

Mr. FESS. Here is the amount for Nebraska, for example: Total amount, $88,600, for training teachers and for salaries of agricultural and vocational teachers.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. That would not be a drop in the bucket in comparison with the total amount appropriated for rural schools.

Mr. FESS. I will say that every dollar that is appropriated must be matched by a dollar from the State for the same purpose. Consequently there will not be a dollar of the money go to equipment of the building or plant or anything outside of the part payment of teachers. It is estimated that it will be about one to two; that is, the State will spend $2 to the Federal Government's $1, so that if $88,600 is given by the Federal Government the amount expended would be about three times that for vocational education in your State, to be applied by your State board.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. I presume the gentleman contemplates that this is merely an incentive more than anything else?

Mr. FESS. Absolutely.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. A stimulant to appropriate larger sums?

Mr. FESS. One thing that the committee and the prior commission wanted to do was to prevent any State leaning on the Federal Government. The State must take the initiative and must not look to the Federal Government except as an assistant. This is simply a stimulant to the State, and it does not supersede the State in any other respect, except that it fixes a minimum condition upon which the State may obtain the funds.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. Will the gentleman explain how it will apply to the little one-room school?

Mr. FESS. In this way: All the money that is given to the State will be given through the Federal commission to the State board of education. Then the State board will make its application in the State as the State board sees fit. The conditions in the States are so varied that we could not designate how they should be applied. If we did, it would be allowing the Federal Government to step in and supersede the State.

Mr. TOWNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. Yes.

Mr. TOWNER. I was going to make the suggestion that in similar cases where the Government aid has been already extended the States are not limited in their appropriation to merely meeting the requisite amount, but have appropriated four to twenty times as much as was appropriated by the General Government.

Mr. FESS. I thank the gentleman. It is designed as a stimulant. In all important movements the main purpose is to once rightly inaugurate it. The people will then care for its needs.

Mr. NORTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. Yes; I yield.

Mr. NORTON. Is not the answer to the gentleman from Nebraska this, that it will be a stimulus and an incentive to do away with the small one-room school of three or four pupils and bring about a consolidation of those schools in the township?

Mr. FESS. I think that will be the effect. That has already become a prominent policy of many States of the Union.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. How would this operate—how would it be put in operation?

Mr. FESS. The country school would have its agricultural department. Michigan is in advance on rural agricultural education, I may say. It must organize and provide for a plant, a teacher, and satisfy the requirements of the Federal board; then the Federal Government steps in and pays one-half of the salary of the teacher, the work in the school to be determined by the State board. The State board must meet certain conditions which the Federal board lays down. First, there must be a plan submitted, and that plan must show the kind of school they propose to carry on, its building and its equipment. Second, we provide the course of study; third, the methods of teaching; fourth, the qualification of teachers; and then it must be under the public control. Its work must be limited below college entrance, and it must be applied to pupils that either have already entered upon some employment or are preparing to enter upon actual work with their hands.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. Yes; I yield.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. It would involve the employment of additional teachers?

Mr. FESS. Probably; not necessarily. The two together could employ the teacher. It would increase the fund to be used and would likely employ a higher-trained teacher.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. And the teacher could conduct the different kinds of instruction?

Mr. FESS. Yes. In agriculture it will be either payment of the teacher or payment of the supervisor and director who would be out in the field.

Mr. REAVIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. Yes; I yield.

Mr. REAVIS. In States like Ohio, Iowa, and Nebraska, hundreds of thousands of dollars are now being spent in agricultural schools. Will such States be entitled to this Federal aid without additional expenditure on their part?

Mr. FESS. That will depend entirely upon whether its plant already meets the approval of the Federal board.

Mr. REAVIS. Assuming that the plants do meet the method devised by the Federal board, this appropriation would amount in that event to a gift to these States?

Mr. FESS. It would, just as it will to every State that receives the grant. In any event, all that goes to the States from the Government will be a gift or grant as you may choose to call it.

Mr. REAVIS. And not an incentive?

Mr. FESS. It would. If the State is already well equipped it may stimulate it beyond what it has already done. I should judge it would help.

Mr. Chairman, I want now to call attention to the part-time school. I believe it is the greatest movement in modern education. It has taken hold of many States, and I think it is in many ways the most advanced step that modern education has taken. It is this: When a boy or girl is forced out of school at the age of 14 to go to work under the present system, his education stops. He goes into the blind alley of occupation; it is anything that comes. He is forced out either because he may not have had any direction from home or elsewhere, or may be compelled to go out because of the exigencies of the home.

This bill takes the view that if a boy or girl has stopped at the age of 14 in order that he may work, or for any other reason, his education shall not stop. He can go to work one day and go to school the next day, or go to work half a day and to school the other half, or go to work one week and to school the next week, and so on. In other words, he is at an employment for wages, but he is in school part of the time learning the principle of things that he is working at for wages. Immediately you say, "Will you not get into trouble with the employer?" And you wonder if the employer will be willing to take a boy or a girl who can not be with him every day or every half day or every week. This has been tried in Cincinnati, where it is called the cooperative system. It works wonders. The State of Pennsylvania has recently passed a law making it possible for every boy that goes out of school to work at the age of 14 to still continue in school. That is your part-time school. I repeat, it is the greatest movement that has taken place in modern education. Heretofore when a child dropped out he was gone, but now when a child drops out permission is granted that he may work part of the time in the line that he is studying and get wages for it and this will give him an incentive later on probably to go on to school all of the day, or it will give him an incentive to prepare himself beyond what an apprentice would do, and he will therefore win promotion. It is, in other words, the closing up of the blind alley, not in education, but in work. All over the country that fact has come to be recognized as feasible and workable. The vocational commission was once inclined to limit all Federal aid to the part-time school. I could not agree to it, because, while I regard it as the most important single step, yet I could not agree to say that a boy still in school all day could not share in Federal aid. But the general results of part-time work are so far-reaching that I believe this Congress could do no greater constructive work for the future citizen than to provide a way when the poor fellow is forced to work for wages so that his schooling may still proceed.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. Yes; I will yield to my colleague on the committee.

Mr. TOWNER. I am told that there is such a demand from the Cincinnati schools for the workmen they furnish that they can find a place for any boy to take the half-time system, and that their work is so satisfactory that they are in greater demand than any other class of workmen by the factories. In fact, the statement was made to me by an educator from Cincinnati that there was one factory in Dayton, Ohio, that would almost be willing to take every man that could be sent from the Cincinnati schools into their factory.

Mr. FESS. I thank the gentleman for making a note of that, for Dean Schneider, of the University of Cincinnati, who inaugurated this plan, tells me that various employers have waiting lists, standing claims filed for persons, just as rapidly as they can get them to go into the service of their various companies. They say they are better workmen, these boys that are still studying; that they are more efficient than those who are not studying. They appear to have a different viewpoint in what they do. The plan is no longer experimental. It can be worked, for it has been in other places. It seems to me a very fine suggestion as a solution of the 93 per cent which this bill proposes to reach.

Mr. TOWNER. In the Dayton mills they work two weeks and go to school two weeks.

Mr. FESS. Some of them arrange to work half a day and are in school the other half, and others work so many days in the week—two days, and in school the other days—and others one week out and one week in school. That will have to be arranged, of course, by the locality, and this bill is written on this basis—that the whole suggestion be given over to the State board and the State board will deal with the locality.

The locality in one place will be different from the other. For instance, in east Liverpool the main thing would be work in pottery, while in Detroit it might be automobile manufacturing, in Boston shoe manufacturing, and so forth. One provision of the bill is that the education should be in line of the thing for which they are paid in their employment, to make them more efficient. We do not attempt to specify, but leave it with the State board to designate what the situation between the State and locality shall be. There are persons who will not be reached, either by the all-day or the part-time school. That calls for the evening school. We provide in this bill for such a school but forbid a pupil under 16 years going into the evening school. We do this on the ground that the physical disadvantage will overtop the advantage in a pupil under 16. We also limit the attendance on the evening school to those who are not in the day school. You can see why we do that. We do not fix any maximum age for the evening school. In the evening schools supported by various cities over the country we have people 50 years old; but we do not fix any maximum age in the bill. The bill is drafted upon the theory that the all-day and part-time schools if properly organized and conducted will ultimately totally obviate the necessity of the evening school.

But I said we do not fix anything of that kind. All we do is to fix the minimum and provide that no person should receive Federal aid for this character of evening instruction if he is less than 16 years of age, because it is physically bad, and also to keep from frittering away the funds. We do not allow the ones in the day schools to get advantage of Federal aid in the evening school as well. We think that is a wise provision.

Mr. Chairman, there are some controverted points in the bill. The Senate bill provides that the Federal board shall be made up of five ex officio members. They are members of the Cabinet specified in the bill. It provides that the executive head of that board shall be the Commissioner of Education. It also provides a board of specialists, five in number, with a fixed salary, ranging from $5,000 to $7,000. These specialists are to be, one in agriculture, one in labor, one in commerce, one in vocational education and administration, and so on. Then, there is to be, in addition to that, an advisory board of seven men, representative, limited to 30 days service in a year. The pay is $10 a day for expenses in addition to traveling expenses. They serve without compensation.

The House bill has an entirely different plan. It provides for a Federal board of five, the chairman of which is the Commissioner of Education. The four associate members are to be appointed by the President, no more than two to be of one political party. The salary fixed in the House bill is $5,000 a year. There is no specified board of specialists; but, on the other hand, this board has the administration of $200,000 annually to employ specialists to make studies and investigations in cooperation with the executive departments through the various heads and for making their investigations in the States of the needs of vocational education. There is no advisory board. The one striking distinction between the House bill and the Senate bill is the organization of the Federal board. The two bills in all other respects are almost identical. They were identical when introduced from the vocational commission. There is one slight difference in that the Senate bill does not include home economics as one of the coordinate subjects to be taught. The House bill does. There is another very slight difference. The Senate bill includes in the purposes of this education the training of immigrants for better citizens. We have not specifically mentioned the immigrant, but in the House bill, I think, that is included without having it mentioned. Now, those are the only points of difference between the two bills. However, the opinion as to the merits of a permanent board, whose entire time shall be given to this important matter rather than an ex officio board is so well defined that, personally, I sincerely hope the House will prefer the House to the Senate bill. I am convinced that in the past legislation has not sufficiently recognized the importance of the education work of this body. There is no more important function and none of higher rank than that of education. Its controlling board ought not to be ex officio.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for me to ask him a question?

Mr. FESS. I will.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Unfortunately I have not had an opportunity to study this very interesting question. I was thinking of this—take the country school. There are certain boys, for illustration, who want to be carpenters or one of the other trades. What opportunity would there be for diversifying the vocation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, may I ask that the gentleman's time be extended for three minutes?

The CHAIRMAN. The time is in the control of the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. MANN. Has not the gentleman from Texas some time to yield to the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman, I yield seven minutes to the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas yields seven minutes to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Now, the gentleman understands the purport of my question. I had not quite finished my question, but the gentleman understands what I was trying to get at.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I will yield three minutes additional from my time to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. FESS. I am very much obliged to the chairman of the committee. The question of the gentleman from Michigan was, "How would you diversify these vocational trades?" One boy wants to be a carpenter and another desires to take up another trade——

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Say, to be a blacksmith, and there are some young men who have a predisposition looking toward certain trades, and yet they will be only open to these vocations by wholesale, so to speak, along a specific line, and I take it from what the gentleman says only agriculture would be taught.

Mr. FESS. Agriculture is one field.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. FESS. Vocational training in industrial trades is the other.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. FESS. Now, you catch your carpenter under that. That is a trade.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Do not they elect in each school which particular line of instruction shall be given?

Mr. FESS. The State board will say whether they can apportion to that particular school any funds to carry along the particular thing they want.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Very well, but in each case in this country school it will be given over wholly to agriculture, and there might be some number of boys who might want to study some trade.

Mr. FESS. I should say to my friend from Michigan that must be left to the State boards——

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. I understand; I see the difficulty.

Mr. FESS. That we can not step into the State and determine.

Mr. REAVIS. That is administrative.

Mr. FESS. That is purely administrative. Now, Mr. Chairman and Members of the House, there has been a question whether this money would not be frittered away; whether the money might not be wasted; we have safeguarded that in the bill in this way, that if a State wants the money it has got to meet the minimum conditions and we make that very specific. The State makes an application to the Federal board, and the Federal board will take up the plans to see whether they can approve the plans. If approved, then the money is to be sent to the State and to be in the State treasurer's hands as the custodian and is to be paid to him in quarterly installments by the Secretary of the Treasury upon the authority of the Federal board.

It will be noted that the State must make an annual report to the Federal board on or before September 1 of each year, giving the applications of the funds received.

The Federal board is also required to make its report annually to Congress.

There is another provision here that ought to be noted, and that is, if the State does not wish to use both funds for agricultural and for vocational teaching, it can have its option. It can use one and not take the other, but it must use the fund that is sent to it for the training of teachers after 1918, for training of vocational teachers is so important that if the State has not sufficient interest to use its minimum for that purpose, after 1918 no further appropriation will be made. Then, there is another provision. If at any time the Federal Government may find that the State is not using the money in accordance with the purposes intended, there will be withheld further allotment to that State, and if any of it has been abused or wasted, the Federal Government will deduct that amount in the future allotment and punish the State in that way. And if any portion of the fund has been lost, the State must make up that loss before it can get any further allotment. So that I think these Federal funds have been very wisely safeguarded, so that there can be no waste.

There is only one item in the bill that troubles all of us, and that was raised by one of the Members, I think the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. STEPHENS] a moment ago. That item is that the amount to be apportioned is so small at times that it is a question whether it is sufficiently large to do much more than merely stimulate, and whether it would do very much of that. In other words, there are so many schools that are organized as vocational schools, they are so numerous in the States, that when the State board gets this money, how is it going to apportion it? Are they going to give it to all these different schools—a little here and a little there, and so on? That is all up to the State board, and we will have simply to depend on their good judgment not to waste it.

The Federal Government can not go further than that. There was some objection some time ago that some of the States do not have a State board, and my State falls in that list. Ohio has no State board of education. Therefore, in the machinery of this bill there is no provision for that State to get the money. The agency through which it is gotten is not created. We do say that any department so designated as a board, but we limit the number to three. Now, fellow members, I hope that will not be passed over lightly. My own opinion is that a State that does not organize a State board of education ought to be punished to the extent of not having this money. I did my best to provide for such a board in the Ohio constitutional convention, but failed. Massachusetts set the example by organizing the first State board of education in the country in 1836, and Horace Mann, the first president of old Antioch, who died in the house in which I live, was the first head of the first board of education in the world. Nearly every State has followed suit and organized a distinctive board to take care of the educational interests of the people.

I am sorry to say that Ohio is one that has not taken advantage of it. Now, as a Representative from Ohio that wants the benefit of this aid, I frankly say from the floor of this House it must, so far as I am concerned, meet the requirements and create a board that is a State board of education through which this money can be administered if it desires to obtain this assistance. You say, why not give it to some individual? No. The Federal board has a great work in the studying of the needs of the various States, and it must operate not through an individual but through a board whose business it is to give the information that we need. And we therefore say that this money shall be applied through a State board to consist of not less than three persons, because the administration of it is too important to be lightly considered, because the State board is to do more than simply apply the money. It is so important that the money be not wasted that it is necessary for a State board to be created by legislative enactment in order to do the things that are required in the bill. And for that reason I hope that nobody will seriously object to that phase of it.

Mr. POWERS. Will the gentleman yield for a suggestion?

Mr. FESS. I will yield to my colleague on the Education Committee.

Mr. POWERS. This State board must be created by legislative enactment and the provision of this bill accepted by the State legislature.

Mr. FESS. Yes. I hope the observation of my friend from Kentucky will be noted. Some one said we ought to eliminate the necessity for the legislative act and let it be through the option of a governor or an individual like the State superintendent. No. The State board is going to be vested with responsibility here, and it ought to come through the law-making power of the State, to whom they will be responsible, and if the legislature is not in session let it come in session and meet the requirements of the law.

Gentlemen of the House, I think that I have gone over all of the details of the bill, not fully, it is true, but sufficiently, I hope, so that the bill will be intelligible, and I conclude what I have to say with this one thought. In America we are a working people. Whatever has marked any nation, ours is marked by the word "accomplishment." I believe that the man who accomplishes something stands as high in America to-day as any other person. I once heard it said that the eighteenth century's trade-mark was authority, that everything went by order. People did not stop to be independent, to make any query. They were told what to do and they did it. That was the eighteenth century. The nineteenth century was marked by opinion, a degree of independence, where people began to think for themselves in all lines. But the twentieth century is marked by doing things, by achieving, by accomplishing. The man to-day who gets recognition is the fellow who can do something. Why, I would go a long distance to see the fastest horse in the world perform, simply to see him do something that no other horse could do. I enjoy seeing an accomplishment, whatever it is, that is difficult to perform. That is the thing that America has been thinking about. Some one said we think the unthinkable and do the impossible—ours is a working Nation.

Now, here is a bill to make the most out of brain, heart, and hand. And any legislation that will do that is worthy of the consideration of this House. [Applause.]

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I desire to yield to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. DILL].

Mr. DILL. Mr. Chairman, no subject is more vital to the great mass of the American people at this time than the increased cost of living. All kinds of laws are being proposed to remedy the situation, some investigations are already being made, and many others are being proposed. The value of a dollar has shrunk far below the value which it possessed a year ago when measured in terms of the necessary commodities of life.

A statement by the Hon. Martin W. Littleton in the New York World of Sunday, December 10, 1916, sets forth the situation in such an admirable way that I can do no better than to quote it. It is as follows:

Somewhere Shakespeare makes somebody say:
"A man may eat of a fish that's eat of a worm that's eat of a king."
And then somewhere Tennyson, I think it was, has said:
"I am a part of all I ever met."

We who eat of the fish in which our nearby seas and oceans abound, judged by the price, are eating of Shakespeare's fish which has "eat of a king," for we pay the royal price. Everything from the soil to the stomach, from the field to the palate, from the flock to the garment, "becomes a part of all it ever meets"; and on its way it apparently meets everybody who is out of money and who takes his toll.

From the apples that blush in the sunlight and glisten in the rain to the potatoes that blink their dull eyes on our dinner table, we are burdened with the cost of maintaining every manipulator that touches them from the time they fall from the tree or come out of the earth.

Nature prodigally produces everything that we can eat or wear under the blessed influence of the procession of seasons. For ages the sun in his westbound course has been storing the fuel in the mountain side; the forests under his magic touch have sprung up, and each year the valleys are overflowing with plenty in response to his kindling touch.

BARE MEANS OF EXISTENCE.

The little that we do is merely to accommodate ourselves to the great dynamic energies provided for us from a Heaven-sent source; and yet, with all that is flung up from the sod, and all that flows in the running streams, and all that comes from the purple vineyards and the reddening orchards, and all that comes from the domesticated fowls and animals which have yielded themselves in placid servitude to the human race, we get by dint and stint barely enough, through the exertion of all our energies, to clothe our backs and feed our appetites.

The ordinary apple, whose fall to the ground simply illustrates its overflowing ripeness and reminds us of the philosophy of Sir Isaac Newton, before it reaches our tables becomes the golden apple of Hesperides. The corn blowing its tasseled riches over endless acres, the wheat waving its golden banners, the cotton whitening under the warmth of a southern summer sun, the potatoes buried in the travail of their miraculous birth, the earth letting out streams of endless plenty for the health and comfort and satisfaction of the human race—all of these to find their inglorious destiny in the corner of a cold storage, their wonderful bounty bled by the thrift of the toll-taking middleman, and nature's predestined plenty shriveled to a starving deficiency!

Has this all been brought about because there are crafty and shrewd men who know that we prefer to pay the cost of high living? Has all of this come about by a crafty arrangement born of a knowledge that we consider how much we spend a tribute to how much we earn? Is there a class of people who spend so much and so profligately that they have created and educated a school of middlemen in America who know how to dam up the streams of plenty until each drop will be priceless? Is the average man obliged to pay the awful tribute to the toll taker because there is a class of more than average men and women who have been thrown up on the peak of some fortune by the mere friction of modern commerce and who insist upon paying too much and spending too much?

WHY THE COST IS SO HIGH.

How did it all come about that everything is ten times higher than its real value when nature is faithfully working in our behalf, with her miracle of sun and rain mingled with the fecundity of sod and soil, skillfully combining all their marvelous processes for our happiness and contentment? How did it all come about that the toll takers line up between the stalk in the field and the cold-storage warehouses, line up between the potatoes in the soil and the commission merchants, line up between the grain fields and the elevators, line up between the noble herds and the packing houses, and, having taken their increasing tolls, switched their line about and, forming on the right, established themselves between the dinner table and the commission merchants, and again take toll compounded on compound, until when the food is consumed we eat not the product of a watchful and benevolent nature, but we eat all of the parsimonious accretions of these thrifty toll takers streaming as they do from pantries to prairies, from kitchens to truck farms, from dinner tables to cornfields?

Too many are busily engaged in complicating life instead of producing something. Too many are turning things over and demanding pay for turning them over. Too many are adding the touch of their useless toll to the products of the soil before they reach the consumer. The manipulator, the hoarder, the impounder, the cold-storage cornerer—all of these in endless variety and in infinite ways divert or dam up the streams of supply.

It is as difficult to get a big red apple that falls blushing to the ground as it is to carry a football through Yale's doughty eleven between the goal posts. The commission merchants and the middlemen are keeping the goals.

You ask me what I would do if I were king. I'd make as straight a line as geography would allow from the cornfields to the cities, and from the orchards, the truck farms, the ranches; and in those cities at the end of that line I'd establish storage warehouses and cold-storage plants, and I'd allow the man who produced them to hang up his product, freeze them if they must be frozen, but only long enough to sell them; to keep them if they must be kept, but only long enough to dispose of them.

And I'd let every consumer in the city find his way to this great emporium of plenty and pay a good, sound price, a profit to the man who made it or produced it, a profit to the man who carried it; and I'd throw so many men out of employment, whose chief employment now is increasing the cost, that they would have to go out and begin to cultivate the soil; and they would add to the production of the country, and that production would add to the store of plenty, and the price would come down sufficiently to enable the people not merely to exist but to live in this world, not to work their nails off to the quick for sufficient to keep body and soul together, but to pursue in the even tenor of their ways congenial employment, with their eyes feasting upon some vision more entrancing than a rump steak.

We do not need industrial justice or social justice or economic justice. What we need is justice. We do not need socialism or communism or nihilism. What we would most profit by would be a little ordinary horse sense.

New York is almost the banner apple State and grape State and milk State, and yet simply because we won't take the time from our maddening pursuit of making big money and spending more the apples are rotting in the orchards while we pay 10 cents apiece.

The milk is turning to whey in the succulent udder and the grapes are withering in an atrophy of inaccessibility; the fruitful hen robbed of the brooding joys of motherhood by the insensate incubator, divorced from her richly plumed paramour by commercial greed, and reduced to the tasteless diet of bone dust and sea shells is made to lay in season and out of season, all for the purpose of choking the storage plants with millions of eggs until their shells become as silver and their yellow yolks as gold.

ALL PRICES ARE INFLATED.

The world has gone mad over fictitious values and inflated prices. Everything has lost its genuine value in the bewildering figures of its arbitrary price. There was a time when the stock market represented alone that illogical region of rumor, where cause had no effect, and effect had no cause; when a lonely shot fired in the far-off Balkan Peninsula would send a local stock to the bottom, when a vigorous sneeze or a prolonged snore of some overfed manipulator would send a feeling of dismay through the Street.

The unsophisticated and ungullible public stood aghast at the superstitious gamblers of Wall Street. But now everybody is gambling with everything, the same as Wall Street gambled with a few things. The gambling which was once confined to bonds is now extended to bread. The juggling which was once limited to stocks is now applied to foodstuffs. The corners that once alarmed only a few stock speculators now startle the old men and the women and children, for they know that the corner includes them.

The gambling which at one time was limited to Wall Street and its hot furnace of speculation has overflowed and swept over the country and poured into all channels of trade. True values have been abolished, intrinsic worth has been forgotten, and everything has been artificially inflated, and everybody stands for it because each is gambling in something and expects to be able to pay for it.

GAMBLING WITH FOOD.

I am liberal enough to allow that anyone who wishes to gamble and juggle and corner may do so if he is gambling and juggling and cornering with others who have the same chance he has, but if I were a sort of benevolent despot I would strangle the men who dared to gamble or juggle with or corner the things which mankind must eat and wear. Better a thousand times the archaic faro table with the persistent idiot hurling himself against the prevailing percentage; better the poker game with its sudden, short, sharp thrill and its ensuing sadness; better all the old forms of gambling with their classical paraphernalia, for only a few went under.

But to convert the great rich earth into a vast gambling table, with all of nature's beautiful and necessary products as the pawns and wagers, until everything is stamped with a gambling value, and every human being drawn into the game whether he plays or not, and every one suffering the losses whether he wagers or not, and nobody but the dealer reaping the profit—this is demoralization; this is not commerce—this is chicanery; this is not economics—this is conspiracy; this is not business—this is blackmail!

Scarcely any man is wise enough to put his finger on the trouble or lay the ax to the root. I am an intense and uncompromising individualist. I abhor the dull program of socialism, which proposes to strap the live man to the corpse in order to create a dead level of equality. But if the gamblers who call themselves merchants, the highwaymen who call themselves business men, the exploiters who call themselves economic units persist in trifling with the very vitals of a country they will have only themselves to blame if all business does not become socialized and if all property is not finally held in common by all.

I firmly believe that the Government should refrain from entering any field of industry which the individual can better develop, but the band of exploiters who constrict the arteries of trade and withhold the free and just circulation of life necessaries are calling down upon themselves the blind wrath of men and women who may not stop in time to preserve a free government and a free people.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I next yield to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. STEPHENS].

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, I am moved by the splendid address of my colleague from Ohio [Mr. FESS] to make some remarks as to the application of this bill to the little one-room school. I had hoped there would be a provision in this bill that would in a manner penalize that institution, or, in other words, stimulate the establishment of a better one in its place. The one-room school to-day is a relic of the past. It ought to be abolished where possible, and in its stead we ought to have a rural school of the sort that this bill can greatly encourage. I would like to see incorporated in this measure if possible a provision that in the agricultural districts this money could be paid only to such schools as conform to some sort of an ideal similar to the one which is in the minds of most men who have considered this subject of rural education. I believe that the six or eight or nine little one-room schools in each township should be consolidated; or, rather, in their place there should be established an agricultural school doing actual farm work.

We have always had a sort of a stereotyped conception that a school must consist of a building with four walls and some one ensconced in that building to teach, when, as a matter of fact, we ought to have in our minds a conception of the object of this education and the best way to get it. Now, what we ought to have, in my judgment, is a miniature agricultural school in each congressional township, established with a view to teaching agriculture and such academic instruction as properly belongs to that subject. It should be strictly a scientific institution. In my judgment we will never make any educational progress in this country until we can get rid of this one-room school, presided over by the little girl teacher, who is not a model either in scholarship or ability to inspire the pupils by any manner of means. We ought to consolidate these rural schools in small centers where men and women of large experience and ability can be employed.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. Yes. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Is the gentleman aware of the fact that in the frontier countries often 10 miles square will not afford more than 20 students in a school? I remember the first school I went to. I had to walk about 2 miles to get to it. The whole building was made of logs, with no floor in it. That is the way my education started. I hope we shall never see the day in the western country when the day schools will be abolished in favor of anything. I think a good agricultural school is one like most of us attended under our father's instruction on the farm.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. Of course, I would not advocate the impossible. We must always have schools fitted to the conditions of each locality. But in the thickly populated agricultural districts there is no excuse whatever for the one-room school. It is inferior in every particular to the one-room school that the gentleman from Texas refers to. That school was presided over by a man of mature years, a man, no doubt, of considerable education, at least of considerable experience. He was fitted in a measure to render some sort of service to that school. But when you substitute for him the identical sort of conditions that the gentleman refers to, only substituting therefor a better building and a little immature girl in charge of the school, you can easily see that no progress whatever can ever be made in the matter of education in our rural districts. We have got to have mature teachers of ability who can inspire and lead in a community.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. FESS. The bill on that particular line is very specific. It writes into the law minimum requirements. It will not give any Federal aid to any building, any plant, any repair, but it does leave it to the Federal board to say what must be done by the State in order that the State may get this appropriation, and in that they take in plans, courses of study, methods of teaching, the qualifications of the teacher, and so on. The thing the gentleman from Nebraska is afraid of certainly could not happen under a wide-awake State board, because the Federal board would not approve of any application of this money unless those plans are met.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. I hope that the provision in the bill that the gentleman refers to would operate in this way at least, to add to the teacher's pay, in order that a higher grade of teacher might be employed. But this it can not do. It can not bring to that little one-room school, with 10 or 15 pupils, a high-class man or woman who could render that district a great service. Now, the sort of school that I have in mind is one of a size that will enable the people of that locality to bring to their service a high-grade man or woman as supervisor. This school will operate on the farm and will be conducted under actual practical methods. It will not be an indoors school any more than a farm is operated indoors.

It will be a school of shops, classrooms, drafting rooms, and laboratories, everything built on that farm, which is a real farm, not a make-believe farm, presided over by a man of real ability, who will be a leader in the community. This will be a school not only for children but for farmers, landowners, and farm hands. I want this money to encourage building schools of this sort, and not frittered away on the little isolated one-room school, presided over by a little immature girl teacher. Such an expenditure, in my judgment, would be a sheer waste of money.

Mr. FESS. If the gentleman will permit, if the Federal board should say to the State board, "No money shall be paid unless you meet the qualifications as to the teacher"——

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. That is the only fear I have. The board may not say so. I will say to the gentleman that I am very enthusiastic for this bill. I believe it is the opening wedge. I believe it is going to mean more toward preparing our citizenship for the duties of self-government than any measure I have ever had the privilege of supporting. But it is essential that we should provide some means in this measure by which these appropriations could not possibly be used by a State board for the purpose simply of increasing the wages of one of these poorly paid rural teachers without raising her standard. We should devise some plan whereby we can attract a man or woman of real quality, which is impossible in the case of a small one-room school of from 5 to 20 pupils. Good results can not be had from them, no matter what you pay, because the conditions will never attract the higher sort of teachers that ought to be employed in these schools.

Mr. FESS. If the gentleman will permit, the Vocational Commission, in looking to the feasibility of aiding this movement, takes into consideration the fact that the payment of salaries would be an important item in the conduct of the school, and in order to get what the gentleman is asking for, a higher grade teacher, it is necessary for the Federal Government to give the State assistance. Otherwise it would simply mean to increase the salary of those teachers already employed. That would not do at all. It is to find somebody to do the work that the present ones can not do.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. I think the gentleman from Ohio is entirely correct is his view.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Nebraska has expired.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, I am sure that every member of the committee feels very greatly indebted to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS] for his very splendid presentation of the purposes of this bill and his explanation of its details. He has stated that there are but few controverted points between the Senate bill and the House bill, and that is true. It is one of those controverted points that I want very briefly to discuss at this time.

I wish to discuss it now, rather than to wait until the bill shall actually come before us for consideration, because I think it is a matter of such importance that the success or failure of this bill when it is enacted into law will depend very largely upon how Congress shall deal with that fundamental point, and I sincerely hope that, between now and the time when this bill shall be actually considered by us, the membership of this House will give serious consideration to the matter that I propose to discuss. That matter is the method of the organization of this Federal board.

As Dr. FESS has stated, the Senate bill provides for an ex officio board composed of five members of the Cabinet. The House bill provides for a board consisting of five members, four of them to be appointed by the President of the United States, no more than two of whom shall belong to the same political body, and the fifth member, the Commissioner of Education, who shall ex officio be a member of the board. Now, to my mind, neither of these systems or methods will bring about the result that ought to be gained by the enactment of this bill. There are only two grounds upon which Federal aid for this purpose can to my mind be justified: One, to secure the establishment of practical standards of vocational education; second, to stimulate the States by Federal aid to accept these standards. I have no sympathy with the view sometimes expressed that the Federal Government should aid the States in carrying the burdens of vocational education. On the contrary, any State that to-day has any practical system of vocational education can well afford to continue it out of its own funds, for there is no expenditure that the State can make that will bring better or larger returns to it than a practical system of vocational education. But it is necessary to establish practical standards, and in order to secure the adoption of those standards it is necessary that Federal aid such as is proposed in this bill be given.

Now, the House bill provides that the Commissioner of Education shall ex officio be the chairman of the board; that four members shall be appointed by the President. And I am afraid that that is going to mean that the fixing of these standards and the control of this subject will be in the hands of general educators rather than in the hands of practical men. And I want to say very frankly that I do not believe general educators are qualified to fix standards for vocational education such as we ought to have in the United States. It is no reflection upon any general educator when I say that, any more than it might be considered to be a reflection upon me if some one should say that I was not qualified to perform a surgical operation.

In the fixing of these standards we all agree that they should be practical standards. They should be standards such as, when adopted by the State, are going to result in training boys and girls for vocations. Is that going to be secured unless those standards are passed upon by practical men? If not passed upon by practical men, they will be fixed by an examination in the field, in the first instance, by trained men, it is true, college graduates, trained investigators in getting raw material, but who have never had any practical experience in industry or in trade. They in turn will send their reports in to the Bureau of Labor or other department, as the case may be. That raw material will be interpreted by experts who have never had any practical experience, and finally general educators through these channels will fix the standards and they themselves are not practical men in these lines. So we have theory from beginning to end as against the fixing of standards by practical men. So it is my purpose at the proper time to offer an amendment providing, as the House bill provides, for five members of this general board, the Commissioner of Education to be a member ex officio, four members to be appointed by the President of the United States, but with the qualification that one of those members shall be representative of labor, one of them representative of manufacturing, one representative of commerce, and one representative of agriculture. And I want to say, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, that this method which I shall at the proper time propose is not only indorsed but it is urged by the United States Chamber of Commerce, by the National Association of Manufacturers, and by the American Federation of Labor. And I want to suggest——

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LENROOT. Yes.

Mr. FESS. I would say to the gentleman that that proposition was before the committee, and they went over it very carefully, and we had some fear that to designate these special activities might in a sense restrict the President in his appointments. We believed that with the bill specifying that there must not be a separation of the theoretical from the practical, but that the practical must be carried into effect by specifying how many hours shall be devoted to practical things, no President would be so unwise as to appoint on the board simply educators.

Mr. LENROOT. Oh, I do not say, nor do I think, it would follow that all of them would be educators; but the gentleman knows that in the testimony before his committee the Commissioner of Education himself stated that he believed he should fix these standards from information gathered by specialists.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield again?

Mr. LENROOT. Yes.

Mr. FESS. While it is true that the Commissioner of Education made that statement, is there any fear in your mind that your plan would produce the dual control of education, having one board for the vocational and one board for the general education?

Mr. LENROOT. I do not fear that, because with the Commissioner of Education a member ex officio of the board it would take care of that portion of the subject that ought to be intercorrelated and administered together.

Mr. FESS. I wish to say to the gentleman that that is the only feature in it that I was afraid of.

Mr. LENROOT. But if there be anything in the objection, it seems to me very clear that it is very greatly outweighed by the other proposition, that instead of these standards being fixed theoretically they ought to be fixed by practical men—men who know for themselves rather than to depend upon others for their views.

My amendment will also cover one other proposition, and that is to permit the appointment of advisory committees by this general board, representing these different fields, to assist them in the administration of the law, with a limitation upon the expenditures that may be made by this committee of not exceeding $50,000 per year.

Mr. FESS. May I ask whether that would come out of the $200,000?

Mr. LENROOT. Yes; out of the $200,000.

Mr. FESS. And it would not increase the appropriation?

Mr. LENROOT. Not at all.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I will yield the gentleman five minutes more.

Mr. LENROOT. Going back to where I was interrupted, where I was stating that the method I proposed has the indorsement of the National Chamber of Commerce, the National Association of Manufacturers, and the American Federation of Labor, I want to suggest that if upon any question the American Federation of Labor and the National Association of Manufacturers can agree, it is a matter of very serious consideration for the membership of this House. With reference to the United States Chamber of Commerce, the Members of the House no doubt have received a pamphlet from them where the Chamber of Commerce specifically asks for the amendment of the bill in the certain particulars that I propose to offer as an amendment here. The National Association of Manufacturers has adopted a resolution declaring that in their opinion that board should be made up of the interests specially to be advanced—labor, employment, and education. The American Federation of Labor in its report to the executive committee made at their annual convention last month used this language:

> We had hoped that the provisions of the act relative to the board would have been changed so that the Secretaries of the several Departments of Agriculture, Interior, Commerce, and Labor would not have been delegated as the board. We felt that their duties are already altogether too onerous and too complex to have this additional responsibility thrust upon them. There is, in addition, a double danger in having department Secretaries serve as the Federal board for vocational education—first, administrations and administrative officials are subject to quadrennial changes, and it has happened in the past that sometimes Cabinet members have been changed several times during an administration. This objection in itself should be sufficient for us to object to the Federal vocational education board being so constituted; the second objection is a more serious one, namely, that of the possible injection of partisanship into the administration of this new field of educational effort.
> It is our opinion that this new board should be composed of representative men but not partisan representatives of the administration in power. Its personnel should represent the great fundamental activities of life, namely, agriculture, labor, commerce, industry, and education, and the local advisory boards should be equally representative, so that the human activities of the Republic could feel assured that experienced, tested men from their own vocations, such as labor, commerce, agriculture, industry, and education should be fairly and efficiently represented.
> It is our opinion that when this measure is once launched it should be directed along proper channels at the start. If we permit politicians to direct its energies, there is a danger that it may become a mere political adjunct of the party in power. If we permit the present academic educational group of the Nation to dominate, the whole force and virtue of genuine vocational trade training will be in danger of being lost sight of and the Nation's appropriations will probably be misdirected along minor lines of endeavor, such as manual training, amateur mechanics, and other trifling, impractical, valueless schemes. Neither can we afford to permit this great measure to be overweighted by any special trade, commercial, or vocational interests. The agriculturists should not predominate, neither should the commercial or even the labor and industrial interests. We should insist that the board be properly balanced to start with, and that the interest of each of the great divisions of activity should be fairly and properly conserved; and unless we are otherwise instructed by this convention we shall make endeavors to change the proposed law according to the lines herein laid down.

That, Mr. Chairman, is the view of the American Federation of Labor. Now, I submit that the views of the manufacturers and of labor when they agree upon a proposition like this are entitled not only to weight in this House but, in a matter of this kind, ought, it seems to me, to control, rather than the views of the general educators, who, very humanly, desire to have for themselves all the power that they can get. It is no reflection, as I said a moment ago, upon the general educators that they desire this power; but if this is to be a workable and successful measure, as I hope it will be, we ought to do everything within our power to make it practical in every sense of the word.

Mr. SLOAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LENROOT. Yes.

Mr. SLOAN. The gentleman has quoted the American Federation of Labor and the National Association of Manufacturers. Has the bill in its present form been favored by the grangers of the United States?

Mr. LENROOT. Yes, generally; I do not know about its present form.

Mr. SLOAN. And favored by the Farmers' Union?

Mr. LENROOT. I do not know that they have taken any action as to the details. The general purpose of the bill, as the gentleman knows, is favored by everybody.

Mr. SLOAN. Are not their views as important as those of the American Association of Manufacturers or the American Federation of Labor?

Mr. LENROOT. Yes; and if I had those views, I would be glad to present them, whatever they might be.

Now, the amendment which I shall propose will be, in substance, as follows:

Amend H. R. 11250 by striking out all of lines 17 to 25, on page 8, and the words "per annum," on page 9, and insert section 6—

"That a Federal board for vocational education is hereby created, to consist of the United States Commissioner of Education and four citizens of the United States to be appointed by the President; one of said four citizens shall be an employer of labor engaged in manufacturing, one engaged in commercial pursuits, one a representative of labor, and one a person engaged in agriculture. The board shall elect annually one of its members as chairman. It shall have the power to employ an executive secretary and such assistants as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act. In the first instance two members shall be appointed for two years and two for four years, and all subsequent appointments shall be for four years. The members of the board, other than the United States Commissioner of Education, shall each receive a salary of $5,000 per annum.

"Said board shall from time to time appoint advisory committees, made up of persons representing industry, commerce, labor, agriculture, home making, or general or vocational education, to assist them by advice in the administration of this act, and may fix the compensation of the members of such advisory committees, but not more than $50,000 shall be expended by the board in any fiscal year for this purpose."

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, how much time is left for general debate?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas has 12 minutes and the gentleman from Kansas 3 minutes.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I desire to yield the rest of my time to the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. NORTON], a member of the committee, if he wants it.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman, in the three minutes I have I simply want to say that it is peculiarly fortunate that the discussion on the vocational bill has taken place on this Indian appropriation bill. Nothing is more important to the Indian than that he should have vocational education. The chairman of this committee, who, unfortunately for the Indian, is now directing his last Indian appropriation bill through the House, has been insisting for years upon vocational training for the Indian. He and I have had a cherished plan of creating a great university for the training of Indians and Indian teachers in agriculture and other vocations with a view of getting something like the value of a dollar for the Indian out of every dollar appropriated for his support and civilization. It is unfortunate that the plan of vocational education for Indians has not been further advanced, and I take this opportunity of calling the attention of the Members of the House to the debate that has occurred upon the vocational education bill, which has been projected into the debate upon this Indian appropriation bill, and I ask them to make application of the practicability of that sort of education for the Indian, and to aid in making substantial and proper provision for that sort of education for the Indians in the future.

I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. NORTON].

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. NORTON].

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to discuss briefly a few questions pertaining to the Indian appropriation bill now before the committee. Let me emphasize at the outset that the very foundation of the education of the Indian must from the nature of the Indian's condition and needs be primarily vocational. It has been along that line for years and is now and, of course, must so continue in the future if it is to be of the greatest possible benefit to the Indian. During the past summer it has been my privilege to visit a number of the Indian schools and a number of the Indian agencies of the country, and to observe the work that is being done at these schools and agencies. At nearly all of the Indian schools which I visited the educational work being done is most commendable. Last October for a day I visited the Indian school at Genoa, Nebr. There the work of education is practically altogether along vocational lines. The boys are taught farming, carpentering, shopwork, printing, and other useful and practical trades. The girls are taught housekeeping, sewing, dressmaking, general home economics, and dairying. They are at this school carrying on a very fine industrial and utilitarian course of training for the more than 400 Indian boys and girls in attendance. They have at this school one of the finest herds of registered Holstein-Friesian cattle in the country and they also have one of the finest herds of Duroc Jersey hogs to be found in the United States. They raised on the school farm the grand champion Duroc Jersey aged sow of this year. This sow won this year the grand championship at the Omaha Exposition, and at the Iowa State Fair. Their Holstein-Friesian herd took many prizes at fairs where they were shown.

What I particularly desire to say in a few words is concerning the tendency in the administration of Indian affairs that we find in governmental affairs generally in the United States—that tendency of the Federal Government to increase and hold perpetual supervision over the Indians, the same tendency we find in the Federal Government to assume control and supervision of a great many functions of government which formerly were held to properly belong to the State and to the local community.

We have in the House Committee on Indian Affairs a great deal of pressure brought to bear to have the committee take up the care and education of Indians who have been caring for themselves in the different States for many years. We have knocking at the door of the Indian Committee to-day the case of Indians in North Carolina and the case of Indians in Mississippi. This demand involves to my mind one of the large principles in the administration of Indian affairs. A question that Congress should definitely settle soon is, Whether it shall be the policy of the Government to educate Indians to that degree where they can care for themselves and then separate them from the guardianship of the Government, or whether the Government shall treat as wards of the Government those who are classed as Indians as long as that classification can in any way be attached to them? I think that the day should soon come when the Indian Bureau ought to be abolished and when all the Indians in the several States should be required to provide for themselves. I believe that our educational system as it applies to the Indians should be such that they will soon, in every State, be brought to a condition where they will be self-supporting and be able to take care of and provide for themselves, and that then they will no longer be treated or considered wards of the Government. The other day before the Indian Committee we had a case presented to us of Indians in Mississippi who for more than a half century have been caring and providing for themselves. We were told that this year five or six hundred Indians down there had suffered crop failures; that they were in a poor and distressed condition; that their children were not receiving the educational advantages which the petitioners thought they should have; and that in consequence good reason existed why the Federal Government should make an appropriation to care for those Indians and provide for the education of their children. We have had recently practically the same claims made for Indians in North Carolina.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NORTON. I shall be pleased to yield in just a moment. I want to say this, that if these requests are granted, we are going to enter upon a policy where the Government will eventually take over the care of the Indians in New York, Ohio, Michigan, and other States who have been caring and providing for themselves for many years—these Indians who have acquired a citizenship in the several States, and who now have all of the rights and responsibilities that devolve upon white citizens in these States. I do not believe and do not expect that this Government can pursue any system of education or administration for the Indians that will enable every Indian to be and continue to be a well-to-do, rich, prosperous, and always happy member of society when he is released from the guardianship of the Government. The Indian when given a good vocational education should be freed from Government restrictions and be required to make his own living in the industrial life of the Nation. I now yield to the gentleman from Mississippi, Mr. HARRISON.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I wanted to ask the gentleman a question. He referred to the Mississippi Indians.

Mr. NORTON. I referred to them because very recently we had a very urgent request to make an appropriation of Federal funds for the benefit of Indians in that State. I do not mean to say that the Indians in Mississippi who have been given citizenship rights in that State many long years ago are in any different position or should be dealt with differently than many Indians in Maine, New York, Michigan, or some of the Indians that have recently been given citizenship in my own State.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. I wanted to get some information. The gentleman said it came up in the committee. Was that in the form of a report about the Mississippi Indians?

Mr. NORTON. Yes; the request was supported by a report.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. What kind of a report was it?

Mr. NORTON. The request was presented by one of the very able members of the committee representing one of the congressional districts in Mississippi. The report was one made by an inspector of the Bureau of Indian Affairs.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. Was it based on a report from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, through the Secretary of the Interior, about the condition of the Mississippi Indians?

Mr. NORTON. I will say that it was based upon a report received from the Bureau of Indian Affairs. It is in just that kind of reports that lies the danger of Congress being led into adopting the policy to which I have called attention. Whenever a question is submitted to the Indian Bureau as to whether the Government shall provide aid for Indians scattered here or there throughout the country the Indian Bureau, whether intentionally or otherwise, to perpetuate itself, finds a reason to report that something should be done by the Federal Government for such Indians. The Indian Bureau did it in this case and will, I venture to say, do it in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred that may be referred to it. It is not surprising at all that a great bureau like the Indian Bureau, made up of hundreds of civil-service employees, would want to continue its hold and supervision of the Indians throughout the country and enlarge and perpetuate itself. This policy of which I speak can not safely be left to the employees in the Indian Bureau to decide. It is a question that Congress should and must meet squarely; a question that Congress should and must definitely decide for the best interest of the Nation and for the highest welfare of the Indians.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. The reason I ask is because I have not been able to see the report. I understand it has just been filed and has not been printed, and that it states to the committee that these Indians in Mississippi should be taken care of. Now, does the gentleman feel, under the North Dakota item, an item should be written in "for support and civilization of the Sioux at Devils Lake, N. Dak., including pay of employees, $5,000," and several other items along that line for the State, and that at the same time the committee should have turned down a request that came from the Interior Department saying that certain things should be done for the Mississippi Indians?

Mr. NORTON. I want to say to the gentleman in all frankness and fairness, having in mind only the best interests of the country at large and what I believe to be the best interests of the Indians, that I believe that the sooner a great many of the Indians of the Devils Lake Indian Reservation, the Fort Berthold and the Standing Rock Indian Reservations are placed upon their own resources and freed from the guardianship of the Government it will be better for the Indians and for the Nation. The restrictions from many of the Indians on these reservations have been removed, and such Indians have taken upon themselves the full responsibilities of citizens of our States. Such Indians, as a rule, are doing splendidly for themselves and families. I trust the Government will never take a backward step and provide an appropriation for the care and education of these Indians who have been given full citizenship rights.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. Oh, but the gentleman did not exactly answer my question.

Mr. NORTON. I would deeply regret and I believe it would be a serious error and a dangerous policy for the Federal Government to go backward and in Mississippi, North Carolina, New York, Michigan, or in any other State provide a Federal appropriation for Indians whose restrictions were removed many years ago.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. If the gentleman will permit—and I do not desire to trespass upon his time, but this is along the question of education—the trouble is that in North Dakota and many of the other States the Federal Government for the past 10, 15, or 20 years, maybe longer than that, has been appropriating money for that very purpose. They have not in Mississippi. If the gentleman will recall the fight that has been made for the Mississippi Choctaws, that very condition was pointed out—that in the event they were not permitted to share in the tribal funds in time the Government of the United States would have to put up some money, and that report shows now that that condition has come about.

Mr. NORTON. I will say to the gentleman this, that there is a very great distinction between Indians who have been surrounded by white civilization for 75 or 100 years in the Carolinas, in Mississippi, and in other of the older States, and the Indians in North Dakota, who have been off the warpath for only about 25 or 30 years; in fact, some not longer than 20 years.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. The gentleman's State has had civilization longer than that.

Mr. NORTON. No; not very much longer than 30 years near these reservations.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. All time has expired, and the Clerk will read the bill under the five-minute rule.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the purchase of goods and supplies for the Indian Service, including inspection, pay of necessary employees, and all other expenses connected therewith, including advertising, storage, and transportation of Indian goods and supplies, $300,000: Provided, That no part of the sum hereby appropriated shall be used for the maintenance of to exceed two warehouses in the Indian Service.

Mr. IGOE. Mr. Chairman, I wish to offer an amendment. Page 9, line 3, strike out the word "two" and insert the words "three permanent."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 9, line 3, strike out the word "two" and insert the words "three permanent."

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against that, that it is new legislation and not recommended.

Mr. IGOE. Then, Mr. Chairman, may I suggest that no point of order having been made on the paragraph which is new legislation the gentleman can not make a point of order on this amendment. The last appropriation bill read "two permanent warehouses." Now, that was allowed to go by without a point of order, and I think this amendment of mine, therefore, is in order.

Mr. MANN. It is a mere appropriation; there is no point of order against it.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The last bill provided for two permanent warehouses, and we struck out the word "permanent."

Mr. MANN. The last bill did not provide for two permanent warehouses. It only provided that the appropriation should be for the maintenance of not more than two permanent warehouses. That is a mere limitation, and this amendment is a mere limitation. I think it is a bad proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, then I ask for a vote on it.

Mr. IGOE. Mr. Chairman, the appropriation bill this year changes the provision of last year for two permanent warehouses by striking out the word "permanent." I desire to insert three permanent warehouses, and that is on the recommendation of the department. It seems to me that anyone who reads the recommendation of the department must come to the conclusion that the three permanent warehouses should be retained. The department now maintains not only three permanent but two temporary warehouses, which they say are necessary for the proper conduct of the business. Now, I want to read what the department says about that:

Because of the elimination of two warehouses, most of the firms in Omaha and many in New York have unexpectedly stopped bidding on our supplies, only a few of the larger ones having submitted bids during the past year. The further elimination of another warehouse this year, in compliance with the 1917 appropriation, will aggravate the situation. Therefore while the Indian Service can no doubt handle the shipments with two permanent warehouses and such temporary receiving stations as may be required for short periods, there is no doubt now but that the withdrawals of the bidders in either Chicago, St. Louis, or San Francisco will have a serious affect on the prices paid for goods and supplies, particularly at this time when we need all the competition that can be obtained in order to keep down the prices.

Further, the department says in its report that the abolishment of the warehouses will mean an additional expense of $100,000 a year to the Indian Service.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. IGOE. Yes.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman says the department; from what is the gentleman reading?

Mr. IGOE. This is the report of the Bureau of Indian Affairs.

Mr. MANN. Is it the report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs?

Mr. IGOE. The Commissioner of Indian Affairs has prepared this statement and submitted it to the committee. It is in the hearings, the entire statement.

Mr. MANN. It is in the hearings and not in his annual report?

Mr. IGOE. It is the statement of the assistant commissioner in the hearings.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I will state that page 61 in the hearings on the present bill is where it begins.

Mr. IGOE. I know.

Mr. MANN. I just wanted to know who was reversing himself, that is all.

Mr. IGOE. This is the report from one representing the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, who appeared before the committee, and he positively recommends three permanent warehouses, and he wants to have permission to have these temporary warehouses in case they are needed, and it simply means that if they have only two permanent warehouses they are going to lose money and not save it. This is the only time I ever heard of a committee, in face of the department stating they would save money for them if they would give them a certain thing, saying that they did not want to save money in that way. By the abolishment of the warehouses they did save $10,000 but they were deprived of competition. If you abolish all of them it means that the goods are delivered to the different reservations at additional expense to the Government, so says the assistant commissioner, of over $100,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. IGOE].

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. On page 61 I find this language in the hearings of this year:

> The other expenses chargeable to this appropriation are for the maintenance of the warehouses. Prior to the year 1915 these were five in number, but during that year the number was reduced to three. However, the two could not be discontinued until late in this fiscal year. The appropriation act for 1917 provides that another warehouse shall be discontinued during the present year, leaving but two. The figures for the different fiscal years are not therefore strictly comparable.

And the department has found time and again, and this seems to have been after a series of investigations, that they should reduce it to two, and have done so.

Mr. IGOE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I will.

Mr. IGOE. Is it not true that the department at the present time has been obliged to retain that third warehouse that you thought to eliminate last year?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Only temporarily.

Mr. IGOE. It is still maintained, and further than that, they already maintain two of the other warehouses temporarily, because under the law as it read before, they could only keep three permanent warehouses, but could take such temporary warehouses as they needed. Now, you want to write it so that they will have to keep two permanent warehouses, and you will not give them authority, if they need it, to establish a temporary warehouse at any time. That is what is wanted to be accomplished by this amendment.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. That is the law.

Mr. IGOE. The law now says not exceeding three permanent warehouses.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Two permanent warehouses.

Mr. IGOE. Not to exceed two permanent warehouses, but they can establish temporary ones if we need them.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. As I understand it, the explanation before the committee was that they had quite a number of valuable supplies for the Indians of the United States, and they did not——

Mr. IGOE. That was Omaha and New York.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman let me explain?

Mr. IGOE. I will.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Would it not be a very bad idea to take them from the present temporary warehouses and put them in permanent warehouses, and not distribute what they have on hand to the Indians from the temporary warehouses? And then they would do away with all the warehouses except two, and then they would put those in there.

Mr. IGOE. If the gentleman will pardon me, the gentleman who appeared before the committee said that if he had two he would comply with the law if they needed two warehouses, but his statement was that they needed more than two permanent warehouses in order to get advantage of the bidding in these different cities. If you have your way about it, you will ship the goods to the reservation at greater expense to the Government than is now the case.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. IGOE].

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I had not read the statement before the Committee on Indian Affairs this year. For a great many years the Indian Office has been seeking to reduce the number of warehouses to one. There used to be one in New York, one in Chicago, one in St. Louis, one in Omaha, and one in San Francisco, and year after year Mr. Meritt, now the Assistant Commissioner of Indian Affairs, urged upon Congress that all of these be abolished, with, I think, the exception of one. It may be that he has learned by experience. If it be true, Mr. Chairman, that the location of an Indian warehouse in a city is necessary in order to get bids on goods that are advertised for, there is something wrong with the Indian Office.

Mr. IGOE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Wait a minute. Men ought to have the opportunity to bid on even terms, wherever they are located, on goods supplied to the Government. It may be there is some favoritism, but of that I do not know. Some years ago the West charged that in the purchase of supplies for the War Department there was no attention given to people who bid from the West. I do not know. I thought that was a mistake then, and I think it is a mistake now; that is, I do not think it was correct. But the mere location of a warehouse ought not to determine whether some one will receive even and fair treatment about bids when the Government advertises for supplies. I can hardly believe that the Indian Office takes the position that it does not deal fairly with everybody who wants to bid on Government supplies. It is not possible to purchase all of the supplies of the Government in one locality with economy. Some localities furnish one kind of supplies cheaper than another. Another locality furnishes another kind of supplies. As far as I am concerned, I do not care how many Indian warehouses there are or where they are. I was only attracted to the floor by the statement made by my distinguished friend from Missouri, Mr. IGOE, to whom I now yield if he wishes to ask me a question.

Mr. IGOE. Mr. Chairman, I just wanted to suggest to the gentleman from Illinois one of the reasons why it profits the Government to keep these there and also profits the men who bid, and that is the saving in the freight rates, the land-grant rates. The Assistant Commissioner was asked the question on that proposition, and gave the table showing the saving in the rates, whereas if these people have to bid for shipment to the reservation, or ship supplies themselves, they can not get the rate; but the Government does get the rate and these people have inspection at the places where the warehouses are located.

Mr. MANN. That matter was all fought over by the Indian Office before they made their previous recommendation, I will say to the gentleman from Missouri. They said then there was nothing to it. I do not know whether there is or not.

Mr. IGOE. They presented a very exhaustive report showing there is a great deal to it.

Mr. MANN. It was at the instance of the Indian Office that the first proposition came to abolish the warehouses. They persistently assaulted Congress, declaring that Congress was extravagant because we did not accede to their wishes. They persistently and continually insisted that there was no occasion for the whole of these Indian warehouses, and declared that the Congress kept them in the bill as a matter of political "pie." They made that statement. Now, when Congress follows their lead, they turn around and turn the other way.

Mr. IGOE. That is unquestionably what they report now.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the "noes" seemed to have it.

Mr. IGOE. A division, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri demands a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 5, noes 28.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For pay of six Indian Service inspectors, exclusive of one chief inspector, at salaries not to exceed $2,500 per annum and actual traveling and incidental expenses, and $3 per diem in lieu of subsistence when actually employed on duty in the field, $30,000.

Mr. McCRACKEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Idaho offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MCCRACKEN: Page 10, line 4, after the figures "$30,000" insert "Provided, That the salary of the chief inspector shall not exceed $3,000 per annum, together with his actual traveling expenses and $3 per diem in lieu of subsistence when actually employed on duty."

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on the amendment. It is new legislation and does not reduce the appropriation, and it is not estimated for.

Mr. McCRACKEN. Mr. Chairman, this will not increase the salary of anyone. It simply designates what the salary shall be of the chief inspector. The bill specifies six inspectors.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. But is it not new legislation?

Mr. McCRACKEN. Not at all. The six inspectors will draw $15,000, and you are appropriating $15,000 for expenses. You are simply estimating that this will be the expense of the six, together with the expense of the chief inspector. What I want to get at is that you fix the salary of this chief inspector, and that you also put a limitation on his traveling expenses exactly as you do with the other special agents.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. But that is existing law—$2,500 per annum for the chief inspector.

Mr. McCRACKEN. Does the chief inspector now get $2,500?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The paragraph reads:

For pay of six Indian Service inspectors, exclusive of one chief inspector, at salaries not to exceed $2,500 per annum.

That is the same language that was carried last year. It is the same appropriation.

Mr. McCRACKEN. But this paragraph reads, "exclusive of the chief inspector." I desire to fix the salary of the chief inspector by this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Texas insist on his point of order?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Yes. I insist on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks it is subject to a point of order. It is new legislation.

Mr. MANN. Is it not a mere limitation, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is not familiar with the statute.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The point is that it changes existing law, and of course it would be new legislation.

Mr. MANN. Of course if it is a mere limitation it is not subject to the point of order. It may be a question of fact whether the inspector's salary is paid out of this appropriation. Of course if it is not, this would not be a limitation upon this appropriation.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, this item does not provide for the pay of the salary of the chief inspector at all. It pays for the salary of six inspectors, exclusive of the chief inspector, but his salary is provided in some other way.

Mr. McCRACKEN. Mr. Chairman, I submit——

Mr. NORTON. I say clearly the amendment is subject to the point of order made against it under this item.

The CHAIRMAN. Does this item carry the salary of the chief inspector?

Mr. NORTON. It does not.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. The amendment is not germane.

Mr. McCRACKEN. I should like to ask the gentleman from North Dakota if this bill provides anywhere for the salary of the chief inspector?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. It does not.

Mr. NORTON. I do not recall that there is a particular provision in this bill for the salary of the chief inspector. It is not provided for in this item.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. If the gentleman will permit me, I will say that my recollection is that the salary of the chief inspector is provided for in the legislative appropriation bill, his office being located in Washington, and it is a matter over which the Committee on Indian Affairs has no jurisdiction.

Mr. NORTON. That probably answers the inquiry of the gentleman from Idaho.

Mr. McCRACKEN. With that explanation of the gentleman from Oklahoma, Mr. Chairman, I shall not insist upon my amendment; but I want to make sure that he knows that that is the case. Now, who is the chief inspector?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I do not know what his name is.

Mr. McCRACKEN. What is his salary at the present time?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I regret to say to the gentleman that I could not give that information. His salary is carried in another bill.

The CHAIRMAN. It certainly would not be germane to this bill if the salary of the chief inspector were carried in an entirely different bill.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. The Committee on Indian Affairs has no jurisdiction whatever over the salaries of the employees located in the city of Washington.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For reimbursing Indians for live stock which may be hereafter destroyed on account of being infected with dourine or other contagious diseases, and for expenses in connection with the work of eradicating and preventing such diseases, to be expended under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe, $50,000: Provided, That not to exceed $15,000 of this amount may be used in reimbursing Indians for horses killed previous to the passage of the act of May 18, 1916, for which they have not heretofore been reimbursed.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that, beginning with line 19, page 12, the bill may be read as one paragraph down to and including line 10, on page 19.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] asks unanimous consent that, beginning on page 12, line 19, and ending on page 19, line 10, the bill may be read as one paragraph. Is there objection?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I have no objection. It all relates to the same subject.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and hereby is, authorized and empowered, under general regulations to be fixed by him and under such terms and conditions as he may prescribe, not inconsistent with the terms of this act, to lease to citizens of the United States or to any association of such persons or to any corporation organized under the laws of the United States or of any State or Territory thereof, any part of the unallotted lands within any Indian reservation heretofore withdrawn from entry under the mining laws for the purpose of mining for deposits of gold, silver, copper, and other valuable metalliferous minerals, which leases shall be irrevocable, except as herein provided, but which may be declared null and void upon breach of any of their terms.

That after the passage and approval of this act, unallotted lands within Indian reservations heretofore withheld from disposition under the mining laws may be declared by the Secretary of the Interior to be subject to exploration for and discovery of deposits of gold, silver, copper, and other valuable metalliferous minerals by citizens of the United States, and after such declaration mining claims may be located by such citizens in the same manner as mining claims are located under the mining laws of the United States: Provided, That the locators of all such mining claims, or their heirs, successors, or assigns, shall have a preference right to apply to the Secretary of the Interior for a lease, under the terms and conditions of this act, within one year after the date of the location of any mining claim, and any such locator who shall fail to apply for a lease within one year from the date of location shall forfeit all rights to such mining claim: Provided further, That duplicate copies of the location notice shall be filed within 60 days with the superintendent in charge of the reservation on which the mining claim is located, and that application for a lease under this act may be filed with such superintendent for transmission through official channels to the Secretary of the Interior.

That leases under this act shall be for a period of 30 years, with the preferential right in the lessee to renew the same for successive periods of 10 years upon such reasonable terms and conditions as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, unless otherwise provided by law at the time of the expiration of such periods: Provided, That the lessee may, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, be permitted at any time to make written relinquishment of all rights under such a lease and upon acceptance thereof be thereby relieved of all future obligations under said lease.

That in addition to areas of mineral land to be included in leases under this act the Secretary of the Interior, in his discretion, may grant to the lessee the right to use, during the life of the lease, a tract of unoccupied land, not exceeding 80 acres in area, for camp sites, milling, smelting, and refining works, and for other purposes connected with and necessary to the proper development and use of the deposits covered by the lease.

That the Secretary of the Interior, in his discretion, in making any lease under this act, may reserve to the United States the right to lease, sell, or otherwise dispose of the surface of the lands embraced within such lease under existing law or laws hereafter enacted, in so far as said surface is not necessary for use of the lessee in extracting and removing the deposits therein: Provided, That the said Secretary, during the life of the lease, is hereby authorized to issue such permits for easements herein provided to be reserved.

That any successor in interest or assignee of any lease granted under this act, whether by voluntary transfer, judicial sale, foreclosure sale, or otherwise, shall be subject to all the conditions of the approval under which such rights are held and also subject to all the provisions and conditions of this act to the same extent as though such successor or assign were the original lessee hereunder.

That any lease granted under this act may be forfeited and canceled by appropriate proceedings in the United States district court for the district in which said property or some part thereof is situated whenever the lessee, after reasonable notice in writing, as prescribed in the lease, shall fail to comply with the terms of this act or with such conditions not inconsistent herewith as may be specifically recited in the lease.

That for the privilege of mining or extracting the mineral deposits in the ground covered by the lease the lessee shall pay to the United States, for the benefit of the Indians, a royalty which, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, shall not be less than 5 per cent of the gross value of the output of the minerals at the mine, due and payable at the end of each month succeeding that of the extraction of the minerals from the mine, and an annual rental, payable at the date of such lease and annually thereafter on the area covered by such lease, at the rate of 25 cents per acre for the first calendar year thereafter; 50 cents per acre for the second, third, fourth, and fifth years, respectively; and $1 per acre for each and every year thereafter during the continuance of the lease, except that such rental for any year shall be credited against the royalties as they accrue for that year.

That in addition to the payment of the royalties and rentals as herein provided the lessee shall expend annually not less than $100 in development work for each mining claim located or leased in the same manner as an annual expenditure for labor or improvements is required to be made under the mining laws of the United States.

That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to examine the books and accounts of lessees, and to require them to submit statements, representations, or reports, including information as to cost of mining, all of which statements, representations, or reports so required shall be upon oath, unless otherwise specified, and in such form and upon such blanks as the Secretary of the Interior may require; and any person making any false statement, representation, or report under oath shall be subject to punishment as for perjury.

That all moneys received from royalties and rentals under the provisions of this act shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the Indians belonging and having tribal rights on the reservation where the leased land is located, which moneys shall be at all times subject to appropriation by Congress for their education, support, and civilization.

That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to perform any and all acts and to make such rules and regulations not inconsistent with this act as may be necessary and proper for the protection of the interests of the Indians and for the purpose of carrying the provisions of this act into full force and effect: Provided, That nothing in this act shall be construed or held to affect the right of the State or other local authority to exercise any rights which they may have to levy and collect taxes upon improvements, output of mines, or other rights, property, or assets of any lessee.

That the provisions of this act relating to mining for metalliferous minerals on Indian reservations shall not apply to the Five Civilized Tribes and Osage Nation of Indians in Oklahoma.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph which has just been read.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman state his point of order.

Mr. STAFFORD. The point of order is that it is new legislation.

Mr. Chairman, I understand that the paragraphs just read are identical with a bill that passed the House under unanimous consent in the closing days of the last session.

Mr. HAYDEN. I have compared the bill very carefully. It is identical, word for word, with that bill, except in the very last lines on page 17, after the words "the provisions of this act," the words "relating to mining for metalliferous minerals on Indian reservations" have been inserted, so that it would not make the entire Indian bill not apply to the Five Civilized Tribes and the Osage Nation of Indians in Oklahoma. Otherwise the provisions are identical with that bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, since this bill was considered in the House it has come to my attention that representatives of the Indians are opposed to this character of legislation because it forbids the Indians themselves from developing mineral resources on their own lands. At the time the bill was under consideration in the House, when unanimous consent was given, I was led to believe that it had the hearty approval of the Board of Indian Rights, who look after the interests of the Indians here at Washington. Since that time I have been informed to the contrary. And a further objection to this character of procedure is that the bill is pending in the Senate. The Senate has had no time whatever to consider this legislation. It applies to 90,000,000 acres of land owned by the Indians, who are our wards. Before the other body has had any opportunity whatever to consider the merits of the proposition, I question the advisability of annexing it as a rider to an appropriation bill in this House. Accordingly, Mr. Chairman, for the reason stated, I make the point of order.

Mr. HAYDEN. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?

Mr. STAFFORD. I withhold the point of order to enable the gentleman to make a statement.

Mr. HAYDEN. I will state to the gentleman that, so far as permitting Indians to mine on their own reservation is concerned, there is no law at present that will permit Indians to mine on their own reservations any more than a white man can mine there. I have given consideration to the matter of allowing competent Indians to locate mining claims. It would be no wiser to allow an incompetent Indian to locate a mining claim than it would be to allow him to have the disposition of his own property; and if the Indian Office and the friends of the Indians can devise any plan that will allow competent Indians to locate mining claims under this act, I shall have no objection, and I have so stated to the only persons who have made any objection to this bill to my knowledge. It seems strange to me that if the Indians have any opposition to this bill they would not allow the author of the bill to be aware of that opposition, and I have never received a letter or a word from anybody connected with any Indian commission or from any members of the Indian Rights Association indicating any objection to this bill, except in this one instance—that they thought competent Indians ought to be allowed to mine, to which I have no objection. Beyond that nobody connected with any organization of so-called friends of the Indians has communicated with me expressing any objections to the bill. On the contrary, all the representatives of the Indians whom I know here in Washington have expressed their hearty approval of the measure, as has the secretary of the Indian Rights Association, and nobody has said a word to me in opposition to it. I would be very glad to hear from anybody who has any objection to the bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. The bill is on the way to enactment in another body. If we annex it here, it will not receive the serious consideration which it requires, because it is a rider on an appropriation bill. The bill has passed this House. It is under consideration in the other body, and it should receive the careful consideration of that body and not the hasty consideration it might receive as a rider to an appropriation bill. We have all had experience as to how little consideration is given to legislative proposals when added to general appropriation bills. I think it is a bad practice, especially in this case, when the other body has had no time as yet to consider the merits of the proposition. Ninety million acres of the land of the Indians are involved in this proposal, and yet you wish to have it added here as a rider and to foreclose perhaps the opportunity to the other body to give it that thorough consideration which this proposition deserves.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin insist on his point of order?

Mr. STAFFORD. I insist on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the following provision of the act approved March 11, 1904 (33 Stats. L., p. 65), authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to grant rights of way across Indian lands for the conveyance of oil and gas, to wit, "No such lines shall be constructed across Indian lands, as above mentioned, until authority therefor has first been obtained from, and the maps of definite location of said lines approved by, the Secretary of the Interior," be, and the same hereby is, amended to read as follows: "No such lines shall be constructed across Indian lands, as above mentioned, until authority therefor has first been obtained from the Secretary of the Interior."

Mr. MANN. I reserve a point of order on the paragraph. What is the reason for removing the present means of securing authority for making locations?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL].

Mr. CAMPBELL. The necessity for this grows out of the fact that leases are given on these lands and flowing wells are developed. Up to that time no pipe line has been laid. If the well is a gusher, much oil will be wasted before blue prints can be prepared and sent to Washington and approved by the Secretary of the Interior and before the authority for constructing a suitable pipe line to take care of the oil can be obtained. The purpose of this amendment is that as soon as a well of that sort is found, immediately application shall be made by wire or otherwise, as the necessities of the case may require, for the laying of a suitable pipe line to take care of the oil and save the waste.

Mr. MANN. I withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman withdraws the point of order. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. For support and civilization of Indians in California, including pay of employees, $42,000.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. RAKER: "Page 23, line 12, after the word 'employees,' in line 12, on page 23, strike out '$42,000' and insert '$50,000.'"

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, this item, referred to in the amendment, is the same amount that has been recommended by the Bureau of Indian Affairs, and is in the estimates for 1908, page 418. The justification for this amendment is found on pages 134 and 135 of the hearings. You will note that there are approximately 20,000 Indians in California, and the amount appropriated, $42,000, makes practically $2 per Indian.

"Likewise with a larger appropriation it will enable the office to furnish more equipment to the Indians, and in that way be of greater assistance to them."

That will include part of the wages of employees, as well as the support fund for the Indians in California. We paid out of that appropriation $20,199.42 for salaries and wages of employees. We want to increase, not for the purpose of paying additional salaries to employees, but to provide additional help for the Indians. As Judge RAKER said this morning, those California Indians are in need of additional assistance.

Mr. McCRACKEN. The gentleman's amendment proposes to increase the amount from $42,000 to $50,000?

Mr. RAKER. Yes.

Mr. McCRACKEN. I am not aware that there is anything stated in the report and there is nothing in the bill to show how this money is to be expended.

Mr. RAKER. Oh, yes. The gentleman evidently has not read the justification offered by Mr. Meritt, who appeared before the Committee on Indian Affairs, showing exactly all the expenditures under each item and what the expenditure is for. It is on page 134 of the hearings.

Now, I want to say to the committee that, not like many of the other Indian tribes, in California years ago there were attempted treaties prepared that were never signed. Some of these Indians have allotments and many of them have none. Many are old and decrepit; many are blind, and many are destitute. I am stating this not from what I read from the report of the commissioner, but from personal observation and inspection of the various Indians in many parts of California. The matter has been within my knowledge and has been called to my attention by many good people, who have been assisting in a charitable way these old, blind, and decrepit Indians.

The department badly needs this additional $8,000 for the assistance of these poor, old, blind, and decrepit Indians. While you appropriate large sums for other Indians—in amount two and a half times per Indian—these deserve the same consideration in a humanitarian way. It is the duty of the Government to look after them just as much as it is for the Government to look after others, and I know that the Committee on Indian Affairs is not stony hearted. The matter possibly has not been directly called to their attention or they would not have reduced the amount as estimated and recommended by the department from $50,000 to $42,000. It is not applied to one particular locality in the State.

The justification of this item was made by Mr. Meritt, of the Indian Bureau, before the subcommittee, viz:

The next item is in California:

"SEC. 3. For support and civilization of Indians in California, including pay of employees, $50,000."

We are asking for an increase of $8,000 for that item.

The CHAIRMAN. What is that? Is that just the wages of the employees there?

Mr. MERITT. We offer for the record the following justification for this item:

Support of Indians in California.

Fiscal year ending June 30, 1917: Amount appropriated	$42,000.00
Fiscal year ended June 30, 1916:
Amount appropriated	42,000.00
Amount expended	41,155.67
Unexpended balance	844.33
Analysis of expenditures:
Salaries and wages	20,199.42
Traveling expenses	2,232.38
Transportation of supplies	419.86
Heat, light, and power (service)	380.44
Telegraph and telephone service	210.66
Printing, binding, and advertising	12.75
Subsistence supplies	4,448.08
Dry goods, wearing apparel, etc	304.71
Forage	2,954.83
Fuel, illuminants, lubricants, etc	2,593.03
Educational, stationery, and office supplies	174.25
Medical supplies	2,319.55
Live stock	525.00
Implements, vehicles, tools, etc	1,314.60
Sundry supplies, equipment, etc	2,363.63
Miscellaneous	702.48
Total	41,155.67

"This item is for the purpose of looking after the welfare of the Indians of the State of California and rendering them assistance along the lines of purchasing subsistence, implements, seed, and the like. There are approximately 20,000 Indians distributed among 11 agencies. In the southern part of the State are located the Mission Indians, and, while they are under the jurisdiction of but six superintendents, they are located on over 30 reservations which require supervision and attention. These small reservations are distant from one another and require much traveling on the part of the superintendents and others to reach them. Many are not located on the railroads, and it often becomes necessary to travel entirely by vehicle, which consumes two or three days' time. Furthermore, because of the large number of small reservations and the limited amount of funds available for their support and civilization, some of the Indians and reservations are without supervision.

"At the last hearing of the committee much emphasis was placed on the fact that it took over one-half of the appropriation to administer the affairs of the Indians, while only $4,000 was expended for subsistence. There are in California 512,298 acres of Indian lands; 82,162 acres are allotted and 430,136 acres unallotted. The Indians raised crops during 1915 valued at $171,510. The live stock was valued at $35,821. Weaving, basketry, etc., was valued at $50,549, and the wages earned by those not employed regularly in the Government service at $208,728. The Indians of California received rations and other miscellaneous issues to the value of $7,726 and obtained from the leases on their lands $17,703. Of the allotted lands but 35,842 acres are cultivated, and of that amount but 7,290 acres by the Indians. There are 188 leases of allotted lands. Of the unallotted lands there are 28,899 acres being used for agricultural purposes, and of that amount but 8,058 acres by the Indians. None was leased. Fourteen thousand nine hundred and ninety-one acres of the allotted lands and 10,000 of the unallotted lands were leased for grazing purposes.

"The matter of grazing, stock raising, cultivation of land, leasing, etc., all call for supervision and action on the part of the Government. Efforts are being made to see that the Indians adopt the methods of cultivation which will bring about the best results and that leases are made which will award them the greatest amount in return. It is also necessary to protect the Indians against trespass, stock depredations, etc.

"There are 3,896 adult Indians within the State who are self-supporting; 330 Indians received rations to the value of $4,054, and 256 received miscellaneous supplies to the value of $3,672.

"While these figures might indicate that these Indians are wealthy and do not need the support and aid of the Government, yet it should be realized that this wealth is somewhat restricted and that a majority of the Indians are poor and needy.

"The analysis of expenditures herewith indicates how the appropriation was expended during the fiscal year 1916. The employees are necessary for the purpose of supervising the affairs of the Indians and protecting their interests. As said heretofore, the reservations are at great distances apart and therefore much time and money must be expended in traveling. Automobiles are greatly needed for the work in question, but because they have been required for administrative purposes and other important activities it has not been possible to supply the superintendents with the necessary equipment.

"Automobiles for the superintendents in southern California would prove of great benefit, directly and indirectly, to the Indians. Likewise with a larger appropriation it will enable the office to furnish more equipment to the Indians and in that way be of greater assistance to them."

That will include part of the wages of employees, as well as the support fund for the Indians in California. We paid out of that appropriation $20,199.42 for salaries and wages of employees. We want to increase, not for the purpose of paying additional salaries to employees, but to provide additional help for the Indians. As Judge RAKER said this morning, those California Indians are in need of additional assistance.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I hope that the amendment will not be adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the purchase of lands for the homeless Indians in California, including improvements thereon, for the use and occupancy of said Indians, $10,000, said funds to be expended under such regulations and conditions as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to present the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 23, line 15, after the word "Indians," in line 15, strike out "$10,000" and insert "$25,000."

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call the committee's attention to that part of the hearings on pages 135 and 136 as a justification for this amendment. The estimate is $25,000 instead of $10,000 (see p. 418, Estimates of Appropriations for fiscal year 1918). The Assistant Secretary in making the statement to the committee used the following language:

"It is believed, however, that with great care it will be possible to complete this work with the amount asked for, namely, $25,000. It should be remembered also that the salary and expenses of the special agent who is engaged in this work must come out of the fund. This salary and expenses for the past year amounted to about $4,000 (salary, $2,000). It is obviously unfair to make provision in the way of lands for about 4,771 of the "homeless" California Indians, as has been done, and yet fail to provide for the 2,782 Indians who remain landless. Reports from the field indicate that the Indian beneficiaries are in every instance showing great appreciation for the purchases made for their use, and that they are earnestly trying to reach the white man's standards."

We have bought lands for several thousand of the homeless Indians of California, and there are estimated to be between 3,000 and 4,000 Indians now without lands, and we hope within two or three years more to have lands for all homeless Indians in California. We can use this $25,000 to very great advantage of those Indians.

It seems to me the mere statement as presented by the assistant commissioner ought to be sufficient for the good members of this committee to include in this bill the amount that has been estimated for, and that that estimate is upon reports from the field, from actual facts.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. Certainly.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Can the gentleman inform us how many acres of land have been bought under this?

Mr. RAKER. Yes; the report shows 15,217.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Is it not a fact that it is shown on page 236 that the balance of cash on hand is $9,823?

Mr. RAKER. Yes; but you have to care for the officers in the field just the same, and it will take $25,000 to complete the work of buying this land needed and necessary.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. What per cent of the amount actually expended is the salary?

Mr. RAKER. I have not figured that out. It is in the department.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Is it not greatly out of proportion for salaries and not for land?

Mr. RAKER. No; you continue the salaries just the same; you are not making a sufficient appropriation to buy the land, and I think it ought to be done.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For support and education of 100 Indian pupils at the Fort Bidwell Indian School, Cal., including pay of superintendent, $18,200; for general repairs and improvements, $3,500; in all, $21,700.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 24, line 6, after the figures "$3,500," insert "for new school buildings, $12,000."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the amendment.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I find in the bill a number of items of a similar character; for instance, for new barns.

Mr. MANN. They are all subject to the point of order. The gentleman can make the point of order if he desires to.

Mr. RAKER. I know; but I am just saying that I wondered if a cow or a horse deserves more consideration than an Indian?

Mr. MANN. Than a beggar—very often.

Mr. RAKER. It depends upon the horse, I guess. I want to call the attention of the committee to this item. The department has made an investigation and a report is on file with the Interior office from the local office. An investigation has been had, and they have reported that it is necessary to have a new school building there at a cost of $12,000. I want to say to the committee that I am not taking the report second hand or even first hand. I made a personal investigation of the school and have done so a number of times. There is no school, I believe, in the United States—Indian school—that has given a better service to the Indians than this school. It has been doing splendid work in regard to the general education and health of the Indians. You can go there and can see clean, healthy Indians, eyes bright and clear, their noses clean, and other conditions that are remarkable for health. They need another school building so as to be able to educate and handle pupils and to keep up the standard. The department, as I have stated, have strongly recommended the school, as they have in other instances, and from every indication, from every viewpoint, economic and otherwise, and particularly for the benefit of the Indians, for their uplift and proper education, there ought to be an appropriation here of $12,000 for the purpose of constructing this new school building.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. I yield to the distinguished gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Will the gentleman tell us what the per capita cost is at that school?

Mr. RAKER. It is a little higher than at some of the rest.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Than at any other school, is it not?

Mr. RAKER. Should that deprive these Indians of proper treatment and care, because the school happens to be located over the mountain, far from the railroad, and because it costs more to get supplies and equipment in? Because of that should you deprive them of the same kind and character of treatment that you give to the others when the other schools may be located near to a railroad? The surrounding conditions, climatic and otherwise, are ideal for these Indians. The condition, so far as the moral condition is concerned, is good, and so far as it concerns liquor it can not be better; but because it may cost a few dollars more, or a few cents more per capita, surely this House will not make a distinction in a case where by virtue of the location they can receive better treatment and better education and be under better conditions. I know the distinguished gentleman would not deprive these good people of an opportunity of an education. The justification for this amendment is found in the hearings, as follows:

The next item is the Fort Bidwell School:

"For support and education of 100 Indian pupils at the Fort Bidwell Indian School, California, including pay of superintendent, $18,200; for general repairs and improvements, $3,500; for new school building, $12,000; for dairy barn, $5,000; in all, $38,700."

We are asking for a new school building, $12,000; dairy barn, $5,000, making the total $38,700. Last year we had an appropriation of $21,800.

I offer for the record the following justification for that estimate:

The item of $18,200 for support of Fort Bidwell School, Cal., includes the salaries of employees, subsistence and clothing, and the cost of supplies for academic and industrial training of 100 pupils at the rate of $167 per capita.

The new construction work required at this school will include a new school building. This is an urgent need, the one now in use being an old building used as a hospital when the United States troops were stationed there. A building large enough to provide two or three classrooms and an assembly hall is required. A new dairy barn is also a necessity at this school. The present barn is dilapidated and insanitary and has been the subject of condemnatory reports by inspectors and supervisors.

The item of $3,500 is to cover needed general repairs, such as new flooring and painting, to all the old buildings at this school.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. CRISP). The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

For support and education of 100 Indian pupils at the Greenville Indian School, California, including pay of superintendent, $18,200; for general repairs and improvements, including laundry equipment, $3,500; in all, $21,700.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. RAKER: Page 24, line 10, after figures "$3,500," in line 10, insert "for new school building, $9,000."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, on that I reserve the point of order.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from California desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. MANN. As far as I am concerned I will reserve the point of order.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I will reserve the point of order.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, this school at Greenville is some two hundred and odd miles south of the former one and is located off the railroad, in a community that can not be surpassed by any place in the United States so far as the surrounding conditions are concerned, living, and all, but it is a little more expensive than some others. The Indians live in this territory. There is a school there, and in this particular place there is one building. The lower story is used for a dining room, kitchen, and so forth, where they all eat together, boys and girls. On the second story there is a dormitory, with the boys at one end and the girls at the other. Anyone who knows anything about the conduct and care and treatment of Indian children knows that there ought to be two separate buildings, there ought to be a dormitory at least in a separate building for the boys, so that the teachers may have an opportunity of giving proper training and education. While I am not using it for an invidious comparison, I call the attention of the committee to the fact that while the point of order is made we may turn to the rest of the bill, and there you will find they are able to build up barns for two or three horses, and other improvements, but with those that actually need them, with those who are actually entitled to them, who ought to have the care of the Government the same in one place as in another, so that their proper condition may be provided for, we can not obtain those things. I know the committee in this instance will not insist upon the point of order; I believe they will permit this item to go in, because it is just. You want to give these Indian children an opportunity to be cared for, and it is a fact that these schools have done much for the moral uplift of these people by taking these young girls from 11 years up and giving them an opportunity for training and giving them an opportunity of being provided for by doctors and cared for. All except two in one institution have been diseased, and you do not want to deprive them of an opportunity of being provided for.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. Yes.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. The gentleman has emphasized the fact in respect to the last two schools mentioned in the bill that they are located where the climate is good and the morals are excellent. Do those two characteristics distinguish these two spots from the rest of the State of California? [Laughter.]

Mr. RAKER. Oh, it is all the same way all over California, from Siskiyou to San Diego and from the Sierras to the sea. The justification for this amendment is found in the hearings had before the subcommittee, as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. The next is the Greenville School:

"For support and education of 100 Indian pupils at the Greenville Indian School, Cal., including pay of superintendent, $18,200; for general repairs and improvements, $3,500; for new school building, $9,000; in all, $30,700."

The sum of $18,200 for support of the Greenville School, California, will provide for 100 pupils at $167 per capita, in addition to the superintendent's salary. The cost of maintenance of the Greenville School, owing to local conditions, is somewhat in excess of other Indian schools.

The item of $3,500 for repairs and improvements will be required for the upkeep of the school plant. The main building needs new flooring and repainting inside and outside. It should be thoroughly screened and two screen porches should be added to it. The other buildings need new roofs, painting, and extensive repairs to withstand the heavy fall of snow usual in this locality. Laundry equipment to the value of $875 is desired, the present equipment being antiquated and inadequate.

The occasion for a new school building at a cost of $9,000 is to provide much-needed classroom space and to release for other purposes the space now used for classes. The new building will include an assembly hall in addition to classroom and provide needed accommodation for physical culture, recreation, and social gatherings.

We are asking for a new school building, $9,000, for this school. The improvements asked for are very much needed at both of those schools.

I have presented the needs of this Indian school to the department, and they in addition, from their own investigations and reports, have recommended this building, and it was estimated for and approved by the Treasury Department. (See estimates of appropriation required for the service of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, H. Doc. No. 1499, p. 420.)

The following letter, just received from Hon. Edgar K. Miller, superintendent and special disbursing agent of the Greenville Indian School, of date December 6, 1916, plainly and clearly shows the necessity of this new school building provided for in the proposed amendment, viz:

[Department of the Interior. United States Indian school and agency.
Edgar K. Miller, superintendent and special disbursing agent.]

GREENVILLE, CAL., December 6, 1916.

Hon. JOHN E. RAKER,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. RAKER: I know that you will be interested in knowing the needs of the Greenville Indian School for the year 1918. I submit the estimate of needs, as presented to the office:

For the support and education of 100 pupils at the Greenville Indian School and the superintendent's salary, $18,400; for repairs and improvements to old buildings of the plant, $1,300; for a new building to contain chapel, schoolrooms, and gymnasium, $8,000; for purchase of laundry equipment, $875; in all, $28,625.

I have cut the estimate just as close as I could, owing to the fact that we will try to get the much-needed school building this year. You will note that I have asked for but $1,300 repairs and improvements money.

The most necessary and vital need, as you know, is the school building. On account of cutting the other items, I anticipate no trouble to get this building this year.

You will remember that Congress told you to make good on what we got and the building would be forthcoming. We can call their hands on that bluff, all right.

July 1 I took immediate steps to get the farm, with the result that the office is just now about to turn to Mr. A. J. Schieser $6,000 for a farm of 75 acres, one of the best pieces of land there is in this valley.

Of course, I had no way of raising any crops on land I had no control over, but I made the sale of the Schieser land subject to the Government getting the crops harvested this year, and if the sale is finally consummated, which there is no doubt of now, we will get these crops, so that so far as making good on the farm proposition is concerned we have done so. If the sale is consummated this school will not have to pay out a cent for grain—oats and wheat—or for hay or straw, thereby making a saving of about $500.

Outside of this forage we get and do not have to pay out good money for, I will have several hundred dollars' worth to sell, thereby providing a call 4 fund, from which to buy a few cows, so that we may be able to raise our own milk on the farm.

The farm is a fine one, and we were very fortunate in getting such good land so close to the school.

Now, as to the other side of the management—the per capita cost and the attendance. You will remember there was some complaint about, and some kick on, appropriating for 90 students when the enrollment was very low. Also, the criticism was made that it seemed poor judgment to recommend a school building when the attendance was so poor and the per capita cost so high.

These matters I have remedied. When I came here the per capita cost (for year 1915) was $279.62. Last year, despite the fact that I spent every cent of the appropriation, the per capita cost was but $219.80. These are office figures, not mine. Dr. McChesney turned back to the Treasury over $7,000; still his per capita cost ran up to $279.62.

The capacity of the school is but 90. Some Congressman made the complaint that an appropriation for 100 students should not be made upon the past showing; that it was evident that the school was not filled even near up to its capacity. While I know that was a reasonably good way of figuring, I want to show you that my judgment was good in requesting that appropriation for the 100 students at that time.

I figured that if I built up the plant, made it comfortable and decent, fed the pupils as they should be, and otherwise conducted a first-class school, where the girls and boys would be properly cared for both as to their training and their physical condition, the students would come as a matter of course.

Last year our per capita cost was based on an average enrollment of 75 pupils. This year we opened school with over 80 in attendance, coming in of their own accord. We have 96 present now, and have more than 20 applications yet to be acted upon. I will carry enough in order to show an average attendance of 100. This, you will see, vindicates my judgment, shows that the students are here, and that there can be at least 125 carried if we could get the room. It shows conclusively that the school building asked for is not only a necessity, but that it will be used the minute it becomes finished.

General conditions in every way have been improved. The plant is in fairly good shape again and we are having no trouble with the pupils as in former years. The neighbors uniformly comment on the changed conditions about the school.

I give you this inside information that you may be in a position to say to the House Indian Committee, when you appear before it on behalf this school at this session, as I would like to have you do, "We have made good; give us what we ask for this year; it is needed. If you do this, I promise you that next year's work at Greenville will practically put the work there on a basis that the Government can be proud of."

If I can give you any other information, or assist you in any way toward carrying out plans suggested by you, I will be very glad to do so at any time.

With much appreciation for your kindness and assistance in the past, I am,

Very truly, yours, EDGAR K. MILLER,
Superintendent.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment is new legislation, and the Chair sustains the point of order, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to withdraw from the Treasury of the United States, at his discretion, the sum of $185,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, of the principal sum on deposit to the credit of the Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota, arising under section 7 of the act of January 14, 1889, entitled "An act for the relief and civilization of the Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota," and to use the same for the purpose of promoting civilization and self-support among the said Indians in manner and for purposes provided for in said act: Provided, That not to exceed $60,000 of said amount, and the one-fourth interest on the tribal funds of the Chippewa Indians of Minnesota now to their credit in the Treasury to be used for the maintenance of free schools, shall be used for the compensation of employees in the Indian Service in Minnesota except for irregular laborers, and that the said Chippewas shall receive the preference in filling permanent positions in the service of the Chippewas of Minnesota where the compensation is paid from their tribal funds: Provided further, That not less than $10,000 of said amount of $185,000 may be used to furnish employment to the said Chippewas in building roads and making other improvements upon the Chippewa reservations in Minnesota for the benefit of the said Chippewas.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I want to ask the chairman of the committee, or some one who is informed on the subject, where this one-fourth interest in the tribal fund of the Chippewas, which is now diverted to employees of the Indian Service, arises?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I will say to the gentleman the hearings show that this fund was established by the act of January 4, 1889. It is derived from the proceeds of timber upon ceded lands sold by agreement for the benefit of the Indians. A provision of this act provides that after the United States has been reimbursed for money advanced to the Indians a certain amount, not to exceed 5 per cent of the principal fund, may be withdrawn for the support and civilization of the Indians. This legislation is to carry out the intention of the act of January 4, 1889.

Mr. BORLAND. Are these Indians on the White Earth Reservation in Minnesota?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I think so.

Mr. BORLAND. My understanding is that within the last two years——

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Here is the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MILLER].

Mr. BORLAND. Within the last two years an allotment was made to these Indians, and a regulation was made—or a provision of the statute—by which the money belonging to minors living with their parents was paid to the parents with the exception that one-fourth of the minor's interest was retained. Now, where is that one-fourth fund I speak of? Is that included in this one-fourth fund now being diverted?

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. No; the gentleman is in error in assuming that within two years any allotments have been made to Indians in Minnesota. Allotments were made 20 years ago. A majority of the Indians do live on the White Earth Reservation, and of the 11,000 Indians in the State I think 5,000 or 6,000 are to be credited to White Earth and the rest are scattered throughout the State and some have gone West; so that about one-half of the Indians within the borders of the State reside on the White Earth Reservation and they were allotted 20 years ago. I think what the gentleman has in mind is that the Government made a treaty in 1889 under which the Indians of our State, the Chippewas of Minnesota, ceded to the Government certain lands and consented to be removed, most of them to White Earth. By that treaty there was a provision that one-fourth of the interest of the fund in the United States Treasury accruing from the sale of timberland from the surplus lands would be paid out in matters of education. Now, they did not do it. The department did not pay the one-fourth of the sum for educational purposes of the State, and, indeed, it was only this last year here that Congress, following the recommendation, enacted a law requiring the Secretary of the Interior to make the per capita payment. Many of the Indians died. One-fourth of that which would be due those Indians was distributed out as of date of May 18, 1916, and certain rules and regulations were authorized or adopted by the Secretary of the Interior. It was necessary to determine who were the Indians who should participate in this distribution as of May 18, 1916. Then came the further question of authority being given to the Secretary of the Interior to withhold the payments that naturally would go to infirm if not incompetent Indians, and also infants, children, if he saw fit, or to their parents in his discretion.

Now, he did withhold payments that would naturally have gone to a great many Indians, some to children, some to grown people. They made a rough classification between the competents and the incompetents, and as to the incompetents they withheld, and the Secretary promised to issue the money out for their support and benefit as he thought advisable. Now, this one-fourth is entirely different from that. That was a one-fourth per capita distribution of the funds in the Treasury. This is one-fourth of the interest on the capital fund in the Treasury for educational purposes in the State, but, as I said, that one-fourth educational fund was not used and swelled the principal fund until it became very large.

Mr. BORLAND. Of the one-fourth of which the gentleman speaks, what was done with that money? What action was taken with it, so that eventually it would go to the Indians? Does it remain in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the tribal funds?

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Oh, yes; unless expended it does.

Mr. BORLAND. Is any portion diverted by this provision?

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. The gentleman will observe that the Indians of Minnesota are not a tax upon the taxpayers of the United States. There is but one item here calling for a payment from the Treasury, and that is $25,000 for the school at Pipestone, which does not serve the Indians of Minnesota, but serves South Dakota and——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BORLAND. I ask for five minutes additional.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. The Chippewas do not get very much.

Mr. BORLAND. I have no criticism to make of the fact that the Chippewas are being paid or being provided for by a tax on the people of the United States. My question relates to this: There is a very highly educated Chippewa in my district named William Madison, who is engaged in earning his own living, and doing it very creditably, and who has two minor sons.

He undertook to draw his allotment under the regulation providing that this interest money should be paid to the parties entitled. One-fourth of the share of each boy was withheld under regulation that it ultimately should be used for their education. As the boys are residing with their father in Missouri and being educated, clothed, and fed by him, they have no way of participating in this reserved amount at all. He questions somewhat the wisdom of that, but it seemed to be a provision of the law. The question occurred to me, What provision is there for the ultimate establishment to these boys of their share, or does this provision divert it to some expenses of the Indian Department that does not serve them at all?

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. The treaty of 1889 provides that there shall be no distribution of the capital sum until the period of 50 years has expired, and this one-fourth which was authorized in the appropriation bill last summer throws a great deal of doubt as to whether it ought to be paid or not. It is contrary to the provision of that treaty, and Congress has considered that the department may do anything under a treaty, whether provided for or not.

Mr. BORLAND. According to the gentleman's statement, then, it is a trust fund for the education of the Indians?

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. One-fourth of it is.

Mr. BORLAND. And was never used for that purpose?

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Part of it. I made complaint several times, but I have never gotten anywhere with them.

Mr. BORLAND. And the share was still maintained?

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. And authority was given to the Secretary to retain that part that was to go to children and incompetents.

Mr. BORLAND. What is the status of these two boys that are being educated by the father?

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. The only suggestion that I would make is that they make application to the Secretary of the Interior; that is, the father make that application to receive the sums due these two children in view of the fact that he is paying for the education of the boys, and the Secretary, if proper representation is made, will doubtless pay over to the father the sums due to the boys.

Mr. BORLAND. Does the law as now drawn permit that?

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. The law permits it, but does not require it.

Mr. BORLAND. But no portion of that fund is being diverted by this provision here?

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. None whatever.

Mr. LENROOT. I think the gentleman will find, as in his case, that where the money is held it will be placed to their individual credit.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. They will get the money in due time.

Mr. BORLAND. My understanding was to the contrary.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. No; the law specifically requires that when an Indian, small or large, shall receive one-fourth of his share it shall be charged up to the general account in the fund.

Mr. TILSON. Will the gentleman yield? I should like to inquire what kind of a band this White Earth Band is, which is going to celebrate on the 14th of June and which wishes $1,000 to blow itself with? Is it a brass band?

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. No. They have several bands. It is the White Earth Band of Indians. The White Earth Indians annually, on the 14th of June, have a big celebration. That may be associated by some people with a drunk, or something like that, but it is not so at all. It is a time when they gather and show their horses, their cattle, their food products, their accomplishments during the year. They have a good time, they meet old friends, and they confer about things which they consider of best advantage to the Indians. Many of these Indians, I will say to the gentleman, are just as well educated and as good business men as any people in the world.

Mr. TILSON. It is something like our county fairs?

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Yes.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It is paid out of the funds at the request of the Indians themselves.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I would like to make an inquiry relative to the language of that provision on page 27, which says:

That not less than $10,000 of said amount of $185,000 may be used to furnish employment to the said Chippewas in building roads and making other improvements upon the Chippewa reservations in Minnesota for the benefit of the said Chippewas.

Now, one of two things is apparent, either the Secretary of the Interior has not authority to divert $10,000 or more for this purpose, and therefore requires this authority, or he has. Now, the language is that he may use it.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It was said there was some question whether they had the legal authority to do it.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. There is no question about it at all. They have done it for years and years.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. There has been a question whether their use of appropriations was justified by the law, and they could not get the money out of the Treasury in some instances, and they have asked in numerous instances for this species of legislation.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I am not quibbling about that. There is one point I desire to make. In building roads up there—and I am very glad to say I think I got the Indian Office to give their first consent for road building in the woods of Minnesota for Indians some years ago—they have followed it up satisfactorily. But we have found from experience it is never proper for the Indians to do all the work alone. They do not build good roads. We can cite several instances where a lot of money has been spent and good roads are not yet secured. Today where you have a combination between the counties, for instance, and the Indian agents, the man building the road employs Indian labor so far as possible, and that means quite generally, but the supervision is by regularly constituted road-building agencies, such as we have in Minnesota, and the results are fine.

Now, this language would indicate that they could not cooperate with the county. They could not expend a penny except for payment to the Indians. Now, you could just imagine what a fine job the average Indian agent could do with road building when he would say, "Come on, boys" to a couple of hundred Indians, "and we will go out and build a road to this swamp," without any appliances or road-building machinery. They can go out with pick and shovel and an ax and a piece of dynamite, and they can chop down a hill here and cut down a tree there and fill in a hole somewhere else. They may work for a year or two in that way, but they will not get anywhere. It seems to me that the language I have suggested is advisable. The Secretary of the Interior would always require, before a dollar is expended, that Indian labor should be secured to the largest extent practicable, but——

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. But it should be under the supervision of the department, should it not?

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Yes; it should be; and we should provide by law that "not less than $10,000 of said amount may be used in building roads and making other improvements upon the Chippewa Reservations in Minnesota for the benefit of said Chippewas." That is all the authority that is desired.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. If the gentleman will come before the committee next year and give us the benefit of his experience we shall be glad to consider the matter.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I am going to offer an amendment anyhow. I do not know whether the chairman will accept it or not.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I would not like to accept it unless the department had passed on the question.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I do not care whether the department agrees to it or not. It is common sense and common business.

Mr. MANN. Unless it is made obligatory to employ Indians, would not the department be required to advertise and let the work to the lowest bidder? We all know that it costs a great deal more to build a road by the Indians than if the whites built it, but it is the Indians' money.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. That is correct.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I am not certain whether it would be required to be advertised or not.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman would not want to fix it so that it could not be done?

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. No; I want it advertised. We have a first-class engineer in one county in that neighborhood where the county is spending $1,200,000 in road building each year. It has a very large equipment and very highly skilled men, and they are building the finest roads imaginable. The county has been willing to spend money to put roads into these reservations to aid the Indians. We have found that by using the skill of the engineer in drawing the plans for the roads we could get a very great deal more for our money than otherwise. I have never seen a road built entirely by Indian labor under the direction of the agent that amounted to a hill of beans.

I want to offer the amendment anyhow, Mr. Chairman. I move, in line 12, page 27, to strike out the words "to furnish employment to the said Chippewas."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MILLER].

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, on page 27, line 12, by striking out the words "to furnish employment to the said Chippewas."

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I hope, Mr. Chairman, the amendment will not be adopted without first having been passed upon by the Indian authorities. It is charged, or at least intimated, that they have been derelict in the performance of their duties. We would not like that to go on record.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MILLER].

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, a division.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota demands a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes, 14, noes 31.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, in reference to this proviso, what construction does the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STEPHENS] give to the language that "not less than $10,000 may be used"?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. That is on page 27, line 10?

Mr. LENROOT. Yes. They must use $10,000 to furnish employment, and if they do not use $10,000 they can not use any?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I suppose it is to force them or to compel them to use that money.

Mr. LENROOT. Why do you use the word "may," then? Why not use the word "shall"?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It is to notify them that the money is available and that they have not used it. It is to force them to use that much money for the employment of Indian labor.

Mr. LENROOT. Should not the word "shall" be used instead of the word "may"?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Either "may" or "shall" is usually used.

Mr. LENROOT. The two parts of this provision are inconsistent with each other.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It has been drafted by the department. We took it as they gave it to us.

Mr. VENABLE. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. VENABLE] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. VENABLE: After line 22, page 27, insert as a new paragraph the following:

"MISSISSIPPI.

"For the construction of school plans for Mississippi Indians and the purchase of the necessary land for school sites and farms, $100,000; for support and education of Indian children, including salary of superintendent, $30,000; in all, $130,000."

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas reserves a point of order on the amendment.

Mr. VENABLE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. VENABLE] asks unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. VENABLE. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, this amendment arose out of a recommendation made by the Indian Department, following the report of a special supervisor, pursuant to a provision contained in the last general appropriation bill which provided a thousand dollars to investigate the condition of the Mississippi Choctaws.

That report is now in print, but I find it is not available. In substance, however, it gives in detail the condition of these Indians and their land holdings. It shows their poverty and their need. It shows that there are about 500 children of these Indians. It shows further that their condition is a pitiable one, and that the death rate exceeds the birth rate. They are dying from exposure to the weather, owing to the fact that they live in insanitary surroundings and know nothing of sanitation. Those, in substance, are the facts. It shows that these Indians have no educational advantages other than some very meager ones that are provided by the State, the State undertaking to maintain two or three Indian schools for two or three months in the year.

On those facts, disclosed in this report, the department makes this recommendation providing for the purchase of land and the establishment of schools.

On page 217 of the hearings before the subcommittee on Indian affairs is found a statement from Mr. Meritt, and this amendment embodies what the Indian Department thinks is necessary for the Mississippi Choctaws. The report recommended certain provisions for the maintenance of the adult Indians on the ground that there had been a complete crop failure in that portion of Mississippi this year, and there is very great suffering and indeed danger that some of these people will come near starving. However, this amendment does not deal with that phase of it, but asks that some provision be made by the Government for these children. According to this report and according to my personal knowledge at the present rate of decrease, if something is not done, in a few years the Mississippi Choctaws will become extinct. They are dying off now very rapidly, and the hope of the preservation of these people lies, of course, in what is done for the children. This amendment is offered simply for that purpose.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VENABLE. Yes.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Is it not a fact that these Indians could now be permitted to attend any of the Indian schools, on proper application to the department, and showing that they were Indians and indigent?

Mr. VENABLE. I am informed that that is the case, but it is not feasible as a practical proposition, for you could not get the parents of these Indian children to consent that they be sent to these Indian schools. That grows out of their suspicion, their ignorance, and their natural desire to have their children near them.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Is the gentleman aware that that is the fact all over the United States, that the Apaches and Navajoes, and a good many of the other Indians, where there is no compulsory means of putting their children in school, will not let them attend?

Mr. VENABLE. I do not know anything about the others.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. They are in exactly the same condition relative to that as all the other Indians in the United States. We have never passed compulsory Indian education laws. We have not reached that point yet.

Mr. VENABLE. That doubtless is true. I know it is peculiarly true of the Mississippi Choctaws that he will not consent to sending his children away to school. Almost every agent who has gone down among the Mississippi Choctaws to have anything to do with them has been a grand rascal and a blackleg, and, if you want to convict a man without trial in the minds of these Indians, all that is necessary for him to do is to allow himself to be denominated as an Indian agent. That will convict him.

Mr. NORTON. What is the great and good State of Mississippi, which has so long and so highly prized State rights, doing for those Indians down there to benefit them?

Mr. VENABLE. They are doing—not under the doctrine of State rights, however—just what the gentleman's State does, I assume, which I suppose does not regard the doctrine very highly. They are apportioning such part of their funds to the Indians as they feel to be just and right. You must remember that the white people themselves in a great many sections of Mississippi have only a few months' school in the year. You must remember also that we have a very large negro population in Mississippi, outnumbering the whites in fact, for whom the white people of Mississippi maintain schools. With the white people, the principal taxpayers and property owners, carrying the burden of the education of the large number of negroes that we have in Mississippi, we do for the Indians in those counties, I am satisfied, as much as the people can.

Mr. NORTON. These Indians are full citizens of Mississippi?

Mr. VENABLE. Yes.

Mr. NORTON. They have the same rights as other citizens?

Mr. VENABLE. Yes; theoretically.

Mr. NORTON. What property they have is subject to taxation?

Mr. VENABLE. Yes. They own very little. Most of them, as a matter of fact, are croppers. A few of them own some very poor land, on which it would take three men to raise a row. [Laughter.]

Mr. NORTON. You have no compulsory education system in Mississippi?

Mr. VENABLE. No, sir.

Mr. NORTON. The children of these Indians are not compelled to go to school?

Mr. VENABLE. No, sir.

Mr. NORTON. As a matter of fact, they have a custom of the tribe which precludes them from attending school, have they not, or a custom which did obtain up to within the past few years, by which those attending school were subject to punishment by the band?

Mr. VENABLE. I never heard of that, sir. I do not think any such custom exists.

Mr. NORTON. There is no custom in opposition to attending school, as there is in Florida?

Mr. VENABLE. No, sir; I never heard of it. And I am sure I would have heard of it if it existed.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a ruling.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman insist on his point of order?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It is new legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For continuing construction of the irrigation systems on the Blackfeet Indian Reservation, in Montana, $25,000 (reimbursable), which shall be immediately available and remain available until expended: Provided, That not to exceed $15,000 of applicable appropriations made for the Flathead, Blackfeet, and Fort Peck irrigation projects shall be available for the maintenance, repair, and operation of motor-propelled and horse-drawn passenger-carrying vehicles for official use upon the aforesaid irrigation projects: Provided further, That not to exceed $9,000 may be used for the purchase of horse-drawn passenger-carrying vehicles, and that not to exceed $2,000 may be used for the purchase of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I want to ask the chairman of the committee in regard to these irrigation systems. The irrigation system on the Blackfeet Reservation in Montana is practically finished now, is it not?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. No; I think it is in process at the present time.

Mr. BORLAND. There is an appropriation of only $25,000. That means that it is practically completed. What progress are they making toward using that irrigated land?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I understand that a great many of the Indians are taking it. Many of the laterals from the main ditch yet remain to be dug; and although the main ditches may be completed to take the water from the source of supply, it can not be used until the laterals are dug to carry the water from the main ditch and irrigate the land. That seems to be the main reason why more land is not taken up and used by the Indians.

Mr. BORLAND. What is the condition of the Blackfeet now; are we making an appropriation for their subsistence through the hard winter, as we did years ago?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. There is a general appropriation for subsistence and civilization of $50,000, I believe.

Mr. BORLAND. My recollection has been that the Blackfeet every year have had a special appropriation to keep them from starving during the winter.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. That is the amount here.

Mr. BORLAND. Is there any prospect that this irrigation will add to their means of self-support?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It is stated by the agency that they are in much better condition than they were. Three or four years ago they were in a deplorable condition, but the committee has done everything it could to relieve their condition. If the gentleman from Missouri or anyone else can point out any means by which they can be relieved further, the committee is ready to take it up.

Mr. BORLAND. How much more is necessary to complete the Flathead irrigation system?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. There are about 120,000 acres of irrigable land, 73,000 of which is unallotted. A large part of the land is subject to irrigation. It is in the best stock-raising region, and if crops are to be raised in that country the land must be irrigated. They now raise some grass and fairly good crops of hay and potatoes and other farm products. The Indians now are in much better condition than they were a year ago.

Mr. BORLAND. How much more money is necessary to complete that irrigation project?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. A little more than $4,000,000.

Mr. BORLAND. How many Indians are there there?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Several thousand.

Mr. EVANS. About 2,500.

Mr. BORLAND. How much has the project cost altogether?

Mr. EVANS. Six or seven million dollars. That includes the land. It is to be sold and is to be reimbursable. There are 10,000 white people there.

Mr. BORLAND. How many of the Indians are self-supporting?

Mr. EVANS. I should say 40 or 50 per cent.

Mr. BORLAND. What is the condition of the Fort Peck project and what is the total cost?

Mr. EVANS. I do not know.

Mr. BORLAND. Does the chairman of the committee know how much is the total cost?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Four million six hundred and fifteen thousand dollars.

Mr. BORLAND. How many Indians are there there?

Mr. NORTON. Nineteen hundred and forty-three.

Mr. BORLAND. And it will cost about how much?

Mr. EVANS. About $4,000,000.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The gentleman must not forget that this money is money that belongs to the Indians and we are administering it for them as our wards.

Mr. BORLAND. This is reimbursable out of a fund that does not now exist.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. They have a great estate, a very valuable property, and it is estimated that it will far more than pay the United States every dollar that it puts out. Every cent will be refunded.

Mr. BORLAND. Oh, I expect that eventually it will all be repaid.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Can the gentleman from Montana tell me how much is actually irrigated on the Fort Peck irrigation project?

Mr. EVANS. I can not tell the gentleman.

Mr. NORTON. Approximately.

Mr. EVANS. I can not say approximately.

Mr. NORTON. There are 152,000 acres in the project and there has been expended $485,000.

Mr. EVANS. I have never been over the Fort Peck project, but I have been over the Flathead.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. We have spent a lot of money on these three irrigation projects in Montana—I think something like three and a half million dollars on the three of them. So far we have not irrigated much land. The report of last year did not indicate that any land was irrigated on either of the reservations.

Mr. NORTON. The report shows that 12,500 acres are under irrigation on the Fort Peck Reservation.

Mr. MONDELL. Not the report I have. This is the report of last year, the latest report that we have, House Document 177.

Mr. NORTON. How much was actually cultivated is not shown in any report.

Mr. MONDELL. If the gentleman will refer to House Document 177, the report of last year on the cost of irrigation projects, page 14, he will find that under the head of "Blackfeet" there is no land given as being irrigated, white or Indian. Nor is there on the Fort Peck Reservation. The report of this year is not as yet published. I have been trying to get a copy of it, but it is not over from the Printing Office. I presume they have been able to irrigate some lands possibly on one or all of these reservations this year. I do not rise for the purpose of calling attention to this lack of progress in irrigation with the idea of suggesting that these lands can not or will not be irrigated. I have very grave doubts about the Blackfeet, about our ever irrigating very much land on that reservation; but as to the others, I think those reservations will ultimately be cultivated and irrigated.

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. EVANS. Permit me to say that the Blackfeet Reservation project is wholly an Indian project. The other two are what we call white-men projects. On the Blackfeet Reservation there are at least 10,000 people, and almost 25,000 acres of land under cultivation.

Mr. MONDELL. I have no doubt that those lands will eventually be irrigated and that the project will eventually work out. That is my understanding of the project; that it has very good soil and plenty of water and a very fair climate. I am simply calling attention to these three projects and our large appropriations for them in order to furnish something of a foundation for a statement that I hope to make to the committee to-morrow relative to the very great needs of a reservation where they are actually irrigating the soil and raising crops. This bill carries an appropriation of $50,000 for the continuation of the extension of the irrigation systems on the Wind River Reservation in Wyoming. The committee gave all that the Indian Office asked. I did not appear before the committee asking more, because of the fact that the report which the committee in its bill of last year requested was not received by the House and printed until Saturday, so that we have not had the report before us, and I did not care to appear before the committee and ask for a larger appropriation for that work without having the report which the committee had called for. But to-morrow, when this item is reached or before it is reached, I want to appeal to the committee to increase that appropriation of $50,000 to at least $150,000 in order to carry on very greatly needed work on this reservation, where the land is being put under cultivation just as fast as it is being irrigated, and I hope that the committee will see its way clear to allow the sum I shall ask.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. The gentleman referred to the report of the Secretary of the Interior. We have received the report of the Secretary of the Treasury, the report of the Secretary of War, and the various other reports of the various heads of the departments, but the reports of the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs have not yet come in. We take up the Indian bill first. Those reports we have not had an opportunity to read. They ought to be before us when we take up the Indian bill, but I suppose that is one of the inscrutible ways of Providence. If there is a chance to get information, sweep away the chance!

The Clerk read as follows:

NEBRASKA.

SEC. 10. For support and education of 400 Indian pupils at the Indian school at Genoa, Nebr., including pay of superintendent, $68,800; for general repairs and improvements, $7,500; for addition to hospital, $2,500; for purchase and erection of steel water tank, $2,400; in all, $81,200.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 30, line 11, after the semicolon in line 11, insert the following: "for the purchase of 320 acres, more or less, of land, $41,600."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on that.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois make the point of order?

Mr. MANN. I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. I would like to discuss it for a moment, if you please.

Mr. MANN. I would be very glad to reserve the point of order, but the Chair asked me if I made it. I reserve the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois reserves the point of order.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, as a justification of this amendment I wish to call the attention of the committee to the fact that this school has the smallest land area of any Indian school, I think, in the United States. Not only that, but it has the finest herd of pure-bred dairy cows on any Indian reservation in the United States, and this herd ranks with the best herds in the United States off the Indian reservations. In fact, this Indian school has won prizes year after year in the big State fairs of Iowa and Nebraska upon the exhibits from this herd. This school has the best swine herd of any Indian school in the United States, pure bred, and it has the best pure-bred Percheron horses. In fact, this school farm, in my judgment, is as well managed a farm as there is in the whole West. This school is carried on with a per capita cost of something like, I think, $152, which is very small in comparison to the cost of some other schools that run from $200 to $300 per capita. Not only that, but while these other schools have been spending their appropriations and have nothing practically to show for them, this school has expended its appropriations, has educated its children, has maintained the farm in splendid condition, and has to show for it a dairy herd that is worth somewhere from $25,000 to $35,000. The pure-bred horses and hogs run into thousands of dollars in value, all accumulated out of the profits of the management of this farm.

There is not an individual in this dairy herd that is worth less than $250, from that up to $750, perhaps $1,000; in fact, some of the individuals are too good to sell, as no price has been placed upon them. This has all been done under the splendid management and efficient supervision of Supt. Sam Davis, the best Indian superintendent, in my judgment, in this country. He has 320 acres of land on which to operate. That is not sufficient for the support and maintenance of the amount of stock that he has there now, and he can, with 320 additional acres lying next to this land, produce an abundant food supply for this herd and keep it intact and eventually reduce the cost of the maintenance of this school. In fact, it is now below the cost of any other school, I think, in the United States and on the smallest acreage of any school in the United States.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, I would like a few minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. The price of this land is nominal. It is located right on the edge of a little village of a thousand people, I should say, and it is rated, I believe, at $130 an acre. This land undoubtedly will continue to rise in price and would ultimately show a great profit to the Government on the investment should this land be purchased. I could not conceive of an investment of this character losing the Government money. It is not like the appropriations that are made for expenses, because this is an investment in property that will constantly enhance in value as the community increases in population. I believe that it would be the wisest sort of expenditure for the Government to encourage this splendid school in the effort that it is making toward self-support. I do not think that anyone could possibly criticize the policy of purchasing this land, in view of the needs of the school and the fact that it will constantly decrease the expenditure for support. I often visit this institution and look over these splendid herds that are there, and I feel that such work as this ought to be appreciated by Congress in view of the slipshod manner that characterized much of Government expenditures. These herds supply the demands of many of the Indian schools of the country for pure-bred stock, and will continue to do so in a larger degree as these herds multiply. This work ought to be encouraged in a manner that would increase its usefulness to the Government. I think that it is a splendid example to set before the country to have at least one Indian school in the United States that shows a good reason for its existence, and this school certainly does. It is situated in the midst of four Indian reservations. It is splendidly equipped to give industrial training to these pupils, but the need of these 320 acres of land is apparent to any one who will look at the situation, and I hope that this committee will be able ultimately to add this land to the school farm.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I insist on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the pay of one special attorney for the Pueblo Indians of New Mexico, to be designated by the Secretary of the Interior, and for necessary traveling expenses of said attorney, $2,000, or so much thereof as the Secretary of the Interior may deem necessary.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 31, after line 20, insert the following, "for construction work on the Indian highway, extending from Mesa Verde National Park to Gallup, N. Mex., on the Navajo Reservation, $15,000; said sum to be reimbursed from any funds which are now or may hereafter be placed in the Treasury to the credit of said Indians: Provided, That such sum shall be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior in such manner and at such times and places as he may deem proper, and in the employment of Indian labor as far as possible for the construction of said highway.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the amendment.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman, what I want to say is this. I would suggest to the gentleman from Colorado I think that his amendment should read "for continuing" work on this road. As I recall I think we appropriated in one or two appropriation bills for this particular road if this is the road the gentleman has in mind.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. That is the road.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Then this should be for "continuing."

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I will ask to modify that language by substituting the word "continuing."

Mr. CAMPBELL. If that is true, of course, it is not subject to the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman will be permitted to modify his amendment. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, this matter came up before when this bill was under consideration, on the 4th of February, in the last Indian appropriation bill. At that time I presented to the House a very elaborate report from the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs upon this item and the desirability of building this road. This Indian highway extends 100 miles through the Navajo Indian Reservation in New Mexico. The amount the Interior Department estimated and reported necessary to complete it was $54,253.25, and they recommended that we appropriate $15,000 a year until the road was built. The Navajo Indians are a very wealthy tribe of Indians in a way. That is, they have a reservation of about 9,000,000 acres, and a large part of it contains coal that is very valuable, and a large part of it will be either farming land or good pasture land. They have, I think, something like 100,000 sheep that are very valuable, and the Indians are in good condition. They are fairly good workers and have done considerable work on that reservation, and both the Indians and the white people want this road built. It furnishes a very necessary outlet for the interior portion of the reservation that is very important for its development. I will frankly say that a large part of La Plata and Montezuma Counties in Colorado are also interested in the construction of this road. It will open up, furnish an outlet, and develop a large territory of country, and especially the entire San Juan Valley. I explained the importance of this road quite fully at the time I offered this same amendment to this same bill last February, and my remarks and the reports presented at that time appear at pages 2147 and 2148 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of February 4, 1916.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. Is this supposed to be an automobile road?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. They will hope to make it a good road that they can use auto trucks on and haul all sorts of freight over.

Mr. MANN. I am not talking about hauling freight. Is it supposed to be an automobile road for the benefit of touring automobiles?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Its primary purpose, I will say to the gentleman——

Mr. MANN. The gentleman hesitates.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. No; I do not hesitate at all. It can not be an automobile road in that country until it is made a good highway.

Mr. MANN. I understand that this is for the purpose of building a good highway. I want to know if this is an automobile road, and if that is the purpose?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. My purpose is to have constructed as good a highway as I possibly can for use by everybody and all kinds of vehicles and all kinds of people, and I hope it will be a good automobile road for all these people.

Mr. BORLAND. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Yes, sir.

Mr. BORLAND. Do I understand the Government has already commenced the construction of this road?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Yes.

Mr. BORLAND. Is this appropriation asked for in the gentleman's amendment a continuation of public work in the course of construction?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Yes.

Mr. BORLAND. What point is there to it? Does the gentleman discuss the point of order?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I do not understand that it is subject to a point of order.

Mr. BORLAND. The point of order has been reserved. What point of order can there be to it?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I do not think my amendment is subject to a point of order because the construction of this road was recommended and authorized in the last Indian appropriation bill and the first appropriation of $15,000 was made and has been expended on the work, and I am now asking for $15,000 more to continue that work of construction. But aside from the technical objection to it, I want to present the amendment upon its merits. I may say the distinguished chairman of the committee [Mr. STEPHENS] made a similar point of order against this amendment in the last bill and then kindly withdrew it afterwards, as the RECORD shows, because the committee at that time believed it was a worthy improvement and that this road ought to be built through that Indian reservation, and I hope the gentleman will again withdraw his point of order.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. When this project appeared before the House was there any statement as to the amount it would cost to build this road?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Oh, yes; I have it here.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will you please read it?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Certainly, if you will permit me. I have a statement here signed by the Secretary of the Interior, which is inserted in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of February 4, 1916.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Was it recommended by the department?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Very strongly.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. There is nothing allowed in the bill except $15,000.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. He recommends we allow $15,000 each year until it is completed. It appropriates $15,000. And I am asking to have that same continuing appropriation for this ensuing year, of $15,000. I have used the identical language that was approved in the last bill.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman permit me to read that language?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Surely.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It says:

For construction work on the Indian highway extending from the Mesa Verde National Park to Gallup, N. Mex., on the Navajo Reservation, $15,000, said sum to be reimbursed from any funds which are now or may hereafter be placed in the Treasury to the credit of said Indians: Provided, That such sum shall be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior in such manner and at such times and places as he may deem proper, and in the employment of Indian labor as far as possible for the construction of said highway.

There is nothing said about a subsequent appropriation of money, or that this road shall cost $45,000 or $50,000 or $75,000. It is only an appropriation to complete the road, but if they put in this word "construction" we have nothing to recommend to the House. We will have to have a separate appropriation. Therefore it is certainly subject to the point of order that I raised.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Will the gentleman permit me to read the latter portion of the report on this measure?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Certainly.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. The report reads as follows:

JANUARY 28, 1916.

MY DEAR MR. STEPHENS: Referring to your letter of January 14, requesting a report on H. R. 24, appropriating $15,000 for the construction of a wagon road on the Navajo Reservation, in New Mexico, I wish to give you a statement of the facts which demand attention in considering this bill.

The valley drained by the San Juan River lies partly in New Mexico and partly in Colorado. It is a fertile valley, with an abundance of water, and several thousand acres of land are under irrigation. Excellent crops are produced, but there is only one railroad entering the valley, and this has to cross the high mountains north and east of Durango, Colo. Freight rates are unusually high, and the inhabitants of the valley suffer from the inaccessibility of good markets. The Navajo Reservation in New Mexico forms the southern part of the valley, and as there is a railroad running through the towns located just south of the reservation in New Mexico, this vast stretch of Indian country acts as a barrier between the rest of the valley and these railroad towns.

Gallup is the most accessible railroad station south of the reservation, being located on the main line of the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railroad, while Farmington, near the center of the valley, is the terminal of the railroad entering the valley from Colorado. At the present time, to ship by rail from Farmington to Gallup, a distance of a little more than a hundred miles in an air line, the supplies must pass over a long circuitous route of some 600 miles via Albuquerque, N. Mex. It now requires about four days for mail to go from Shiprock, the agency for the San Juan jurisdiction, about 35 miles from Farmington, to Gallup by rail. From this it can be seen that the shipment of products from the valley by rail is made under most unsatisfactory conditions.

A large amount of traffic goes to Gallup at the present time from the valley by way of an overland route, running from Farmington to Shiprock and thence to Gallup. The route has been maintained for years by Indian labor, and it is in such shape that automobiles can make the trip during certain parts of the year. However, the summer rains in this region are torrential in character, and there are times when the arroyos run bank full, often carrying as high as 10 feet depth of water. After such rains large ditches are washed and travel is exceedingly difficult for any kind of vehicle. Water stands on the roads, and the surface is so rutted as to be impassable for long periods. When automobiles can travel on the road the trip from Shiprock to Gallup can be made in from 10 to 12 hours, while teams can make the trip in from 2 to 2½ days.

On the section of the road under the jurisdiction of the San Juan School, from Shiprock south to the Navajo jurisdiction, work has been done and the condition so improved that it is not believed advisable to make the large expenditure necessary to provide a permanent, first-class road. The route under the jurisdiction of the Navajo Agency, commencing at a point where the road enters the southern boundary of the reservation and running in a northerly direction to the San Juan jurisdiction, must be improved, however, before the route from Farmington to Gallup will be open at all times to all kinds of traffic.

There has been a great deal of agitation for good roads throughout this section. The people of San Juan County and southern Colorado are building good roads from Durango and farther north to the reservation line, while McKinley County is constructing a good road from the southern reservation line on to Gallup. The people of the valley are very desirous of having established a good, permanent highway which will permit the operation of automobile mail service between Farmington and Gallup by way of Shiprock, across the Navajo Reservation for a distance of about 100 miles, which will give an outlet for the sale of fruit and other products and connect the San Juan Valley with the main line of the Santa Fe system at Gallup. It is believed that the improvement of the stretch of road under the Navajo jurisdiction and the other improvements by the counties will permit the operation of seven-hour mail service between Gallup and Farmington. The Navajo population in the valley is considerable, which means that a large amount of Indian freight goes over the road annually, the Indians doing the freighting for the different traders on the reservation, and the Indians will share with the other inhabitants of the valley in the benefits to be derived from such an outlet.

The white people all request that the Government do its share by making the road passable across the reservation. No great amount of funds have been available, and maintenance work on the route now used is all that has been done. An engineer recently made a survey of the bad stretch of road, approximately 40 miles in length, and estimated that $54,253.25 would be needed to establish a first-class road. The Indians are unable to repair the road and there is no prospect of obtaining funds for the work unless an appropriation is made by Congress.

I believe that in a situation of this sort the Government should not let the Indian country prove a drawback to the other part of the San Juan Valley and a bar to the progress of the whole valley. I therefore recommend that the bill receive favorable consideration and that approximately $15,000 be appropriated for expenditure each year until the amount estimated has been appropriated and the project completed.

The report of the engineer is inclosed for the information of your committee, and return after its purpose has been served.

Cordially, yours,

FRANKLIN K. LANE,
Secretary.

Hon. JOHN H. STEPHENS,
Chairman Committee on Indian Affairs,
House of Representatives.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Is it not a fact that that is the request of the Secretary of the Interior, made through the Indian Department, and that Congress never acceded to that?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Congress adopted that recommendation and made the first $15,000 appropriation for work during the past summer, and that work has been done and the road is partially constructed.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Colorado has expired.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Colorado asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I will insert a part of the remainder of the report of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, March 18, 1915.

MY DEAR MR. TAYLOR: The receipt is acknowledged of your letter dated March 9, 1915, submitting a resolution adopted at a meeting held by the farmers of Montezuma County, Colo., at which it was urged that action be taken to agitate the construction of roads across the Navajo and Ute Indian Reservations to Gallup, N. Mex.

Good roads are recognized to be an important factor in the industrial progress of the Indians, and the office has had under consideration the improvement of conditions on the Navajo Reservation and the construction of a road entirely across the reservation from Gallup to Farmington by way of Shiprock. The superintendents of the various agencies having jurisdiction over the reservation have filed reports and plans giving an estimate of the cost of the work and showing that the proposed improvements would result in materially benefiting the Indians.

Owing to the depleted condition of funds applicable for the work, it has been impossible to take any direct action, and it appears that unless a special appropriation is made for the purpose the office would be unable to undertake any extensive work at this time.

The resolution submitted by you has been placed on file and will be given consideration in connection with the other papers in the case at any time funds become available.

Very truly, yours,

E. B. MERITT,
Assistant Commissioner.

Hon. EDWARD T. TAYLOR,
House of Representatives.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, September 11, 1915.

MY DEAR MR. TAYLOR: The receipt is acknowledged of your letter dated September 2, 1915, with further regard to the construction of roads across the Navajo and Ute Indian Reservations.

Since the reports were made by the superintendents of the various agencies having jurisdiction over the reservations, the superintendent of the San Juan Agency has been able to improve road conditions under his jurisdiction. Various road organizations and other bodies adjacent to the reservation have just recently presented resolutions regarding the improvement of the remainder of the route across the reservation toward Gallup. There are not yet funds available for extensive improvements, but with the view of doing everything possible to better the present conditions, an engineer has been detailed to make an investigation to ascertain the cost of necessary roads and bridges.

The investigation has not yet been completed. As soon as possible you will be advised of the information obtained and furnished with copies of the reports desired, as well as a draft of legislation in the event an appropriation seems advisable.

Very truly, yours,

E. B. MERITT,
Assistant Commissioner.

Hon. EDWARD T. TAYLOR,
Glenwood Springs, Colo.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, January 13, 1916.

MY DEAR MR. TAYLOR: I am returning herewith the copies of correspondence which were left in the office some time ago, with a copy of H. R. 24, providing for an appropriation of $15,000 for the construction of a wagon road on the Navajo Reservation in New Mexico.

This is only one of many proposed road and bridge projects in northwestern New Mexico for which appeals have been made for Government funds. There has been agitated the proposition of constructing a bridge across the San Juan River near Farmington, N. Mex., at a cost of approximately $20,000. Efforts have also been made to provide for the construction of a highway across the Jemez and Zia pueblos; also for the construction of a bridge across the Jemez River at a site within the Zia pueblo. I doubt the wisdom of pushing all these projects, and think it most advisable to decide which is the most urgent and then make concerted efforts to obtain an appropriation for the one.

The reports obtained on the San Juan River Bridge are somewhat conflicting in that there is a difference of opinion regarding the proper proportion of the cost which should be borne by the Indians. The data obtained regarding the Jemez River Bridge and the road across the Zia and Jemez pueblos is not definite enough to justify the making of a recommendation without further investigation.

As a survey has been made, data prepared, and all preliminary details arranged in the case of the Shiprock-Gallup Road, I feel that that project should receive preference.

Very truly, yours,

CATO SELLS, Commissioner.

Hon. E. T. TAYLOR,
House of Representatives.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, October 15, 1915.

MY DEAR MR. TAYLOR: Referring again to your letter regarding the improvement of a road across the Navajo Reservation on a line between Shiprock and Gallup, N. Mex., you are informed that the investigation referred to in office letter of September 11, 1915, has now been completed by an engineer of the Indian Irrigation Service. According to a survey made and an estimate prepared by him, it will require between $50,000 and $55,000 to construct a permanent highway over that part of the course that is yet unimproved. These figures far exceed superficial estimates of $20,000 or thereabouts heretofore made for the work. This may be accounted for by considering that all former estimates were not based on surveys but rather on observations taken while traveling over the country, which, though very smooth apparently, is in reality more or less broken by swales, to cross which it will be necessary to raise the roadbed for drainage.

The superintendent of the Navajo Agency suggests that a certain sum be set aside each year, in case the road is built, in order that the project may be completed within two or three years. Under this arrangement an appropriation of about $15,000 should be made annually.

The various organizations which took up the matter with this office have been advised that on account of the fact that the estimate for the Indian appropriation bill for the fiscal year 1917 has been completed all that can be done by this office is to keep the matter on file for consideration when preparing the estimate for the Indian bill for 1918. They have also been advised that if the commercial clubs and other organizations interested in the improvement of the road because of the benefit to be derived by tourists and white residents of the State shall see fit to urge legislation for this project this office will be glad to make such report thereon as conditions appear to justify and also furnish all the information and data at its command.

As suggested by you, there are inclosed copies of the reports made on this subject by the superintendents of the San Juan and Navajo Agencies, also a draft of legislation for your use in the event you see fit to introduce a bill providing for an appropriation.

Very truly, yours,

E. B. MERITT,
Assistant Commissioner.

Hon. E. T. TAYLOR,
House of Representatives.

I presented this report of the Interior Department and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. I presented them to the committee and to this House when this bill was up last February, and the House accepted the view of the Interior Department and appropriated $15,000. That is all we asked. Now, I supposed, of course, that the Interior Department having recommended that that road be built and the House and this committee having approved of it and made the money reimbursable and the Indians being in favor of it, the committee would again allow the same amount in this bill when they drafted the bill.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Certainly.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Let me ask the gentleman if the department this year estimated for the continuation of it?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. No; I do not think so. I supposed they having gone over the matter fully and made elaborate investigation of it that no further consideration or estimation was necessary at this time.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. The gentleman knows, of course, that every year the Treasury presents estimates to each of the appropriating committees by whom the bills are made up. Now, the estimates this year did not carry any item for the continuation of this road.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I think that is correct.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I will say frankly to the gentleman that I agreed with him about the matter last year, but this year we found the bill without any estimate for the road in it, and therefore we did not feel justified in inserting any amount in the bill for the road.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I will say, if the gentleman will permit me, that I was out home in Colorado in the campaign when this estimate was made up. I was not here, and I never had any opportunity of appearing before the Indian Committee or the Indian Bureau, and I never thought it was necesssary to either go before the bureau or before your committee.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I am not trying to attribute any failure to the gentleman from Colorado for not making this estimate, but I want to say that when we put an item in the bill we have not only before us the estimate but a justification from the bureau that presents it. In this case we had no estimate and we had no justification for the item, and therefore it did not go into the bill. To this day we have not any justification for it from any administrative officer of the Government. We have only what the gentleman from Colorado has so ably said.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I supposed that when they had made an estimate and had two or three engineers go down into that country and survey this route and make an estimate down to as close as 25 cents as to what it would cost, and had filed that here, and the Secretary of the Interior had made to this House and to the chairman of the committee and to the committee this very strong and favorable report, it was not necessary to have an estimate every year on the same measure.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. It is necessary.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I did not realize that they had to go over it and estimate it all over again. I supposed it was a settled project.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. The gentleman is familiar with the procedure of the House and knows that every year the Treasury Department sends to the Speaker of the House the estimates of the matters that are to go into the bill. Repeating what I have just said, when we have those estimates before us in the proper way we can make the proper justification for the items, but not having that estimate the committee was completely in the dark. Therefore we did not feel warranted in putting the item in the bill.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Of course I realize that the committee acted within the rule and practice, but at the same time I feel that, having gone over this matter fully, and having approved that project before, and started the work and having done one-third of it, we ought to proceed with it.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a ruling.

Mr. BORLAND. I would like to be heard on the point of order.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I insist, Mr. Chairman, upon the point of order being ruled upon at the present time.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, I would like to be heard on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the point of order that the gentleman from Texas makes?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. That it is new legislation and not authorized by law. Fifteen thousand dollars was authorized last year. As we have shown you, whether or not that has been expended, there is no authorization for it this year in the law.

Mr. BORLAND. I want to be heard on the point of order.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I agreed to move that the committee rise before 5 o'clock.

Mr. MANN. It was my reservation of the point of order. I am willing to submit the question to the House at this time.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, this amendment, as offered by the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TAYLOR], provides for the continuing of the work on this Indian highway, and it appears from the estimate that was submitted two years ago—there was an estimate for about $65,000 and a recommendation of $15,000 for construction—that one such appropriation has been made of $15,000. It does not make any difference whether or not the appropriation that was made of $15,000 showed on its face that it was the beginning of construction; but whether or not it was supposed at that time to be the complete amount for construction, the real question before the Chair is whether this appropriation is in fact a continuation of that work, because it might turn out that the original estimate was only $15,000.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, in order to save time I will withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is withdrawn. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TAYLOR].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. GARNER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 18453) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and had come to no resolution thereon.

LEAVE TO EXTEND REMARKS.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported the bill (H. R. 18542) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and for other purposes, which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report (H. Rept. 1209), ordered to be printed.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I reserve all points of order on the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin reserves all points of order.

CHANGES OF REFERENCE.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the adverse report on the bill (H. R. 16153) for the relief of Denny Costello be withdrawn from the files of the House, and that the bill be rereferred to the Committee on Claims. I will say in explanation of that that since this report was filed other evidence has been filed with the committee, and they desire to reconsider the claim.

Mr. MANN. Have the committee been consulted about this?

Mr. BORLAND. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Who made the report?

Mr. BORLAND. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. RUSSELL] made the report.

Mr. MANN. What is the claim?

Mr. BORLAND. It is a claim for reimbursement of the amount paid by a bondsman, who afterwards apprehended the criminal and returned him to justice.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND] asks unanimous consent to withdraw from the files of the House the adverse report on House bill 16153——

Mr. MANN. The only thing to do is to ask that the bill be recommitted. There is no withdrawal of the report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent that House bill 16153 be rereferred to the Committee on Claims. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that House bill 17845, to provide for the testing of the underground water supply in Lincoln County, Colo., which was referred to the Committee on Irrigation, be referred to the Committee on Appropriations. This is at the request of the Committee on Irrigation.

Mr. MANN. What does the bill propose, to make an appropriation?

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. Yes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to discharging the Committee on Irrigation from the further consideration of House bill 17845, and that the same be referred to the Committee on Appropriations?

There was no objection.

PENSIONS.

Mr. SHERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to consider in the House as in Committee of the Whole the bill (H. R. 18181) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent that the pension bill (H. R. 18181) be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, do we understand that there will be no further business to-day after this bill is disposed of?

Mr. KITCHIN. No other business.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SHERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to dispense with the first reading of the bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Page 35, line 21, strike out "$40" and insert "$50."

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee). The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. RUSSELL of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, December 12, 1916, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report on reexamination of Leaf River, Miss. (H. Doc. No. 1723); to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed, with illustrations.

2. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, reports on preliminary examination and survey of West Creek, N. J. (H. Doc. No. 1724); to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed, with illustrations.

3. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, reports on reexamination of Apalachicola River, the Cut-Off, Lee Slough, Lower Chipola River, and Upper Chipola River, Fla. (H. Doc. No. 1725); to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed, with illustrations.

4. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting data relative to the exchange of typewriters, adding machines, and other similar labor-saving devices in part payment for new machines used for the same purpose as those exchanged by the Panama Canal, for the period of July 1, 1915, to June 30, 1916 (H. Doc. No. 1726); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

5. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a memorandum of the Chief of Staff, recommending a change in the provision in the estimates under the fortifications bill in regard to the rental of suitable space for the drafting force of the Office of Chief of Ordnance (H. Doc. No. 1727); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

SENATE.

TUESDAY, December 12, 1916.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, Thou hast put an image of Thyself in the mind of man. The unity of life, the sequence of history, the obligations we owe one another arise out of the oneness of the life that we have in God. Thou hast called us into the great service of humanity. Thou hast taught us the sphere of our influence, the measure of our power, by the revelation of Thyself in contact with men. Thou hast served Thy creatures, and Thou hast loved them. And so we must serve, and so we must love. We pray Thee to call us by Thy spirit into this large service and inspire us with a constant thought that we are working together with God in the service which we rendered to our fellow men For Christ's sake. Amen.

THOMAS B. CATRON, a Senator from the State of New Mexico, appeared in his seat to-day.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

SENATOR FROM NORTH DAKOTA.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the certificate of the governor of North Dakota certifying that PORTER J. MCCUMBER was duly chosen by the qualified electors of the State of North Dakota a Senator from said State to represent said State in the Senate of the United States for the term of six years beginning on the 4th day of March, 1917.

Witness, his excellency our governor, Louis B. Hanna, and our seal hereto affixed at Bismarck, N. Dak., this 5th day of December, in the year of our Lord 1916.

[SEAL.] L. B. HANNA, Governor.

By the governor:

THOMAS HALL, Secretary of State.

SENATOR FROM MAINE.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the certificate of the governor of Maine certifying that FREDERICK HALE has been chosen a Senator from that State for the term of six years beginning March 4, 1917, which will be printed in the RECORD and placed on the files of the Senate.

The certificate is as follows:

STATE OF MAINE.

To all who shall see these presents, greeting:

Know ye that FREDERICK HALE, of Portland, in the county of Cumberland, on the 11th day of September, in the year of our Lord 1916, was chosen by the electors of this State a United States Senator to represent the State of Main in the United States Senate for the term of six years from the 4th of March, 1917

In testimony whereof I have caused the seal of the State to be hereunto affixed.

Given under my hand at Augusta the 1st day of December, in the year of our lord 1916, and in the one hundred and forty-first year of the independence of the United States of America.

[SEAL.] OAKLEY C. CURTIS.

By the governor:

JOHN E. BUNKER, Secretary of State.

STEAMBOAT-INSPECTION SERVICE (H. DOC. NO. 1437).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of Commerce, transmitting, pursuant to law, a set of general rules and regulations prescribed by the Board of Supervising Inspectors, Steamboat-Inspection Service, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

REPORT OF FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION (H. DOC. NO. 1485).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the annual report of the Federal Trade Commission for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1916, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce and ordered to be printed.

RESOLUTIONS OF SYMPATHY ON THE DEATH OF SENATOR CLARKE.

The VICE PRESIDENT presented resolutions adopted by sundry citizens of the municipality of Calumpit, Bulacan, P. I., in mass meeting assembled, on the death of Hon. JAMES P. CLARKE, late a Senator from the State of Arkansas, and President pro tempore of the Senate, which were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[Translation.]

CALUMPIT, BULACAN, P. I., November 1, 1916.

SIR: I have the honor to forward you, inclosed herewith, copy of a resolution of sympathy adopted by the residents of this municipality of Calumpit, Bulacan, upon the death of the Senator from Arkansas, United States, Hon. JAMES P. CLARKE, valiant defender of Philippine independence, in order that you may advise the American Senate thereof.

Very respectfully,

M. FERNANDO.

The honorable the SECRETARY OF THE AMERICAN SENATE, Washington, D. C.

[Translation.]

MESSAGE OF SYMPATHY.

CALUMPIT, BULACAN, P. I., October 29, 1916.

The town of Calumpit voices the regret created throughout the Philippines by the news of the death of Hon. JAMES P. CLARKE, Senator from Arkansas, in a mass meeting composed of the residents of said municipality, held on this date at 6 p. m. in the Plaza Rizal, opposite the city hall. After a patriotic address delivered by the municipal president, Mr Mariano Serrano, upon the death of Hon. JAMES P. CLARKE, Senator from Arkansas, it was agreed, in the form of a resolution, to express the sympathy of the town of Calumpit for the death of the Senator, and for which purpose a committee of three was appointed, composed of Messrs. Mariano Serrano, Deogracias Macam, and Sergio Céspedez, to draft and send the message of sympathy.

RESOLUTION.

"Whereas the Manila press, in telegrams received from the United States, has given the sad news of the death in America of Senator JAMES P. CLARKE;

"Whereas it is common knowledge that the deceased Senator is the author of the famous amendment called the 'Clarke amendment,' whereby the concession of absolute independence to the Philippines was provided, to take effect in not less than two nor more than four years;

"Whereas said amendment, while through unprecedented efforts of some enemies to our cause in the United States, was not converted into law, was a faithful and unmistakable expression of the sympathies of the illustrious Senator, deceased, with the cause of independence of the Filipino people;

"Whereas in the death of Senator JAMES P. CLARKE the Philippine Islands have lost one of their most loyal, enthusiastic, and determined supporters of their cause: Therefore the town of Calumpit

"Resolved, To express, as it hereby does express, the profound sorrow with which it has received the news of the death of Hon. JAMES P. CLARKE, of Arkansas, Member of the United States Senate, and President pro tempore thereof.

"Resolved further, That the committee appointed forward copies of this resolution to the Senate of the United States, to the family of the deceased, and to the Manila press, especially to the papers El Ideal and Consolidación, for its publication, as well as to the two houses of the Philippine Legislature."

MARIANO SERRANO.
DEOGRACIAS MACAM.
SERGIO CÉSPEDEZ.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 7621. An act prohibiting the interment of the body of any person in the cemetery known as the Cemetery of the White's Tabernacle, No. 39, of the Ancient Order of Sons and Daughters, Brethren and Sisters of Moses, in the District of Columbia; and

H. R. 18181. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE PRESIDENT presented telegrams in the nature of memorials from the New York Joint Board of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America, and from the Working Men's Circle, of Philadelphia, Pa., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to further restrict immigration, which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a memorial of the Civil War revenue cotton tax claimants in the case of Johnson v. McAdoo pending in the court of appeals in the District of Columbia, remonstrating against the passage of the bill (S. 3732) to refund the cotton tax to the States wherein collected, which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN presented a petition of sundry citizens of Portland, Oreg., praying for the placing of an embargo on food products, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. GALLINGER presented a petition of the Citizens' Northwest Suburban Association, of Washington, D. C., praying for the erection of a new municipal hospital, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also presented the petition of Seth W. Jones, of Portsmouth, N. H., praying for an increase in the salary of the employees of the Internal-Revenue Bureau, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also presented a petition of F. H. Mills, Charles A. Hynson, and H. T. Butler, foremen of the Federal Penitentiary at Atlanta, Ga., praying for a raise in salary, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. LODGE presented resolutions of the Board of Aldermen of Medford, the City Council of Lawrence, and the City Council of Revere, all in the State of Massachusetts, favoring an investigation into the high cost of living, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented petitions of sundry citizens of Boston, Leicester, and Holyoke, all in the State of Massachusetts, praying for national prohibition, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. THOMPSON presented a petition of sundry citizens of Manhattan, Kans., praying for national prohibition, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a memorial of the Farm Bureau of McPherson County, Kans., and a memorial of the Cooperative Grain Dealers' Association of Kansas, remonstrating against the placing of an embargo on food products, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Hutchinson, Kans., praying for the placing of an embargo on food products, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. COLT presented a petition of the Business Men's Association of Pawtucket, R. I., praying that an appropriation be made for the widening of the channel from Providence Harbor to that city, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I am obliged to leave the city this evening for two or three days. I hold in my hand a number of petitions signed by Charles Wade, of St. Louis, and some twenty-seven or twenty-eight hundred other people of the State of Missouri, praying for the passage of the bill now pending—the immigration bill—with the literacy clause. I ask that I may present these petitions and have them referred, and I should like to have the heading of one of them, with the first name, printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the petitions were order to lie on the table, and the heading of one of the petitions was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

HON. WILLIAM J. STONE,
Senator from Missouri, Washington, D. C.

HONORED SIR: As citizens of the United States, as well as of Missouri, we most earnestly appeal to you to support the immigration bill containing the "illiteracy test," and assist in having an early vote on same by the Senate. We are confident you have read the report and final recommendations of the Immigration Commission, especially that part in which they say: "We are receiving too many undesirables," and "that the 'illiteracy test' is the most feasible single method of stopping them." Surely you realize the need of this legislation.

CHARLES WADE
(And many others).

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS.

Mr. OVERMAN. I am directed by the Committee on Rules, to which was referred House concurrent resolution No. 61, providing for the enrollment of certain bills and joint resolutions which passed both Houses at the last session of the Congress, and so forth, to submit an adverse report (No. 875) thereon, and I ask that the concurrent resolution be postponed indefinitely.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The concurrent resolution will be postponed indefinitely.

ST. FRANCIS RIVER BRIDGE, ARKANSAS.

Mr. SHEPPARD. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably without amendment the bill (S. 6956) to authorize the construction, maintenance, and operation of a wagon bridge across the St. Francis River at a point one-half mile northwest of Parkin, Cross County, Ark., and I submit a report (No. 874) thereon. I ask for its immediate consideration.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED.

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill, which was ordered to be printed and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Commerce.

CORRUPT PRACTICES.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, on September 6 I submitted an amendment to be proposed to the bill known as the corrupt-practices act. That bill has been referred back to the Committee on Privileges and Elections. I asked that my amendment might lie on the table. I now ask that it be referred to the committee, so that it may be considered in connection with the consideration of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be so referred.

FUNERAL EXPENSES OF THE LATE SENATOR JAMES P. CLARKE.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, on a subsequent day I shall ask the Senate to fix a date when eulogies may be had touching the life and services of the late Senator CLARKE, of Arkansas. I now submit the following resolution and ask for its appropriate reference.

The resolution (S. Res. 287) was read and referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay from the miscellaneous items of the contingent fund of the Senate the actual and necessary expenses incurred by the committee appointed by the Vice President in arranging for and attending the funeral of the late Senator JAMES P. CLARKE, from the State of Arkansas, upon vouchers to be approved by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

COMMITTEE SERVICE.

Mr. CHILTON, on the request of Mr. KERN, was excused from further service as chairman of the Committee on the Census.

Mr. SHEPPARD, on his own request, was excused from further service on the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Agriculture.

On motion of Mr. KERN, it was Ordered:

1. That Senator CHILTON, of West Virginia, be appointed chairman of the Committee on Printing to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of Senator FLETCHER;

2. That Senator SHEPPARD, of Texas, be appointed chairman of the Committee on the Census to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of Senator CHILTON;

3. That Hon. WILLIAM F. KIRBY, Senator from the State of Arkansas, be appointed chairman of the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Agriculture to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of Senator SHEPPARD;

That Senator KIRBY be assigned to membership on the following committees to fill vacancies caused by the death of Senator CLARKE, of Arkansas, viz: Committee on Commerce and Committee on Military Affairs, and to membership on the following committees to fill vacancies caused by the retirement of Senator Taggart: Committee on Patents, Committee on Interoceanic Canals, Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment, and Committee on Disposition of Useless Papers in the Executive Departments;

4. That Senator SHIELDS, of Tennessee, be appointed a member of the Committee on Foreign Relations to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Senator CLARKE, of Arkansas; and

5. That Senator HOLLIS, of New Hampshire, be appointed a member of the Committee on Pensions to fill the vacancy occasioned by the retirement of Senator Taggart.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

H. R. 7621. An act prohibiting the interment of the body of any person in the cemetery known as the Cemetery of the White's Tabernacle, No. 39, of the Ancient Order of Sons and Daughters, Brethren and Sisters of Moses, in the District of Columbia, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

H. R. 18181. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

REGULATION OF IMMIGRATION.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there further morning business? [After a pause.] The morning business is closed.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 10384, the unfinished business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10384) to regulate the immigration of aliens to, and the residence of aliens in, the United States.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The pending question is on the amendment of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] to the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, I rise to invite the attention of the Senate not so much to the pending amendment, although I am prepared to discuss that, as to the general subject matter of this legislation, and the situation in which both this body and the country find themselves with respect to it.

In the first place, Mr. President, it can not be either denied or doubted that the pending measure is not a partisan measure. A great majority of the Senators who sit on this side of the Chamber favor this bill, and it is likewise true that a great majority of the Senators who sit on the other side of the Chamber are equally earnest and honest in its advocacy. On the other hand, Mr. President, there are Senators on both sides of the Chamber, I think, certainly some on this side, who are equally earnest and equally honest in their opposition to the measure. For those Senators, whether they be Democrats or Republicans, I have nothing but the profoundest respect. Nothing that I shall say, I hope, will be construed by any of them as in any way reflecting upon their motives or challenging their right to oppose this legislation that I so earnestly favor.

Mr. President, it seems to me that this legislation, above all other immigration bills that have been presented to the American Congress and engaged the attention of this body, rests on two sound fundamental propositions:

First, that, as a rule, so far as we can accomplish it, so far as we are permitted by existing international obligations to do so, it shall be the fixed and settled policy of this country not to invite, and wherever we can avoid it not to permit, immigration into this country from any race or the members of any race who are not capable of assimilating with our own people and becoming a permanent part of the American body politic.

The second fundamental upon which this bill rests is, in my judgment, equally as sound. It is that in this free Republic of ours, where the perpetuity of our institutions and the success of our Government depend upon the enlightenment and intelligence of the people who constitute its electorate, it is right and proper that we should require of immigrants who come to our shores the possession of a certain amount of intelligence, just as in a majority of the American Commonwealths we require our own people before they may become and remain voters of the Republic that they shall be possessed of a certain amount of intelligence.

So, Senators, the propositions of this bill fundamentally are but two: First, that hereafter, if this legislation shall be enacted, it shall be the fixed and settled policy of the American people not to permit immigration on any extended scale from members of any race who are not capable of assimilating with our own, whose sons and daughters are not of a blood and lineage which will fit them for intermarriage with our own sons and daughters; and, second, that we will seek to exclude from this country as far as we can do it, by tests that are exceedingly reasonable at first and ought to be made more rigid as time progresses, the vast mass of ignorant, unlettered, uneducated, and unintelligent persons who have in the past invaded this country from other shores.

Mr. President, objection was made at the last session of Congress to the consideration of this bill on the ground that it was pressed when immigration into our country had been greatly decreased as the result of the great foreign war, that there was no necessity for legislation of this kind, whatever might be said on that subject under different conditions and at a different time. That argument did not appeal to me when it was made, and it does not appeal to me now. I have always been taught and I have always believed that an ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure. I have always thought and I have always believed, as I now think and believe, that the proper time to prepare against an emergency of this sort is when we have the power and the opportunity to prepare against it, regardless of whether the immediate danger is pressing and patent or not.

It has developed, Mr. President, during the consideration of this measure that international considerations of the most delicate sort are necessarily involved in the consideration of such a measure. The great nations with whom we are on terms of peace and amity and with whom we have maintained treaties of that kind and character are sensitive beyond expression to the provisions of measures of this sort. It has seemed to me, therefore, that at a time when the policy of almost every great nation on earth is to keep their own people at home, at a time when it is almost certain that no serious objections can or will be urged by a foreign power to the consideration and passage of such a measure, and at a time when it is almost certain that no international complications of a serious character can possibly result from it, that of all times that is the proper time for the consideration and determination of a measure of this kind.

Mr. President, I do not know that other Senators will agree with me; I do not know that a majority of my colleagues even on this side of the Chamber will indorse the statement I am about to make; but I do not hesitate to say, measuring my words, with full responsibility for them, that if I could have my way I would write in plain, unvarnished, and unmistakable language into the American statutes that no immigrants could come to these shores who were not of pure Caucasian blood, because, after all, when all is said and all is done, this country is the white man's country, dedicated to his civilization and governed by his laws; and while I would not treat with injustice the humblest citizen of any race within our borders, I do not see why we should admit yellow men, brown men, or black men into this country to add to the confusion that we already have. It seems to me that the sound policy, the safe policy, the wise policy would be to admit Caucasian immigrants only.

Mr. President, there is another phase of this great question to which I wish to invite the attention of the Senate briefly—and I intend to be very brief this morning—and that is the labor phase. I have never in my life been accused, either here or at home, of being in subordination to labor interests or under their control; on the other hand, I have always endeavored to treat them exactly as I do all the balance of my constituents and to mete out to them, just as I endeavor to mete out to every citizen of the United States upon whose public interests I am called to pass in this body, equal and exact justice so far as my mind can weigh it and measure it; no more and no less.

There have been times, there have been occasions, and there have been questions upon which I have not been in entire sympathy with the demands of organized labor, because at those times, on those occasions, and on those questions I have thought their demands were extreme and unjust. I must confess, sir, that in respect to this question my sentiments are entirely different. I know that the great bulk of the American laboring people favor this legislation, and I believe they are right in favoring it. I stand with them on this matter, because I believe the position in which they stand is the one that the true interests of my country require that I also should occupy.

I have never been, sir, a protectionist either in principle or in practice, either with reference to tariff legislation or other legislation, and yet it has been impossible for me not to sympathize with the plea made by the American laboring man that if everything else in this country was to be protected by law human labor ought also to be protected by law.

I do not plant my advocacy of this measure on that ground, however; if that were all that was in it I should oppose legislation of this character; but I do think the American workingman is right when he says that our laws ought to be so drafted, our policies ought to be so directed and so framed that people shall not come to this country of ours to give him unfair competition, to skim the country, and then to return to some foreign shore with the proceeds of a few years' cut-throat wages, that are princely to him and that have come out of the pockets of the American workingman, reducing him in the standard and scale of living.

For every immigrant who comes to these shores of a suitable race, capable of assimilation into our body politic, fit to marry and to intermarry with our sons and daughters, possessed of a reasonable amount of intelligence so that he may comprehend and enjoy the blessings of the most enlightened Government upon this earth, I have a hearty hand of welcome extended and outstretched, provided he comes with the desire and intention to become a part and parcel of this country, to share our lot with us; provided he comes renouncing his allegiance to all foreign powers and potentates and princes, determined to bear true faith and allegiance only to the United States of America; provided he comes to become a part and parcel of this great Republic, a sharer in its destiny, a bearer of its burdens; but against the immigrant who comes, in most instances, induced by the greed of steamship companies and of labor slave drivers, merely to stay a while, to skim up what he can and take it back to his own country, who comes knowing nothing and caring less about American institutions, American history, American government, and the American people, I would, if I had the power, close the door forever in his face.

Mr. President, it is not necessary that I should discuss the details of this bill which comes from the committee of which I am a member. The amendments suggested are not important; they are not fundamental. The argument has already been made; the case is made up; and I should weary your patience unnecessarily and inexcusably if I undertook to go through the details of the bill.

I will say with reference to the provision with which my friend from Missouri [Mr. REED] found so much fault—the latitudinal lines that the committee drew—that I think every Senator in this body understands full well why that was done and exactly what it means. If other territory besides that specifically described in the first part of the amendment is included, it is simply to show a certain power that we treat other powers just as we treat it, and that the legislation is not confined exclusively to any one power. There is no material number of immigrants from any other country who can be affected by its terms and conditions, or who will be, in all probability.

Mr. President, I believe that the overwhelming verdict of the people is for this bill. It has had long consideration in both Houses of this Congress and of preceding Congresses. It has been thoroughly assimilated, thoroughly digested, not only by the Members of this body and those of the other Chamber, but by the great masses of the American people; and I believe that when this bill shall receive the approval of this body, shall emerge from Congress to make its way to the White House, it will receive very careful consideration there before our distinguished President will veto it. I trust that he may not do so; I trust that his judgment, enlightened and instructed by the four years of great administration through which we have just passed, will be matured and possibly changed in some particulars in this matter. If not, I believe the verdict of the American people and of the American Congress is already made, that this bill is destined to be written on our statute books, with the Executive approval, I hope; without it, if must be.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ASHURST in the chair). The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Missouri to the amendment of the committee made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the amendment be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 7, line 11, after the words "natives of," it is proposed to insert the words "Africa or of," so that it will read:

> Unless otherwise provided for by existing treaties, persons who are natives of Africa or of islands not possessed by the United States.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] is not in his seat. I take it he desires to discuss the amendment, and I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Gore	McLean	Smith, Md.
Bankhead	Gronna	Martin, Va.	Smith, S. C.
Beckham	Harding	Martine, N. J.	Smoot
Borah	Hardwick	Nelson	Sterling
Brady	Hollis	Newlands	Stone
Brandegee	Hughes	Norris	Sutherland
Bryan	Husting	Overman	Swanson
Catron	James	Page	Thomas
Chamberlain	Johnson, Me.	Penrose	Thompson
Clapp	Jones	Phelan	Tillman
Clark	Kenyon	Reed	Townsend
Colt	Kern	Robinson	Vardaman
Culberson	Kirby	Shafroth	Wadsworth
Cummins	La Follette	Sheppard	Warren
Curtis	Lane	Sherman	Works
Dillingham	Lippitt	Simmons
Fernald	Lodge	Smith, Ariz.
Gallinger	McCumber	Smith, Ga.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I desire to state that the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] is detained at his home by sickness. I wish also to announce the absence of the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER]. He is engaged on official business.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I desire to announce the absence of the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL] on account of illness; and while I am on my feet I make the same statement in reference to his colleague [Mr. BROUSSARD]. They are both detained from the Chamber on account of sickness. I will let this announcement stand for the day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty-nine Senators have answered to their names. A quorum of the Senate is present. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Missouri to the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I desire to withdraw that amendment, and offer in its stead the following:

After the words "natives of," in line 11 on page 7, insert "Africa, except persons of the white race, natives of," so that the clause will read:

Unless otherwise provided for by existing treaties, persons who are natives of Africa, except persons of the white race, natives of islands not possessed by the United States adjacent to the Continent of Asia.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 7, in the committee amendment made as in Committee of the Whole, on line 11, before the word "islands," it is proposed to insert the words "Africa, except persons of the white race, natives of"; so that, if amended, it will read:

Unless otherwise provided for by existing treaties, persons who are natives of Africa, except persons of the white race, natives of islands not possessed by the United States adjacent to the Continent of Asia.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Missouri to the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I simply make the statement that this amendment will exclude the black races of Africa. If it is accepted I shall offer an amendment to include the same races that are now coming in large numbers to this country from certain islands of the sea. It is true that there is only a very small immigration of the black race from Africa to this country at this time, but there is a considerable immigration of that race from certain islands, and I am informed that it is of a highly undesirable character.

It has been said that it is not necessary to include Africa because of the small immigration. Upon that question I appeal to the argument made by the eloquent Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK], who warned us that the time to prevent immigration was before it had come to this country in any large numbers—a very logical and proper statement, and one which ought to apply here.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, if the Senator from Missouri will allow me, as chairman of the committee, speaking for myself alone, I will very readily accept the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. REED. If the committee accepts it——

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, possibly the Senate may not accept it.

Mr. REED. Very well. I will withhold any further remarks until we hear from the other side.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, it strikes me that this is an unnecessary amendment so far as Africa is concerned. The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], chairman of the committee, on yesterday called attention to the fact that in 95 years only 14,000 immigrants had come to this country from Africa, and that if the literacy test had been applied to them 83 per cent of them would not have been admitted. So that, as I said on yesterday, the number is absolutely negligible, and it does not seem to me that legislation with regard to them is at all necessary.

Turning to Senate Document 662, Sixty-first Congress, third session, entitled "Dictionary of Races or Peoples," I find, on page 101, this language:

The immigration statistics of the race are of no significance so far as Africa is concerned, for only 15 are recorded as having come from that continent in 1907.

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] suggests to me aside that in 10 years there have been only 712 immigrants of all kinds from Africa. That does not seem to be a great peril to our institutions. That there is a considerable immigration from Portuguese territory, the Azores, and the Cape Verde Islands is beyond a doubt true, although that number, according to this document, is inconsequential, being only 341 in 1907. The Senator from Missouri, I believe, intends to offer a further amendment excluding those people.

Again quoting the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], who is a member of the Committee on Immigration, he tells me that in 10 years there have been 8,000 immigrants from those islands or that territory, which is of some consequence; but——

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator pardon me?

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. REED. On that point the figures handed me by the committee are to the effect that from the West Indies there came to this country in 1907, 4,561; in 1908, 3,563; in 1909, 3,340; in 1910, 3,769; in 1911, 4,973; in 1912, 4,885; in 1913, 4,891; in 1914, 5,724; in 1915, 4,004; and in 1916, 3,257, making a total coming to this country from 1907 to 1916 of 43,067; and that from the other islands of the Western Hemisphere there came 5,321.

Mr. GALLINGER. That, as I understand, represents the immigration from the West Indies, including Cuba.

Mr. REED. There came from Portugal, including the Cape Verde and the Azores Islands, 8,825 in the period referred to, and there came to this country a total of people of this race from 1907 to 1916 of 57,931, according to these figures.

Mr. GALLINGER. But, Mr. President, if the literacy test which is found in this bill, and which I trust may remain in the bill, had been applied to those immigrants a very small proportion of them would have been admitted, probably not 10 per cent of them. So that after all the danger is not imminent; and, as I said a moment ago regarding the immigration from Africa, it seems to me hardly of sufficient consequence for us to solemnly legislate against those few people who find their way here.

I sincerely hope that the amendment including the word "Africa" will not be agreed to, and then we can deal with the question of immigration from the West Indies, which is of some consequence, while the immigration from Africa is so inconsequential that it seems to me absolutely unnecessary to deal with it in this bill.

That is all I care now to say about the matter, Mr. President, and I am ready to vote on the pending amendment, reserving the right to vote according to my best judgment on any further amendments which the Senator from Missouri may offer.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, just a word in reply. These arguments all proceed upon this line: First, there are not many people coming; second, there is another provision of the bill that will exclude most of those who may come, and therefore there should be no legislation on the subject.

Now, either these people are desirable or they are undesirable. If they are desirable they ought not to be excluded by any test. If they are undesirable as a class they should be excluded, so that all that you can say for the literacy test is that it reduces the evil.

The Senator states that it is not of sufficient importance to solemnly legislate against Africa. We could pass an amendment including Africa in about five minutes if the committee's suggestion of accepting the amendment were adopted. We are solemnly legislating with reference to a subject, and why not cover it?

But, Mr. President, while there is only a small number of immigrants from Africa coming to this country to-day, who shall say, in view of the changing industrial and economic conditions of the earth, that there may not be vast bodies of these people brought to this country in the near future? If they should come, I take it there are few men here who would want to see that movement. If they are to be prevented from coming, the time to do it is now, while we have that question thrust upon us.

I ask that this amendment, which the committee is ready to accept, be adopted, and I shall then frame one which will cover the immigration which comes to us from certain islands of the sea and which I think everybody regards as highly undesirable from many standpoints.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] to the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. SMOOT. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER]. I do not see him present, and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. GALLINGER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN], who does not seem to be present. Not knowing how he would vote on this question, I withhold my vote. If privileged to vote, I would vote "nay."

Mr. McLEAN (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS]. In his absence, I withhold my vote. As I understand the senior Senator from Montana will not be here this week, I will let this announcement stand for the day.

Mr. PENROSE (when Mr. OLIVER'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. OLIVER] is absent from the city. Were he present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. TILLMAN (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] to the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL] and vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CATRON (after having voted in the negative). I am paired with the senior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN]. I observe that he is not present, and I therefore withdraw my vote.

Mr. GALLINGER. I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN] to the junior Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] and vote "nay."

Mr. DILLINGHAM (after having voted in the negative). I desire to inquire whether the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH] has voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I withdraw my vote, having a general pair with that Senator.

Mr. LIPPITT. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH]. In his absence, I withhold my vote.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I have been requested to announce that the senior Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS] is detained on account of illness.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER] to the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. LEA] and vote "yea."

Mr. CURTIS. I have been requested to announce that the senior Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL] is paired with the senior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CHILTON], and that the junior Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON] is paired with the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS].

The result was announced—yeas, 32, nays 37, as follows:

YEAS—32.

Ashurst	Hollis	Overman	Smith, Ga.
Bankhead	James	Phelan	Smith, S. C.
Beckham	Johnson, Me.	Reed	Stone

So Mr. REED'S amendment to the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question recurs on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I offer the following amendment: Add at the end of the committee amendment now under consideration the following:

Also all persons, except white persons, from the West Indies and the Cape Verde and Azores Islands.

Now, Mr. President, I am going at least to have the satisfaction of finding out how much good faith there is in the Senate upon the question of excluding undesirables. The committee has brought in an amendment which proposes to exclude every human being in more than one-half of the territory of Russia, no matter what their education, no matter what their morals, no matter what their attainments; and the best information I can get is that the territory in Russia which is embraced within the exclusion provisions of the bill is populated by probably the best class of Russians.

The committee and Members who are advocating this measure have been loud in their claim that they desire to protect the people of this country from an influx of undesirables who are incapable of amalgamating themselves into the great body of the American people, and accordingly they propose to proscribe and keep out of this country members of races that have builded great civilizations, that have in times past produced men of great eminence, and at present can point to men of great eminence who belong to their countries and races.

The amendment that I now propose can not be brushed aside, as was the one just voted upon, on the ground that there is no immigration coming from these countries. There has been a total immigration from them in the last 15 years of 57,931, and that immigration seems to be steady and continuous.

It will be admitted by every candid man that the most undesirable immigration to this country to-day from any place on earth is from these islands, and I challenge any man in the Senate to dispute the fact—a class of people who in their morals, in their ideas of government, in all those things that make for citizenship, good or bad, is coming to this country from these islands that is the lowest, the most vicious coming to our country from any spot or spots of earth.

I want to see a vote on this question and a record vote. I want to see the consistency of men who will exclude millions of white people by territorial lines, not by any intellectual test nor any moral standard, but by the red lines of a map. I want to see their consistency. I want to see how much good faith there is back of this movement.

I am willing to submit the matter in just this form.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Missouri to the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will ask that it be read.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Let the amendment be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 7, at the end of the committee amendment to be found in line 23, after the word "north," insert a semicolon and the words:

Also all persons, except white persons, from the West Indies and the Cape Verde and Azores Islands.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator from Missouri, simply for information, whether his amendment excludes all immigration from Cuba except white people?

Mr. REED. Yes.

Mr. GALLINGER. All native Cubans?

Mr. REED. Yes.

Mr. GALLINGER. A country that we have in our legislation treated with the greatest possible consideration; and now we are going to exclude them from the privilege of coming into our country. The Senator may think that that is good legislation, but it does not appeal to me. Cuba is our neighbor, and ought to have been, as I have thought, a part of our possessions. There are a great many very good people in Cuba, as I happen to know personally, who are not white and who would make good citizens. If we exclude Cubans from our country, I suppose Cuba can retaliate and say that no Americans shall be permitted to go to Cuba. That is what I would do if I occupied the position that Cuba would if the amendment is agreed to. I think it would be a very great blow to the interests of some very good Americans. So I think Cuba ought to be excluded from the provisions of the Senator's amendment, as Cuba and the United States ought to be good neighbors.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I think the Senator is unduly alarmed about Cuba excluding Americans from Cuba. Cuba will exclude Americans from Cuba whenever America gets ready to be excluded, and not before.

Mr. GALLINGER. Possibly.

Mr. REED. The Government of Cuba is standing to-day because the United States Government is propping it up. Cuba could not exist as an independent nation 24 hours without the assistance of the Federal Government. Our rights are secured by treaty with Cuba.

The Senator may think there are a lot of good people in Cuba who are not of the white race. I would not say that all people who are not of the white race are bad people, but I say that no man not of the white race ought to be permitted to settle permanently in the United States of America. Already in our laws relating to naturalization we have excluded from the privilege of citizenship every race except the white race and the black race, and the black race no man can claim is the equal of the brown or the yellow race.

Mr. GALLINGER. Does the Senator claim that all the citizens of the island of Cuba who are not white are black? Is that the contention of the Senator?

Mr. REED. If they are not white they must be black, or a shade of color that is not white.

Mr. GALLINGER. Well, Mr. President, I think it is rather bad legislation to take into consideration the shades of color. I, however, am not going to occupy the time of the Senate in combating the Senator's amendment, but I am quite content to enter my protest against it and to vote against it. If the Senator puts it into the bill, I shall find no fault.

Mr. REED. The Senator on yesterday did not think it was bad taste to vote against a man because he happens to be a Jew.

Mr. GALLINGER. No; but I did not vote against him.

Mr. REED. He asked me the question whether I thought a Russian Jew was as good as a negro.

Mr. GALLINGER. I did not vote against him, and I do not intend to vote against him.

Mr. REED. Of course, I can not speak for the Senator, but I assume the Senator intends to vote for this bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is my purpose.

Mr. REED. And he intends to vote for the amendment of the committee.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is my purpose.

Mr. REED. The committee amendment excludes millions of people of pure white blood.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am going to vote for the bill. I will take my chances about that.

Mr. THOMAS. I should like to ask the Senator from Missouri if his amendment includes Porto Rico?

Mr. REED. It includes the West India Islands, which would include Porto Rico.

Mr. THOMAS. Then the effect of the amendment would be to prohibit Porto Ricans——

Mr. REED. Unless he is a white man.

Mr. THOMAS. From coming into the United States?

Mr. REED. Yes; not from becoming a citizen, but from coming to continental United States.

Mr. THOMAS. That is what I meant by my last statement.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment to the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CATRON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN]. As he is not present, I withhold my vote.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN (when his name was called). I transfer the general pair I have with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER] to the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. LEA] and vote "yea."

Mr. GALLINGER (when his name was called). Making the same transfer as on the former vote, I vote "nay."

Mr. SAULSBURY (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT], and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. TILLMAN (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] to the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL] and vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. LODGE. I am requested to announce that the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM] stands paired with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH]. If the Senator from Vermont were present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. CLARK (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE]. In the absence of that Senator, I withdraw my vote.

Mr. CURTIS. I am requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON] with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS]; and

The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL] with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CHILTON].

Mr. GALLINGER (after having voted in the negative). I withdraw the transfer of my pair to the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER], who has come into the Chamber, and in turn transfer it to the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], and will let my vote stand.

Mr. BORAH entered the Chamber.

Mr. GALLINGER. I withdraw my announced pair with the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] and transfer it to the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] and will let my vote stand.

The result was announced—yeas 28, nays 36, as follows:

YEAS—28.

Ashurst	Hardwick	Martin, Va.	Smith, Ga.
Bankhead	Hollis	Overman	Smith, S. C.

So Mr. REED's amendment to the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole was rejected.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I move to add at the end of the committee amendment the words "all persons who are not of the white race."

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me, I have prepared an amendment as to that matter. There seems to be some dissatisfaction on account of the longitudinal lines, and the Senator from Missouri may accept this amendment as we have worked it out. I move, on page 27, line 24, after the word "to," that there be inserted the words "white persons nor to." I ask the Secretary to read the paragraph as proposed to be amended.

The SECRETARY. In the House text on page 7, line 24, it is proposed before the word "persons" to insert the words "white persons nor to," so that it will read:

The provision next foregoing, however, shall not apply to white persons nor to persons of the following status or occupations.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, will the Senator from South Carolina, in a word, explain precisely what that amendment accomplishes?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, there seems to be, and there is, ground for the objection that in the excluded territory there would be very desirable immigrants.

Mr. GALLINGER. In the excluded territory according to the Senator's map?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Yes; that is all.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think that is a wise amendment.

Mr. REED. I have no objection to that amendment so far as I am concerned. Is the amendment adopted, then, Mr. President?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri withdraw his amendment?

Mr. REED. No; let this amendment take precedence of mine. Then I shall desire to ask a question.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The parliamentary situation——

Mr. REED. I withdraw my amendment for the sake of clearing the parliamentary situation.

The VICE PRESIDENT. But the committee amendment is now before the Senate, and the yeas and nays have been ordered on the committee amendment.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. This is not an amendment to a committee amendment, but to the House text.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Then this is not an amendment of the committee amendment.

Mr. LODGE. It comes on the next line.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is to the House text. So, in the ordinary procedure of the bill the yeas and nays must first be called on concurring in the committee amendment.

Mr. REED. If that is the parliamentary situation in which we find ourselves I suggest to the Senator from South Carolina that he could very easily meet it by offering his amendment to the language of the committee amendment instead of to the subsequent language.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I had intended to say to the Chair that in effect this amendment really is an amendment to the amendment of the committee, the purpose being to amend the foregoing amendment of the committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair has no doubt about that; but that does not make any difference in the parliamentary situation.

Mr. LODGE. I ask unanimous consent that the question may be first taken on the amendment proposed by the Senator from South Carolina.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none, and it is unanimously agreed that the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina may first be disposed of. The question is on that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question now is on the amendment of the Senator from Missouri to the amendment of the committee made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. REED. Now, Mr. President, I move to strike out of the committee amendment the following language, "not possessed by the United States," occurring in lines 11 and 12, on page 7.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 7, in the committee amendment, on lines 11 and 12, it is proposed to strike out the words "not possessed by the United States," so that it will read:

> Persons who are natives of islands adjacent to the Continent of Asia situate south of the twentieth parallel of latitude north, west of the one-hundred and sixtieth meridian of longitude east from Greenwich.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, before that amendment is acted upon I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Missouri to a decision of the Supreme Court, with which I presume he is familiar, and which I think would apply in this case. The decision of the Supreme Court in Gonzales against Williams, One hundred and ninety-second United States Reports, page 1, is to the effect that citizens of the insular possessions of the United States, while not citizens of this country in the full and complete sense, are not aliens within the meaning of our immigration laws. The person involved in that case was a Porto Rican, but, of course, a Philippine Islander is in the same category.

In view of that decision, if this amendment passes, I do not know what its effect may be in reference to the Philippine Islands; but it seems to me that, so long as that decision stands, Filipinos would be quasi citizens and be entitled to all the rights and privileges of citizenship, so far as that decision would guarantee them.

Mr. REED. That decision only goes to the effect that they are not aliens under the immigration laws. In my opinion, that decision makes it all the more necessary that now, in this law, we shall take the position that they shall be excluded by this statute, and such is the effect of my amendment.

Now, just one word about it, so that every one may understand the import of the amendment. I do not intend to argue it. It is proposed by the committee to exclude the inhabitants of all the islands adjacent to Asia within certain territorial limits, except those islands now possessed by the United States; in other words, the Filipino is excepted because of our relations to the Philippine Islands. Our relations to the Philippine Islands do not make the Filipino any more desirable as a citizen than if we did not sustain those relations. He is equally as detrimental to this country as are the inhabitants of the other islands who are excluded. He is coming to this country in considerable number; he has been imported into the Sandwich Islands in great numbers to take the place of the labor there, and there is a genuine peril from this source, if there be any peril in the immigration question. I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CATRON (when his name was called). Being generally paired with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN], I withhold my vote.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN (when his name was called). Announcing the same transfer of my pair as heretofore, I vote "yea."

Mr. GALLINGER (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN], and in his absence withhold my vote, unless I can secure a transfer of the pair.

Mr. SAULSBURY (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT], and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. THOMAS (when his name was called). In the absence of my pair, I withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. TILLMAN. I transfer my pair with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] to the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL] and vote "yea."

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH], who, I notice, is absent, and I therefore withhold my vote. If permitted to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. GALLINGER. I transfer my pair with the Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN] to the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING] and vote "nay."

Mr. CURTIS. I have been requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON] with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS]; and

The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL] with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CHILTON].

The result was announced—yeas 12, nays 46, as follows:

YEAS—12.

Ashurst	Lane	Reed	Tillman
Chamberlain	Lee, Md.	Shields	Vardaman
Hardwick	Overman	Smith, Ariz.	Williams

So Mr. REED's amendment to the amendment of the committee made as in Committee of the Whole was rejected.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I have a number of other amendments which I had intended to present, the import of which would have been to bar from this country all immigrants except those of the white race. I have sufficiently tested the temper of the Senate upon the amendments which have been offered, and understand perfectly well that it would be futile to offer any further amendments. I have not the slightest desire to take the time of the Senate unnecessarily. I make this statement in justice to myself, in order that it may be understood that I do not offer further amendments because I recognize the futility of the effort.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I move to amend the proposed amendment of the committee by inserting, after the word "treaties" in line 11, page 7, the words "and agreements as to passports," so that it will read:

> Unless otherwise provided for by existing treaties and agreements as to passports.

Mr. President, this matter was discussed somewhat at length yesterday, and I then stated my reasons for desiring to have that language inserted in the Senate amendment. This language, and possibly something more, is included in the bill as it came from the House; and I can not see how the most sensitive peoples on the face of the earth could object to having that language inserted in the Senate amendment. It may be that there are numerous treaties entered into between the United States and other powers where there is some sort of an agreement as to passports that is not embodied in treaty stipulations, and my purpose in proposing this amendment is that there may be no question as to the exclusion of persons with whose government the Government of the United States has entered into any sort of a side agreement under the terms of which the immigration of certain classes of people into this country is restricted.

There seems to be some sentiment here in reference to avoiding the mention of names of other powers and other people. I do not share in that diffidence, Mr. President. It seems to me that the slogan of our people ought to be "Safety first"; and when I speak of "Safety first," I mean the protection of our own race from disintegration in any way whatsoever. But in the way I propose to amend that language, Mr. President, I do not mention any other power, but the amendment covers all or any countries with whom we may have some other agreement in addition to the treaty stipulations, where the side agreement is not involved in the language of the treaty itself.

I do hope that the amendment that I now suggest may be adopted by the Senate.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator how that amendment differs from the language that was contained in the House bill?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. If the Senator will notice, it is not quite so broad as the House provision. The House provision is:

Unless otherwise provided for by existing agreements as to passports, or by existing treaties, conventions, or agreements, or by treaties, conventions, or agreements that may hereafter be entered into.

I have eliminated all that and have simply inserted in the committee amendment the following:

Unless otherwise provided for by existing treaties and agreements as to passports.

Mr. WORKS. But the Senator has included in his amendment just what was objected to in the House bill. That was the provision that the Senate committee attempted to avoid.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I know that that was objected to, but I can not see any reason whatsoever for it.

Mr. WORKS. I do not, either; but I was only calling attention to the fact that we are coming back to the House provision.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Not quite the House provision, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. WORKS. Very nearly so, as the Senator explains; so that it only serves to show that we had better not make this amendment at all, but allow the House provision to stand.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I will say to the Senator, Mr. President, that I was perfectly satisfied with the House provision; but there seems to be great objection to it on the part of some Members of the Senate, and I feel that the protection of some parts of our country, at least, demands that this amendment be inserted here.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, will the Senator from Oregon allow me to call his attention to a fact that seems to be entirely overlooked by those who are insisting that the wording of the House bill shall be kept in this bill? I want to ask the Senator what possible additional safeguard could be thrown around this particular case by inserting that word, when it is simply calling attention to an agreement that stands on an absolutely independent footing from any wording you may put in this bill?

The Senator has said "Safety first." Those who entered into this agreement with us have kept it in good faith, and up to the present time we have also kept our part of the agreement by not officially or conventionally mentioning it. Now, unless you have a treaty that would have the binding force of law, what good purpose would you serve by mentioning it, when that very nation is objecting to your doing this thing, the doing of which could only anger them and not give you any safeguard whatever?

Suppose you should enter into a secret or private agreement with me, the understanding being that as long as I said nothing about it and you said nothing about it and I kept it and you kept it we would all keep faith. I have kept it, and you have kept it, and now I go to work and publicly and officially announce that the reason why I have kept it is because we have entered into it. The other party says, and you say: "One of the stipulations was that we were not to be put in that category publicly and officially." What good purpose would you serve by your action? What more binding effect would it have on the status that now exists between the two countries?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, the Senator goes on the assumption that we have only one gentlemen's agreement with only one other power. I do not know whether we have or not. I am assuming that there may be others.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Well, if we were to have others——

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. One of the Senators near me says we have not any other. Then, Mr. President, let us talk plainly to one another, and be perfectly honest with ourselves and with the American people about this proposition. If the Senator says we only have one, then I suppose he refers to the gentlemen's agreement with Japan.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Very good, if the Senator sees fit, but I want to call his attention to this fact: It would not make any difference if we had a dozen or if we had a hundred; if they involved good faith, surely we would keep them if not keeping them would serve no good purpose.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I have no desire, as a Member of this great body, to undertake to arouse the passions of any of the people with whom we are doing business, but my fear about this matter is that the language of the Senate amendment absolutely avoids the force and effect of the gentlemen's agreement with Japan, for instance, or with some other power, because this says "unless protected by treaty." The treaty does not protect us from the immigration of the laboring classes of the Orient at all. It simply allows them to come in here ad libitum, and the only thing that protects us is the so-called gentlemen's agreement.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President——

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Now, if we do not insert the amendment that I suggest here, then we go back to the treaty itself, and the treaty allows them to come in; and Japan or any other power between whom and us there exists this gentlemen's agreement may say: "We did have that treaty with you; we did have a treaty with a favored-nation clause in it, and we did have a side agreement in reference to the issuance of passports, but you have done away with that very thing in your new immigration law, and have said that nothing governs except the treaty itself." Now, it is because of the fear of that that I want to have this clause inserted here by way of amendment.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Oregon what is his amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SHAFROTH in the chair). Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I do.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I was not in the Chamber when the Senator from Oregon proposed his amendment. What is the amendment which the Senator proposes?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I simply propose to insert, after the word "treaties," in line 11, the words "and agreements as to passports," so that it will read:

Unless otherwise provided for by existing treaties and agreements as to passports.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I yield.

Mr. PHELAN. As a matter of information, the clause in the bill proposed as a Senate amendment which the Senator seeks to amend relates to a great many other countries, but does not relate at all to Japan nor to China, because here we have the geographical lines excluding those countries. Therefore when the Senator says, according to his amendment, "unless otherwise provided for by existing treaties and agreements as to passports," he does not refer to Japan at all. I think the Senator is laboring under that misapprehension, and in order to meet that objection I will submit another amendment as soon as this one is disposed of.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Well, it is barely possible.

Mr. PHELAN. This clause, the Senator will see, relates to a great many other Asiatic countries, and specifically excepts, by geographical exclusion, Japan and China. Therefore when the Senator inserts the words "agreements as to passports," his exception applies not to Japan or China, but to all the other countries with which we are told we have no agreements whatever. I submit that it is a harmless amendment, but if the Senator from Oregon intends to reach Japan or China he fails in his intention.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I yield.

Mr. REED. If the Senator from California is correct in his statement—and I am not sure but that he is—then the committee certainly could not object to putting in the word "agreements," because, as stated by the Senator from California, if this committee amendment is accepted there is nothing left in the bill that deals with Japan at all.

Mr. PHELAN. Nothing.

Mr. REED. The bill is an absolute blank as to Japan, because Japan lies outside of the lines which include the proscribed district.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, will the Senator from Oregon allow me to address a remark both to him and to the Senator from Missouri? We have no immigration law now affecting Japan, and Japan is observing this gentlemen's agreement. Now, if the danger that the Senator from Oregon seems to fear exists, it has existed from 1908 up to the present time without any mention of it in the law. Why should we be afraid now?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, the very language of the Senate amendment, it seems to me, makes us abandon every other agreement and everything else except the treaty that is in force.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Why, it is the evidence that we are keeping the very compact that up to now has not been broken.

Mr. WORKS and Mr. PHELAN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the senior Senator from California?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I yield, Mr. President.
